

PREFACE TO THE THIRD EDITION

IN preparing the present edition I had the unique assistance of the notes of Sir Lawrence Jenkins—the eminent and illustrious lawyer who filled the office of Chief Justice of the High Court of Bombay with great ability and distinction for well nigh ten years. The notes above referred to were prepared by Sir Lawrence Jenkins while he was on the Special Committee which met at Simla in June 1907 and modelled the Code of Civil Procedure in its present form. That the Code of 1908 is a considerable improvement upon its predecessor is beyond all question. The arrangement, though novel, is scientific. It proceeds upon the lines of the Judicature Acts and the Rules framed under those Acts. It consists of two parts—the first containing provisions of a substantive character and the second containing provisions which relate to “matters of mere machinery.” The 158 sections which form the body of the Code constitute the first part. The Rules and Orders comprised in Schedule I constitute the second part. The provisions of the Code of 1882 relating to arbitration have been transferred to a separate schedule, being Schedule II, the object being to facilitate the repeal of these provisions on the passing of a new and comprehensive Arbitration Act. Sections 321 to 325 C of the same Code, which relate to execution of decrees by Collectors, have been transferred to Schedule III. Schedule IV contains a list of enactments amended and Schedule V a list of enactments repealed by the new Code.

The arrangement of the present work is a simple one. Long familiarity with the section numbers of the Code of 1882 has rendered it necessary to give a comparative table of the sections of the old and the new Code. Such a table has accordingly been given, and to facilitate reference to it, which is likely to be constant, the table portion has been marked off by a piece of tape attached to the volume. At the same time we have given at the beginning of each section and rule of the new Code references to the corresponding sections of the Code of 1882 in thick black types enclosed in square brackets. There are, besides, a large number of rules comprised in the First Schedule which have been borrowed from the Rules made under the Judicature Acts. References to the latter rules also have been given in square brackets at the beginning of the corresponding rules of this Code, and are indicated by the letters “R.S.C.,” being an abbreviation of the words “Rules of the Supreme Court of England:” see, for instance, Order 1, rule 1, at p. 304.

There have been numerous alterations and additions introduced into the new Code, of which the following require the immediate attention of practitioners :—

THE CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE

ACT V OF 1908

RECEIVED THE ASSENT OF THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL
ON THE 21ST MARCH 1908

An Act to consolidate and amend the laws relating to the Procedure of the Courts of Civil Judicature.

WHEREAS it is expedient to consolidate and amend the laws relating to the procedure of the Courts of Civil Judicature; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Preliminary.

Short title, commencement and extent.

1. [S. 1.] (1) This Act may be cited as the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908.

(2) It shall come into force on the first day of January, 1909.

(3) This section and sections 155 to 158 extend to the whole of British India: the rest of the Code extends to the whole of British India, except the Scheduled Districts.

Interpretation of the Act.—The first Code of Civil Procedure was passed in the year 1859, and it was repealed by the Code of 1877. The Code of 1877 was repealed by the Code of 1882 which, in its turn, has been repealed by the present Code. It will be seen from the Preamble that the present Act not only defines and amends but also consolidates the law of civil procedure. The object of consolidation is to collect the statutory law bearing upon a particular subject, and to bring it down to date, in order that it may form a useful code applicable to the circumstances existing at the time when the consolidation Act is passed. When a question, therefore, arises as to the construction of a section in such an Act, the proper course is in the first instance to examine the language of the Act and to ask what is its natural meaning. If the meaning is plain it is not proper to have recourse to the previous state of the law, and the language of the Act must be interpreted uninfluenced by any considerations derived from the previous

- S. 1. state of the law. But if the meaning be doubtful, resort may be had to the previous state of the law for the purpose of aiding in the construction of the provisions of the Act (a).

The following are some of the leading rules relating to the interpretation of statutes :

1. Proceedings of the Legislature in passing an Act are to be excluded from consideration on the judicial construction of the Act (b). These proceedings include Reports of Select Committees, Statements of Objects and Reasons attached to Bills, and debates of the Legislature (c).

2. Marginal notes to the sections of an Act are not to be referred to for the purpose of construing an Act (d).

3. Illustrations in Acts of the legislature ought never to be allowed to control the plain meaning of the section to which they are appended, especially when the effect would be to curtail a right which the statute in its ordinary sense would confer (e).

4. The essence of a Code is to be exhaustive on the matters in respect of which it declares the law; in respect of such matters the Court cannot disregard or go outside the letter of the enactment according to its true construction (f). In cases, however, where there is no specific provision in a Code, the Court has the power, and, it would seem, it is its duty, to act according to justice, equity and good conscience (g). See s. 151.

5. Every statute which takes away or impairs vested rights acquired under existing law must be presumed to be intended not to have a retrospective operation. But this presumption does not apply to enactments affecting procedure or practice, such as the Code of Civil Procedure. The reason is that no person has a vested right in any course of procedure. The general principle, indeed, seems to be that alterations in the procedure are always retrospective, unless there be some good reason against it (h). The right of appeal, however, is in the nature of a vested right, and hence the provision in s. 154 of the Code declaring that nothing in this Code shall affect "any present right of appeal which shall have accrued to any party at its commencement." See also s. 97.

6. "The Code consists (i) of that which is termed 'the body of the Code' and (ii) of the rules. The body of the Code is fundamental and is unalterable except by the Legislature; the rules are concerned with details and machinery and can be more readily altered. Thus it will be found that the body of the Code creates jurisdiction while the rules indicate the mode in which it is to be exercised. It follows that the body of the Code is expressed in more general terms, and it has to be read in conjunction with the more particular provisions of the rules" (i).

British India.—The expression "British India" is not defined in the Code. In the absence of any definition of a particular expression in an Act, we are to turn to the definition of it in the General Clauses Act X of 1897. There are several terms of frequent or general occurrence in several Acts, and these are defined in the General Clauses Act. "British India" is one of them, and it is defined in that Act (s. 3, cl. 17) as meaning "all territories and places within His Majesty's dominions which are for the time being governed by His Majesty through the Governor-General of India or through any Governor or other officer subordinate to the Governor-General of India (j). The question whether a particular place is within the limits of British India is often of importance in relation to the provisions of O. 25, r. 1 [Code of 1882, s. 380]. Aden is within British India (k), but Singapore is not (l), nor the Civil Station at Wadhwan (m).

Scheduled Districts.—A list of Scheduled Districts is given in Schedule I to the Schedule Districts Act XIV of 1874. The sections of this Code, except s. 1 and ss. 155 to 158, do not extend to any of the Scheduled Districts. Section 5, however, of the Scheduled Districts Act empowers the Local Government, with the sanction of the Governor-General in Council, to extend to any of the Scheduled Districts any enactments in force in British India, and the whole of the Procedure Code has accordingly been extended to several Scheduled Districts including Sindh, Ajmere, Merwara and the Scheduled Districts of the Punjab (n).

2. [S. 2.] In this Act, unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context,— Definitions.

(1) "Code" includes rules :

See notes on p. 2, para. No. (8).

(2) "decree" means the formal expression of an adjudication which, so far as regards the Court expressing it, conclusively determines the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy in the suit and may be either preliminary or final. It shall be deemed to include the rejection of a plaint and the determination of any question within section 47 or section 144, but shall not include—

(a) any adjudication from which an appeal lies as an appeal from an order, or

(b) any order of dismissal for default.

Explanation.—A decree is preliminary when further proceedings have to be taken before the suit can be completely disposed of. It is final when such adjudication completely disposes of the suit. It may be partly preliminary and partly final :

(3) "decree-holder" means any person in whose favour a decree has been passed or an order capable of execution has been made :

S. 2. Definition of "decree" in the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882.—
 The term "decree" was defined in the Code of 1882 as follows:—

"'Decree' means the formal expression of an adjudication upon any right claimed or defence set up in a Civil Court, when such adjudication, so far as regards the Court expressing it, decides the suit or appeal. An order rejecting a plaint or directing accounts to be taken, or determining any question mentioned or referred to in section 244, but not specified in section 588, is within this definition; an order specified in section 588 is not within this definition."

Importance of the definition of decree.—The adjudications of a Court of law may be divided into two classes, namely, (1) decrees, and (2) orders. Orders again may be divided into appealable orders and non-appealable orders. The expression "order" is defined in cl. (14) of the present section as meaning "the formal expression of any decision of a Civil Court which is not a decree."

Where a decision amounts to a decree, it is invariably appealable unless it is expressly provided that no appeal shall lie from it (s. 96). Further, where an appeal is preferred from a decision which amounts to a decree and a decree is passed in appeal, an appeal will lie to the High Court from the decree passed in appeal if the case comes within the provisions of s. 100 below. This is called a second appeal. In the case, therefore, of an adjudication which amounts to a decree the law permits an appeal, and in some cases also a second appeal.

Where an adjudication amounts to an order, no appeal lies from it unless it is enumerated in the list of appealable orders given in s. 104 or in the list given in O. 43, r. 1.

We have thus seen that an appeal lies from a decree. We have also seen that an appeal lies from an order specified in s. 104 or in O. 43, r. 1. What then is the distinction between a decree and an appealable order? The distinction is this—that while in the case of an adjudication which amounts to a decree the law permits a second appeal in some cases, no second appeal is allowed at all in the case of an adjudication which amounts to an appealable order. That is to say, if an appeal is preferred from a decree and a decree is passed in appeal, an appeal will in certain cases lie from the decree passed in appeal. But if an appeal is preferred from an appealable order and an order is passed in appeal, no appeal lies at all from the order passed in appeal [s. 104, sub-section (2)]. To take an instance: A appeals from a decision of a Subordinate Judge to a District Judge. The appellate Court decides against A. A prefers a second appeal to the High Court from the decision of the District Court. If the decision of the Subordinate Judge amounts to a decree a second appeal will lie provided the case comes within s. 100. But if the decision amounts to an appealable order, no second appeal will lie.

The definition of decree is important not only for determining the right of second appeal but for determining whether an appeal lies at all in the first instance. If an adjudication is an appealable order, there is no difficulty whatever in determining whether an appeal lies from it. All that has to be done in such a case is to refer to s. 104 and to O. 43, r. 1, and to ascertain whether the order is enumerated in the lists there given. The real difficulty in determining the right of appeal arises when the adjudication from which an appeal is preferred is not an appealable order. In such a case the adjudication may be either a decree or a non-appealable order, and an appeal can lie only if the adjudication amounts to a decree. The appellant would in this class of cases endeavour to show that the adjudication appealed from is a decree, while the respondent would endeavour to show that the adjudication is merely an order. Instances of this class of cases are given in the next following paragraph.

Essential elements of a decree.—The term “decree” is defined in the Code as meaning “the formal expression of an adjudication which, so far as regards the Court expressing it, conclusively determines the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy in the suit.” The words italicized above indicate the distinguishing marks of a decree. To constitute a decision a decree, the following conditions must be present :—

I.—The decision must have been expressed in a suit.

II.—The decision must have been expressed on the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy in the suit.

III.—The decision must be one which conclusively determines those rights.

If all the elements set forth above concur in a decision, the decision is a decree; if not, it is an order, for decisions which are not decrees are orders (see definition of “order,” cl. 14, below).

Illustrations of Condition I.

1. A applies for leave to sue in formâ pauperis. The application is rejected on a finding that A is not a pauper. This decision is not a decree, for it is not a decision in a suit (o). [The application is for leave to sue, which shows clearly that there is yet no suit. Every suit is commenced by a plaint (p) and an application for leave to sue in formâ pauperis does not become a plaint until the application is granted (see O. 33 r. 8).] Similarly an order under s. 18 of the Religious Endowments Act 20 of 1863 granting or refusing leave to institute a suit for accounts of a religious endowment is not a decree and is not therefore appealable (q).

2. There are several Acts relating to special subjects, under which proceedings have to be commenced by a petition and not by a suit. Decisions on petitions under those Acts would not, therefore, be decrees. Thus a decision on a petition under the Religious Endowments Act appointing a new member to fill a vacancy in a committee of trustees of an endowment is not a decree (r).

Illustrations of Condition II.

1. In a suit by A against B an application is made by X to be added as a plaintiff to the suit on the ground that he is interested in the subject-matter of the suit. The application is rejected. The decision is not a decree, for it is not a decision on any right which X might have claimed in the suit had he been made a party-plaintiff (s).

2. A plaintiff in a suit, finding that the suit must fail by reason of some formal defect, applies for leave to withdraw from the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit (O. 23, r. 1). The leave is granted. This decision is not a decree, for it is not an adjudication determining the rights of the parties with regard to any matter in controversy in the suit. These rights still remain open for determination in a subsequent suit (t).

Note.—In all the cases cited above there was an appeal preferred from the decision. The decision not being an appealable order in any of them, it was contended on behalf

- S. 2. of the appellant that it amounted to a decree, and was therefore appealable. But it was held in all of them that the adjudication did not amount to a decree, and that it was not therefore appealable.

Points of distinction between the definition of "decree" in this Code and that in the Code of 1882.—The definition of decree as it stood in the Code of 1882 has been modified in the following two respects :—

1. Under the Code of 1882, no adjudication came within the definition of a decree unless it decided the suit. Under this Code, an adjudication which conclusively (u) determines the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy in the suit is a decree, though it does not completely dispose of the suit. But the decree in that case is called a preliminary decree as distinguished from a final decree. The present definition is wider than that in the Code of 1882 in that it includes preliminary decrees within its scope, the object being to permit an appeal from preliminary decrees. "See notes below under the head "Preliminary decree."

2. Under the Code of 1882 there was a conflict of decisions as to whether an order of dismissal for default was a decree. The present section expressly declares that an order of dismissal for default is not within the definition of decree, the object being to exclude the right of appeal from such order. See notes below under the head "Order of dismissal for default."

Two other alterations, both of a minor character, may also be noted here. They are as follows :—

(i) An adjudication directing accounts to be taken is no longer to be deemed to be a decree as under the Code of 1882; it is a decree by the very terms of the present definition, though a preliminary one. Under the Code of 1882 such an adjudication was appealable, for it was to be deemed to be a decree. Under this Code it is appealable for it is a decree. This distinction, however, is of no practical importance. See notes to s. 97 below.

(ii) The word "within" has been substituted for "mentioned or referred to in" with a view to bring within the definition of decree orders against sureties (s. 145) and orders as to court-fees in pauper suits (O. 33, r. 13), and thus providing for appeals therefrom. See notes to s. 145 and O. 33, r. 13.

It has been seen that the importance of the definition of decree rests on the fact that by reference to it the right of appeal is determined. Hence every material change made in the definition of that term must be taken to have been made for the purpose either of permitting an appeal from adjudications which were not appealable before or excluding a right of appeal from adjudications from which an appeal was permitted under the old law. It is from this standpoint that the new definition must be examined and that is what we have attempted to do above.

Preliminary decree.—A decree may be preliminary or final or it may be partly preliminary and partly final. A decree is preliminary when the adjudication, though it determines the rights of the parties with regard to the matters in controversy in the suit, does not completely dispose of the suit and further proceedings have to be taken before the suit can be completely disposed of. It is final when such adjudication completely disposes of the suit (v). As to appeals from decrees, see ss. 96 and 97.

(u) The addition of the word "conclusively" is in accordance with the decision in Lekha v. Bhauna (1896) 18 All. 101, 104.

(v) Khushi Ram v. Tula Ram (1917) P. R. no. 7, p. 25, at pp. 26-27.

S.

The question whether a decision amounts to a preliminary decree is one of considerable importance in view of the provisions of s. 97, by which it is provided that if a party aggrieved by a preliminary decree does not appeal therefrom within the period of limitation allowed for appeals, he shall be precluded from disputing its correctness in an appeal from the final decree. It was held at one time by the High Court of Bombay that a decision that a suit is not bad for misjoinder, or that it is not barred by limitation, or a decision that the Court has jurisdiction to entertain a suit, was a preliminary decree (w). But these decisions have since been overruled by a Full Bench of the same High Court (x). In the last-mentioned case it was held that a decision that the matters in dispute are not caste questions, and are not therefore outside the jurisdiction of Civil Courts, does not amount to a preliminary decree from which an appeal can lie (x). Similarly, it has been held that a decision that a matter is not res judicata, and that therefore the trial can proceed, is not a preliminary decree (y). Nor is a decision that the plaintiff is competent to maintain the suit brought by him (z). Nor is a decision that a suit is not barred by limitation (a). A finding on a preliminary issue, whether a party is or is not an agriculturist within the meaning of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, 1879, is a preliminary decree, if it necessarily involves the result that the accounts should be taken under s. 13 of that Act despite the terms of the contract to the contrary. But it is not a preliminary decree, if there are other questions yet to be determined before the party claiming relief can be held entitled to have accounts taken under that section (b). An interlocutory order that a plaint should be stamped with a higher court-fee than what it is stamped with does not amount to a preliminary decree (c).

Illustrations.

1. A sues B for cancellation of a document, and a decree is passed in the suit. This is a final decree, for the suit is completely disposed of.

2. A suit is brought by one partner against another for a dissolution of the partnership and for the taking of partnership accounts. Here the Court may pass a preliminary decree declaring the proportionate shares of the parties, and directing such accounts to be taken as it thinks fit, and, after the accounts are taken, it may pass a final decree directing payment of debts due by the partnership, the costs of the suit, and to the parties the amount found due to them on taking the accounts. See O. 20, r. 15.

3. A sues B for the recovery of possession of certain immovable property and for mesne profits. The Court may pass a decree for possession of the property, and direct inquiry as to mesne profits. Here the decree is partly final and partly preliminary. It is final so far as it directs delivery of possession to A. It is preliminary so far as it directs an inquiry as to mesne profits. After the inquiry is completed, the Court has to pass a final decree in respect of mesne profits in accordance with the result of the inquiry. See O. 20, r. 12.

Rejection of plaint.—As to an adjudication rejecting a plaint it has been expressly provided by the present clause that it shall be deemed to be a decree. Such adjudication, therefore, is appealable as a decree. An appeal, however, is not the only remedy open to a party whose plaint is rejected, for he may cure the defect for which the plaint was rejected and present a fresh plaint (O. 7, r. 13). As to the cases in which a plaint “shall” be rejected, see O. 7, r. 11.

Order returning plaint.—A plaint may be returned for amendment (O. 6, r. 17) or to be presented to the proper Court (O. 7, r. 10). In either case the decision returning the plaint is an order as distinguished from a decree. An order returning a plaint to be presented to the proper Court was appealable under the Code of 1882 [s. 588, cl. (6),] and it is also appealable under this Code [O. 43, r. 1, cl. (a)]. An order returning a plaint for amendment was appealable (of course, as an order) under the Code of 1882 [s. 588, cl. (6)]; it is no longer appealable under this Code (d).

Rejection of memorandum of appeal.—It is provided by the present section that a decision rejecting a plaint is to be deemed to be a decree. The provisions of this and other sections relating to suits apply to appeals so far as such provisions are applicable (s. 108). Hence a decision rejecting a memorandum of appeal on the ground that it is barred by limitation (e) or that it is insufficiently stamped (f), or that it was not duly presented (g), is appealable as a decree.

Order returning memorandum of appeal.—No appeal lies from an order returning a memorandum of appeal to be presented to the proper Court (h). Nor does an appeal lie from an order returning a memorandum of appeal for amendment.

Adjudications appealable as orders.—An adjudication which is appealable as an order is not a decree. See s. 104 and O. 43, r. 1.

Order of dismissal for default.—It is provided by O. 9, r. 8, that where the defendant appears and the plaintiff does not appear when the suit is called on for hearing, the Court shall make an order that the suit be dismissed. Such an order, it is enacted by the present section, is not within the definition of decree, and is not therefore appealable. Under the Code of 1882 there was a conflict of decisions as to whether the decision of a Court under the corresponding section 102 dismissing a suit for default was a decree or merely an order. It was held by the High Court of Madras that the decision was an order and not a decree and that there was no first or second appeal therefrom (i). On the other hand, it was held by the other High Courts that the decision was a decree and appealable as such (j).

S.

Again, it is provided by O. 41, r. 17, that where on the day fixed the appellant does not appear when the appeal is called on for hearing, the Court may make an order that the appeal be dismissed. Such an order, it is enacted by the present section, is not within the definition of decree, and is not therefore appealable. Under the Code of 1882 it was held by the High Courts of Bombay and Calcutta that a decision under the corresponding section 556 dismissing an appeal for default was a decree and was therefore appealable (k). In an Allahabad case it was assumed that the decision was not a decree (l).

Further, it is provided by O. 41, r. 11 (2), that if on the day fixed for the hearing of the appeal the appellant does not appear, the Court may make an order that the appeal be dismissed. Such an order, it is enacted by the present section, is not within the definition of decree, and is not therefore appealable. Under the Code of 1882 it was held by the Calcutta High Court that a decision under the corresponding s. 551 dismissing an appeal for default was a decree and was therefore appealable (m).

Lastly, we may refer to the provisions of O. 9, r. 3, by which it is provided that when neither party appears when the suit is called on for hearing the Court may make an order that the suit be dismissed. Such order, it is enacted by the present section, is not within the definition of decree, and is not therefore appealable.

(4) "district" means the local limits of the jurisdiction of a principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction (hereinafter called a "District Court"), and includes the local limits of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of a High Court:

(5) "foreign Court" means a Court situate beyond the limits of British India which has no authority in British India and is not established or continued by the Governor-General in Council:

Foreign Court.—The Privy Council is not within this definition, for though it is situate beyond the limits of British India, it is invested with judicial authority within it (n). But the High Court of Justice in England, whether it be the Chancery Division (o) or the King's Bench Division (p), is a foreign Court. As to suits on judgments of the High Court of Justice in England, see notes to s. 13, "A British Indian Court will not give effect to a foreign judgment, etc."

The Ceylon Court is a foreign Court (q).

(7) "Government Pleader" includes any officer appointed by the local Government to perform all or any of the functions expressly imposed by this Code on the Government Pleader and also any pleader acting under the directions of the Government Pleader :

(8) "Judge" means the presiding officer of a Civil Court.

No judge can act in any matter in which he has any pecuniary interest, nor where he has any interest, though not a pecuniary one, sufficient to create a real bias (r).

(9) "judgment" means the statement given by the Judge of the grounds of a decree or order :

(10) "judgment-debtor" means any person against whom a decree has been passed or an order capable of execution has been made.

(11) "legal representative" means a person who in law represents the estate of a deceased person, and includes any person who intermeddles with the estate of the deceased and where a party sues or is sued in a representative character the person on whom the estate devolves on the death of the party so suing or sued :

Legal representative.—The expression "legal representative" occurs in several places in the Code. It was variously interpreted by the High Courts as would appear from reported cases which are not easily reconcilable with one another. See the undermentioned case (s), in which almost all the earlier cases are reviewed. See also notes to s. 50, s. 52, and O. 22, r. 3.

"Where a party sues in a representative character."—A suit by a Hindu reversioner for a declaration that an alleged adoption is not valid is a suit by him in a "representative character," that is, as representing, in his reversionary right, the estate of the last male owner, and on his death such right devolves on the next reversioner so as to entitle him to be substituted as plaintiff under O. 22, r. 3 (t).

A surviving coparcener is not a "legal representative" of the deceased coparcener within the meaning of this clause (u). See notes to O. 22, r. 3, "Legal representative."

"Intermeddles with the estate."—One who intermeddles with the estate of a deceased person, even though it may be with part thereof, is a "legal representative" within the meaning of this clause and is liable to the extent of the property taken possession of by him (v).

(12) “mesne profits” of property means those profits which the person in wrongful possession of such property actually received or might with ordinary diligence have received therefrom, together with interest on such profits, but shall not include profits due to improvements made by the person in wrongful possession : s.

See notes to O. 20, r. 12.

(13) “moveable property” includes growing crops :

(14) “order” means the formal expression of any decision of a Civil Court which is not a decree :

(15) “pleader” means any person entitled to appear and plead for another in Court, and includes an advocate, a vakil and an attorney of a High Court :

“Pleader.”—The term “pleader” is here used in a much larger than its ordinary signification as a convenient term to designate all persons who are entitled to plead for another in Court. “Pleader,” in its ordinary sense, is synonymous with vakil (w).

Authority to compromise.—An attorney or solicitor is entitled in the exercise of his discretion to enter into a compromise on behalf of his client, if he does so in a bona fide manner (x). And so is counsel (y). But a pleader cannot enter into a compromise on behalf of his client without his client's express authority (z). The reason is that both counsel and solicitor have an implied authority to compromise, the former by reason of his retainer, and the latter by virtue of his position of agent in relation to his client (a).

The result is that the consent of the client is not needed for a matter which is within the ordinary authority of counsel, and if a compromise is entered into by counsel, it binds the client though his consent was not taken (b). But what if the authority of counsel has been expressly limited by the client, and counsel has consented to an order or decree in spite of the dissent of the client, or on terms differing from those which the client authorized ? In such a case, if the limitation of authority is communicated to the other side, consent by counsel outside the limits of his authority would be of no effect (c). If the limitation is not communicated to the other side, the question arises whether, having regard to the fact that the other side entered into the compromise believing that the opponent's counsel had the ordinary unlimited authority, the Court has power to interfere. It has been recently held by the House of Lords that it has, and that it is not prevented by the agreement of counsel from setting aside or refusing to enforce a compromise ; that it is a matter for the discretion of the Court, and that when, in the particular circumstances of the case, grave injustice would be done by allowing the compromise to stand, the compromise may be set aside, even although the limitation of counsel's authority was unknown to the other side (d). The authority of counsel and solicitor to compromise a suit is limited to the issues in the suit; a compromise will not therefore be binding on a client if it extends to matters outside the scope of the particular case in which the counsel or solicitor is retained (e). And since a compromise is no more than an agreement, it can be set aside at the instance of the client if it has been made by the counsel or solicitor under a misrepresentation or mistake to the same extent as any other agreement entered into under similar circumstances by the client would be (f): see Indian Contract Act, 1872, ss. 17-22. The application to set aside a consent decree should be made before the decree is sealed (g).

Power to refer to arbitration.—The law is the same as regards reference to arbitration. Counsel has an implied power to consent to a reference and so has a solicitor on the record (h). But the authority does not extend to referring the case to arbitration on terms different from those which the client has authorised (i). A pleader or vakil has no power to refer a case without the express authority of his client (j).

Authority to withdraw suit.—Counsel has an implied power to withdraw an action (k). As regards vakils or pleaders it has been held that a vakalatnama couched in general terms suffices prima facie to authorize him to apply on behalf of his client for leave to withdraw a suit, and in the absence of anything to show that the vakil had acted contrary to the client's instructions, or otherwise was guilty of misconduct in making the application, the client is bound by the act of his vakil (l).

Power to bind client by admissions.—Counsel (m), solicitors (n), and pleaders or vakils (o) have an implied authority to bind their clients by admissions of fact, provided such admissions are made during the actual progress of litigation and not in mere conversation (p). Thus an admission of liability by a vakil is sufficient to warrant a decree against his client in the suit (q). The result is that the client will be bound by the admission even though it may be erroneous. But neither counsel nor solicitor nor vakil can bind his client by an admission on a point of law. Hence if the admission be erroneous, the client is free to repudiate it (r). It may here be observed that the omission of a pleader or counsel either to argue a question of law, or his abandoning a question of law, does not disentitle the Court to go into the question (s).

Power to abandon issue.—A pleader's general powers in the conduct of a suit include the power to abandon an issue which, in his discretion, he thinks it inadvisable to press (t).

3. [S. 2.] For the purposes of this Code, the District Court is subordinate to the High Court, and every Civil Court of a grade inferior to that of a District Court and every Court of Small Causes is subordinate to the High Court and District Court.

Subordination of Courts.

Different rulings of different High Courts—Where there are different rulings of different High Courts on a particular point, a Subordinate Judge should follow the decision in law of a Bench of the High Court to which he is subordinate unless the decision of the Bench has been overruled by a decision of a Full Bench of that Court or unless it has been overruled expressly or impliedly on an appeal to His Majesty in Council, or unless the law has been altered by a subsequent Act of the Legislature (u).

4. [S. 4.] (1) In the absence of any specific provision to the contrary, nothing in this Code shall be deemed to limit or otherwise affect any special or local law now in force or any special jurisdiction or power conferred, or any special form of procedure prescribed, by or under any other law for the time being in force.

Savings.

(2) In particular and without prejudice to the generality of the proposition contained in sub-section (1), nothing in this Code shall be deemed to limit or otherwise affect any remedy which a landholder or landlord may have under any law for the time being in force for the recovery of rent of agricultural land from the produce of such land..

5. [S. 4 A.] (1) Where any Revenue Courts are governed by the provisions of this Code in those matters of procedure upon which any special enactment applicable to them is silent, the Local Government, with the previous sanction of the Governor-General in Council, may, by notification in the local official Gazette, declare that any portions of those provisions which are not expressly made applicable by this Code shall not apply to those Courts, or shall only apply to them with such modifications as the Local Government, with the sanction aforesaid, may prescribe.

(2) "Revenue Court" in sub-section (1) means a Court having jurisdiction under any local law to entertain suits or other proceedings relating to the rent, revenue or profits of land used for agricultural purposes, but does not include a Civil Court having original jurisdiction under this Code to try such suits or proceedings as being suits or proceedings of a civil nature.

6. [S. 6.] Save in so far as is otherwise expressly provided, nothing herein contained shall operate to give any Court jurisdiction over suits the amount or value of the subject matter of which exceeds the pecuniary limits (if any) of its ordinary jurisdiction.

Pecuniary jurisdiction. Pecuniary limits of jurisdiction.—See notes to s. 15 under the head "Court of lowest grade competent to try a suit."

Pecuniary jurisdiction in passing decrees.—The jurisdiction of a Munsif in Bengal, N.W.P. and Assam extends to suits of which the value does not exceed Rs. 1,000. It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that if in a suit for accounts or mesne profits instituted in a Munsif's Court, the plaintiff values the claim at Rs. 900, that is, at an amount within the pecuniary limits of that Court [see O. 7, r. 2], and the Munsif finds on the taking of accounts that Rs. 6,000 are due from the defendant to the plaintiff, the Munsif cannot pass a decree for more than Rs. 1,000, that being the limit of his pecuniary jurisdiction (w). The same view has been taken by the High Court of Bombay (x). On the other hand, it has been held by the Allahabad (y) and

A sues B for possession of land valued at Rs. 686-8-0 and for mesne profits up to the date of the suit valued approximately at Rs. 200 and for mesne profits subsequent to the date of the suit not valued at all. The suit is brought in the Court of a Munsif whose pecuniary jurisdiction is limited to Rs. 1,000. A decree is passed in the suit for the plaintiff for possession and for mesne profits. Subsequently the plaintiff applies to the Munsif for assessment of mesne profits, claiming about Rs. 60,000 for such profits. According to the Calcutta High Court, the Munsif has no jurisdiction as regards mesne profits up to the date of the suit to pass a decree for more than Rs. 313-8-0, that being the difference between Rs. 1,000 and Rs. 686-8-0 (the value of the land). As regards mesne profits subsequent to the date of the suit, the proper course for the Munsif is to direct the return of the plaint in so far as it embodies a claim for such profits to be presented to the Court of competent pecuniary jurisdiction, that is, the Court of the Subordinate Judge (b). According to the Allahabad, Madras and Patna High Courts, the Munsif can pass a decree in such a case for a sum exceeding his jurisdiction and hence no question can arise as regards the return of the plaint. See the cases cited in the preceding paragraph.

PART I.

Suits in General.

JURISDICTION OF THE COURTS AND RES JUDICATA.

9. [S. 11.] The Courts shall (subject to the provisions herein contained) have jurisdiction to try all suits of a civil nature excepting suits of which their cognizance is either expressly or impliedly barred.

Courts to try all civil suits unless barred.

Explanation.—A suit in which the right to property or to an office is contested is a suit of a civil nature, notwithstanding that such right may depend entirely on the decision of questions as to religious rites or ceremonies.

Alterations in the section.—The words “either expressly or impliedly barred” have been substituted for the words “barred by any enactment for the time being in force” which occurred in s. 11 of the Code of 1882. The latter words were held to mean expressly barred (d).

Onus.—A party seeking to oust the jurisdiction of ordinary Civil Courts must establish his right to do so (e).

Suits of a civil nature.—Suits may be divided into two classes—(1) those which are of a civil nature, and (2) those which are not of a civil nature. It is suits only of a civil nature which a civil Court has jurisdiction to entertain. A civil Court has no jurisdiction to try suits which are not of a civil nature. A suit is not of a civil nature if the principal or only question in the suit is a caste question or a question relating to religious rites or ceremonies. But when (1) a caste question or a question relating to religious rites or ceremonies is not the principal question in the suit, but is merely a subsidiary question, and (2) the principal question is of a civil nature, e.g., a question as to a right to property or to an office or to any other civil right, and (3) the principal question which is of a civil nature cannot be determined without deciding the caste question or question relating to religious rites or ceremonies, the Court will in such a case decide the caste question or the question relating to religious rites or ceremonies to enable it to decide the principal question (f). It is upon this principle that the Explanation to the section is based. We may therefore say that a suit is of a civil nature if the principal question in the suit relates to a civil right. The mere fact that the determination of such a question depends entirely on the decision of caste questions or questions as to religious rites or ceremonies does not take the suit out of the category of suits of a civil nature (see the Explanation to the section). We now proceed to consider the leading cases in which the Courts have refused to try suits on the ground either (1) that the principal question in the suit is a caste question, or (2) that it relates to religious rites or ceremonies.

(f) Lalji v. Walji (1895) 19 Bom. 507; Pragji v. Govind (1887) 11 Bom. 534.

Suits in which the principal question is a caste question are not suits of a civil nature.—A caste is any well defined native community (be it Hindu or Mahomedan) governed for certain internal purposes by its own rules and regulations (g). A caste question is one which relates to matters affecting the internal autonomy of the caste and its social relations (h).

To determine whether or not a question is a caste question, the test is—Would the cognizance of the matter in dispute by the Court be an interference with the autonomy of the caste? Would the Court be deciding the question which the caste as a self-governing body is entitled to decide for itself? If yes, the question is a caste question and no civil Court has jurisdiction to entertain it (i). Thus a caste may pass a resolution depriving a member of man-pan invitation or invitation to dinner or to munj or other ceremonies for an alleged breach of a caste rule. The excluded member has no remedy in law, for all that he has lost is a social privilege, and not a legal right, and the caste is the only tribunal to which a casteman deprived of that privilege could resort. A civil Court has no power by its decree to compel the members of a caste to invite a casteman to dinner or to any ceremony (j). Similarly a Court has no power to compel barbers belonging to a certain caste to shave a casteman or to pare his nails though the party aggrieved may allege that he would lose caste by the loss of service at the hands of the barbers (k). On the same principle a member of a caste is not entitled to any remedy in law if the other members refuse to go to his house on the occasion of a death in his family and assist him in the removal of the dead body, though they may have in so doing broken a rule of the caste. It is not for a Court of law to enforce a caste rule or resolution: it is for the caste itself that makes the rule or passes the resolution to do so (l). And so a Court will not compel a defaulting member to pay to the caste a sum of money which by a resolution of the caste every casteman is liable to pay, on the occasion of a marriage in his family (m).

Expulsion from caste.—To exclude a member of a caste from invitation to caste dinners or ceremonies is, as stated above, to deprive him of a social privilege. But to expel him from the caste is to deprive him of a legal right which forms part of his status. Hence a suit will lie for a declaration that the plaintiff is entitled to be re-admitted into the caste and also for damages for expulsion from the caste (n). But to entitle the plaintiff to a decree, it must be shown that the excommunication is wrongful, and the Court will in such cases enquire into the validity of the sentence of excommunication. Excommunication is wrongful, if a member is expelled from the caste without opportunity of explanation being offered to him (o). It is also wrongful if a member is expelled for an alleged breach of a caste rule which, as a matter of fact, he has not broken (p). In the mufassal of Bombay, however, a suit does not lie for restoration to caste, the cognizance of such a suit being expressly barred by Bombay Regulation II of 1827, s. 21 (q). But a suit is maintainable for “damages” on account of an alleged injury to the caste and character of the plaintiff arising from some illegal act or unjustifiable conduct of the other party.

Suits in which the principal question relates to religious rites or ceremonies are not suits of a civil nature.—Thus a suit will not lie to establish a right to parade bullocks on certain days (r), or to compel punjaris to adorn an idol at certain seasons (s) or to instal it in a particular temple instead of in another (t). There is no right of a civil nature involved in these cases.

Suits for vindication of a mere dignity attached to an office are not suits of a civil nature.—A claim by a Swami (arch-priest) that he is entitled to be carried on the high road of a town or village in a palanquin on ceremonial occasions will not be entertained by a civil Court (u). What is claimed by the plaintiff in such a case is a mere mark of honour appended to the office of a Swami. Civil Courts should discourage as much as possible claims of so unsubstantial and objectionable a nature and they ought not to be involved in the determination of trivial questions of dignity and privilege, although connected with an office. For the same reason a suit will not lie for a declaration that the plaintiff as gurukkal or spiritual leader is entitled to be received at a pagoda by the wardens of the pagoda with the honours and emoluments due to his rank on the occasion of the annual festival of the pagoda. “The duty of individuals to submit to and perform certain religious observances in accordance with the ritual or conventional practices of their race or sect is, in the absence of express legal recognition and provision, an imperfect obligation of a moral and not a civil nature. Of such obligations the present civil Court cannot take cognizance” (v). Following this rule, the Courts have declined to entertain claims made by holders of religious office to precedence in worship, such as a claim to be the first to worship the deity and to receive gifts of rice and cocoanuts on certain public religious ceremonies (w). They have likewise declined to decide disputes as to precedence or privilege between purely religious functionaries (x). It is important to note that the suit in each of the above cases was not to establish a right to an office, but for a declaration that the plaintiff was, by virtue of his office, entitled to certain tokens of dignity or to votive offerings. In other words, the suit was not for a claim to an office but to vindicate an alleged dignity attached to an office. A suit for an office is of a civil nature, but a suit for vindication of a mere dignity, though connected with an office, is not. But if honours be attached to an office by way of remuneration, in other words, as part of its emoluments, a civil Court can entertain a suit for such honours (y).

“Office.”—Suits in which the principal question is as to a civil or legal right are suits of a civil nature. The right to an “office” is a right of a civil nature. Therefore suits in which the principal question relates to the right to an “office” are suits of a civil nature; and they are not the less so because the right claimed may depend on the decision of caste questions or questions as to religious rites or ceremonies or even religious tenets (z). See the Explanation to the section.

Suits for secular office.—When no remuneration attaches to the office of the secretary of an Association (registered under Act 21 of 1860), a suit for a declaration that the plaintiff is the secretary of the Association and that his dismissal from the office was not justified by the rules of the Association, is not maintainable by a civil Court, especially if the Association has powers to alter its rules from time to time. The reason is that in such a case no decree which any civil Court could pass in plaintiff's favour could prevent the Association from altering its rules and then dispensing with the plaintiff's services and employing some one else (a).

Suits for religious office.—Quære whether every suit for a religious office is a suit, of a civil nature? The Explanation to the section assumes that a suit in which the right to an “office” is contested is a suit of a civil nature. Now an office may be either secular or religious in its character. We are here principally concerned with an office of a religious character, for the question as to religious rites and ceremonies contemplated by the Explanation can only arise when the right to a religious office is contested. Religious offices may be divided into two classes, namely,—

I.—Those to which fees are appurtenant as of right; such as the office of the Kazi of Bombay, or of the Joshi of a village.

II.—Those to which no fees are attached, but which entitle the holder thereof to receive such gratuities as may be paid to him; such as the office of pujaris or officiating priests in a temple, or of the Aya of a math.

Fees are to be distinguished from gratuities. When fees are attached to an office, the holder of the office is entitled on performance of the services to the stipulated or customary fees. Thus a Kazi or Joshi is entitled on performing a marriage ceremony to the marriage fee, and if the fee is not paid to him, he may enforce payment by a suit. In fact, a fee is a sum which the holder of an office is entitled to demand as payment for the execution of functions attached to the office. Besides fees paid to a Kazi or to a Joshi on the occasion of a marriage, there may be gratuities paid to him which are entirely voluntary in their character. If a person invites a Joshi for performing a marriage ceremony at his place, and pays him the fees, but no gratuity, a suit will not lie at the instance of the Joshi for payment to him of any sum by way of gratuity though it may be usual to pay gratuities on such occasions; the reason being that there is no obligation in law on the part of the person inviting a Joshi to make any payment by way of gratuity (b). The same remark applies to holders of religious offices referred to in class II above.

The question which concerns us at present is whether a suit will lie at the instance of the holder of a religious office for disturbing him in the exercise of his office? If the office is wrongfully usurped, can the person claiming to be the rightful holder of the office sue the intruder in a civil Court for a declaration that he is entitled to the office? Will a civil Court entertain such a suit? To answer these questions we must deal with the two classes of religious offices separately.

As regards religious offices of the first class, that is, offices to which fees are attached, there is no doubt that a suit will lie against an intruder for a declaration that the office is vested in the plaintiff. Such a suit is a suit of a civil nature, and it will be tried by a civil Court (c).

Turning now to religious offices of the second class, the question that faces us is, whether a suit will lie for an office to which no fees are attached? Different views have been held on this point by different Courts. It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that a suit by a person claiming to be entitled to a religious office against a usurper for a declaration of the plaintiff's right to the office is a suit of a civil nature, and will therefore be entertained by a civil Court though no emoluments are attached to the office at all. This conclusion is based upon the reasoning that a religious office, though no fees are attached to it, is an “office” within the meaning of the Explanation to this section and that the section assumes that a suit for an “office” is a suit of a civil nature. The office in that case was that of musicians who chanted holy songs in a

S. 9. satra at a certain village (d). In another case, the office was that of a shebail, and the suit was by one member of a family against another for a declaration of a hereditary right to officiate as shebail at the worship performed by votaries at the foot of a certain tree. It was held that the suit was maintainable. In this case also there were no fees attached to the office, but voluntary offerings were made by the votaries (e). It is worthy of note that in both these cases the office was one attached to a place as distinguished from an absolutely personal office.

On the other hand, it has been held by the High Court of Madras that a suit does not lie for a religious office to which no fees are attached. According to that Court, a religious office to which no fees are attached is not an "office" within the meaning of this section (f). The office in one of these cases was that of priest of Samayacharm, of which the duties were to exercise spiritual and moral supervision over a certain class of persons.

As regards Bombay decisions, if we are to reconcile them all, we must divide them into two classes, namely, (1) those in which the religious office is attached to a temple, shrine, or sacred spot, and (2) those in which the office is entirely personal in its character. And it may be safely said that a suit will lie for a religious office which is attached to a place, though no fees are appurtenant to it, such as the office of officiating priests in a temple or of Aya of a math (g). But a suit will not lie for an office to which no fees are attached, if the office be personal in its character, such as the office of Chalwady (h) (bearer on public occasions of the insignia of a caste), or the office of Guru (i). The distinction between offices that are attached to a place such as a temple or a math and offices that are in their nature personal is our own, and it must be said that none of the Bombay decisions turns expressly on any such distinction. This distinction has been devised to harmonize what would otherwise be a mass of conflicting decisions, though it must be observed that even then there remains one Bombay decision in which the office was a personal one and there were no fees attached to the office and yet it was held that a suit would lie for the office. The principal question in that case was whether a suit lies for the office of Khatib (preacher), regard being had to the fact that no fees were attached to the office, and it was held that the suit would lie. The Court said: "Had it been the intention of the legislature that such a suit should not lie, the same would have been clearly provided for" (j). But if it is a question of the intention of the legislature, it may be said that the Explanation to the section, which did not occur in the Code of 1877, appears to have been suggested directly by a passage in a judgment in a Madras case decided in 1871 (k), which was approved in a subsequent case by the Privy Council (l), and the religious office in both the cases was one to which fees were attached.

It has been held by the High Court of Allahabad that a mere right to perform Ram Lila (religious pageants), which does not carry with it any right to emoluments nor is attached to a shrine or temple or sacred spot, cannot be enforced in a Court of law (m).

The Patna High Court has held that a right to officiate at funeral ceremonies performed upon the banks of the Ganges between certain points, which did not carry any fees with it but merely gratuities, cannot be enforced in a Civil Court (n).

Suits for recovery of fees attached to an office are suits of a civil nature, but not suits for recovery of gratuities.—It is settled law that if a person usurps an office to which another person is entitled and receives the fees of the office, he is bound to account to the rightful owner for them, and the rightful owner may sue the usurper to recover the fees properly payable to him. But the case is different where the payments are merely voluntary, and a suit will not lie to recover voluntary gratuities that may have been received by the usurper (c). The reason is that where voluntary offerings are made they must be taken to have been intended for the very person who was then actually performing the ceremony, whether rightfully or wrongfully, and, further, that it is quite possible that no gratuities would have been given at all if the rightful owner officiated at the ceremony instead of the usurper (p). The same principles apply when a suit is brought by the lawful holder of an office against a member of the caste for employing the usurper for performing ceremonies which the rightful holder was entitled to perform. Thus a village priest may be entitled by hereditary right to officiate and take fees in the families of a particular caste in the village, and if a member of the caste employs an intruder in the office to perform the ceremonies, the village priest is entitled to recover from the casteman the fees which would properly be payable to him if he had been employed to perform those ceremonies (q). But a suit will not lie against a casteman for a gratuity which the party might have refused to give if he had pleased (r). If for determining the plaintiff's right to the fees claimed it becomes necessary to determine incidentally the right to perform the ceremonies, the Courts should try and decide that right (s).

The cases in which a suit by the rightful owner of a religious office against a usurper for recovery of voluntary gratuities has been held not to be maintainable must be distinguished from those where a suit is brought by a sharer in a religious office against his co-sharers for recovery of his share of the voluntary gratuities. In the latter class of cases it has been held that a suit will lie, for the basis of the claim in such cases is an agreement, express or implied, that all the sharers should have a share in the gratuities (t).

Dues paid by baggals and shopkeepers to chowdharis of barars are in the nature of voluntary payments; hence a suit will not lie to recover such dues or for a declaration of the right to recover them (u).

Suits relating to caste property.—Suppose that a caste is divided into two factions, F1 and F2, and that F1 owns certain property which stands in the names of some of its members. If these members secede from faction F1 and go over to faction F2, a suit will lie to recover property from them at the instance of faction F1 (v). Here the subject-matter of the suit is property belonging to one section of the caste, and the claim is against persons outside that section. Suppose, next, that a caste owns some property purchased out of the caste funds, and that it is subsequently divided into two factions F1 and F2. If faction F2 happens at the time of the division to be in possession of the caste property, faction F1 cannot maintain a suit against faction F2 for recovery of one half of the caste property, or its value (w). Here the subject-matter of the suit is caste property, and the claim is not against an outsider, but against another section of the caste.

As regards user of caste property, it has been laid down that a majority of a caste has the right to regulate the use of the property, and the minority is bound by the resolution of the majority, provided the resolution is not so subversive of the interests of the minority as to amount to a complete denial of their rights. Thus if the majority of a caste passes a resolution that the caste oart should not be used for feasting any Brahmans, and the minority invites Brahmans to a feast in the oart, a suit will lie to restrain the minority from using the oart in contravention of the resolution (x).

Suits for inspection of accounts of caste property.—Such a suit relates purely to a caste question, and it cannot therefore be entertained by a Civil Court (y).

Interference with temple property.—Removal or alteration of namams or religious marks in a temple, which are recognized as the badges of a particular religious denomination, amounts to an interference with property, and is a ground of action in Civil Courts (z).

Interference with right of worship.—Suits for a declaration of the right to worship or to offer prayers at a certain place are suits of a civil nature. It often happens that the members of a particular class are alone entitled to worship in the sanctuary of a temple, and to perform certain portions of the religious worship. Such a right is one of a civil nature, and it may be enforced by a suit in a civil Court (a). Similarly the right of burial is a civil right; and it has accordingly been held that an interference with the rights of the relatives of a deceased Mahomedan to recite prayers over his body before burial in front of a particular mosque, being an invasion of a civil right, may be enforced by suit (b).

Suit against Official Assignee.—A person claiming rights to property taken possession of by the Official Assignee as belonging to an insolvent and whose claim has been disallowed by the Insolvency Court may bring a regular suit to establish his rights notwithstanding that under the Insolvency Act he had a right of appeal from the order of that Court and has not availed himself of that right (c).

Suit to administer the estate of a living Hindu debtor.—Such a suit is not cognizable by a civil Court (d).

Suits expressly barred.—The section provides inter alia that suits, though of a civil nature, are not triable by civil Courts, if the cognizance of such suits is expressly barred, that is, barred by any enactment for the time being in force. Thus it is provided by the Income Tax Act, s. 39, that “no suit shall lie in any civil Court to set aside or modify any assessment made” under that Act (e). Similarly, it is provided by the Pensions Act 23 of 1871, s. 4, that except as provided by that Act, no civil Court shall entertain any suit relating to any pension or grant of money or land-revenue conferred or made by the British or any former Government (f). But the provision must be express to exclude a suit of a civil nature from the cognizance of ordinary Courts. The mere fact that an enactment provides a summary remedy in a certain case does not constitute a bar to a regular suit. We may turn for an instance to O. 21, r. 95 (Code of 1882, s. 318). That rule provides a summary remedy to which a purchaser at a sale in execution of a decree may resort to recover possession from a judgment debtor. But it does not say that no suit shall lie to recover possession. The purchaser may therefore resort to the remedy provided by that section, or he may at his option bring a regular suit (g). Further, the jurisdiction of a civil Court is not excluded unless the cognizance of the entire suit as brought is barred (h). The general rule is that statutes affecting the jurisdiction of Courts are to be construed so far as possible to avoid the effect of transferring the determination of rights and liabilities from the ordinary Courts to executive officers (i).

It has been held by the High Court of Bombay that the jurisdiction of civil Courts to try suits by superior holders to recover their dues from inferior holders is not barred by s. 85 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code [Bombay Act 5 of 1879] (j). It has been held by the same Court that s. 4 (c) of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act is not a bar to a suit in which there is a claim arising out of the alleged illegality of proceedings taken for the realization of land revenue (k).

Suits impliedly barred.—Besides suits of which the cognizance is expressly barred, there are suits which are barred by general principles of law, such as suits relating to acts of State and public policy. Thus a suit will not lie against the Secretary of State for damages for publication of a Government resolution in the Government Gazette respecting the conduct of a public servant, though it may amount to a libel. Such a publication is an act of State in respect of which no action lies (l). Similarly a suit will not lie for damages for defamatory statements made in the course of a judicial proceeding by a party or by a witness. The ground of this principle is, "that it concerns the public and the administration of justice that witnesses giving their evidence on oath in a Court of justice should not have before their eyes the fear of being harassed by suits for damages; but that the only penalty which they should incur, if they give evidence falsely, should be an indictment for perjury" (m). See notes to s. 79 below. See also notes, "Alterations in the section," p. 18 above.

Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, ss. 523-524.—A civil Court has jurisdiction to entertain a suit for the recovery from Government of the proceeds of the sale of property attached and sold under ss. 523 and 524 of the Criminal Procedure Code (n).

Political questions.—The Courts of British India may determine the title of property situated within their jurisdiction belonging to a Native Prince, though a political question is involved (o). But where the real object of the suit is to settle the right of succession to the throne, and the property right involved is only contingent, the Court should decline jurisdiction (p).

- S. 10. relief claimed, or in any Court beyond the limits of British India established or continued by the Governor-General in Council and having like jurisdiction or before His Majesty in Council.

Explanation.—The pendency of a suit in a foreign Court does not preclude the Courts in British India from trying a suit founded on the same cause of action.

Alterations in the section.—The words “proceed with the trial” have been substituted for the word “try” The words “except where a suit has been stayed under section 20,” which occurred at the commencement of the corresponding section of the Code of 1882, the words “for the same relief” which occurred after the words “previously instituted suit,” and the words “whether superior or inferior” which occurred after the words “any other Court,” have been omitted. The words “litigating under the same title” are new.

Scope and object of the section.—The present section provides that where a suit is instituted in a Court to which the Code applies, the Court shall not proceed with the trial of the suit, if—firstly, the matter in issue in the suit is also directly and substantially in issue in a previously instituted suit between the same parties ;

secondly, the previously instituted suit is pending—

- (a) in the same Court in which the subsequent suit is brought, or
- (b) in any other Court in British India (whether superior, inferior or co-ordinate), or
- (c) in any Court beyond the limits of British India established or continued by the Governor General in Council, or
- (d) before His Majesty in Council ; and thirdly, where the previously instituted suit is pending in any of the Courts mentioned in cl. (b) or cl. (c) such Court is a Court of jurisdiction competent to grant the relief claimed in the subsequent suit (g).^e

The object of the section is to prevent Courts of concurrent jurisdiction from simultaneously trying two parallel suits in respect of the same matter in issue. B, residing in Calcutta, has an agent A at Calicut employed to sell his goods there. A sues B in Calicut claiming a balance due upon an account in respect of dealings between him and B. During the pendency of the suit in the Calicut Court, B institutes a suit against A in Calcutta for an account and for damages caused by A's alleged negligence. Here the matter in issue in B's suit is directly and substantially in issue in A's suit ; further both the suits are between the same parties; therefore, if the Court at Calicut is a Court of jurisdiction competent to grant the relief claimed in B's suit, the Calcutta Court must not proceed with the trial of B's suit, and the suit in the Calicut Court, being the one instituted prior in point of time, should alone be proceeded with (r). But if A was B's agent at Pondicherry instead of at Calicut, and the suit was brought by him in the Pondicherry Court, the Calcutta Court would not be precluded from proceeding with the trial of B's suit, the Pondicherry Court being a “foreign” Court. See the Explanation to the section.

The provisions of this section apply though the relief claimed in the second suit may not be the same as that claimed in the first suit.—The corresponding section of the Code of 1882 (s. 12) contained the words “for the same relief” after the words “previously instituted suit.” Hence it was necessary to the application of the section not only that the matter in issue in the second suit should also be directly and substantially in issue in the first suit, but that the second suit must be for the same relief as that claimed in the first (s). Those words have been omitted in the present section. The effect of the omission is to render the provisions of this section applicable, even though the relief claimed in the subsequent suit may not be the same as that claimed in the first suit. What is now essential is the identity of the matter directly and substantially in issue. The identity of the relief claimed is immaterial.

It has been held by the High Court of Patna (t), following a decision of the Calcutta High Court (u), that this section does not apply to a claim relating to a period subsequent to the claim in the former suit. In the Patna case B sued the Maharaja of Dumraon for arrears of pension from 1908 to 1911. The Maharaja denied his liability to pay the pension. The suit was dismissed by the trial Court, but was decreed by the High Court. The Maharaja preferred an appeal to the King in Council. Pending the appeal A instituted another suit against the Maharaja claiming arrears of pension from 1912 to 1918. The Maharaja applied under the present section for a stay of the trial of the second suit pending the decision by the Privy Council of the first suit. It was held that the section did not apply and that the second suit should not be stayed. The ground of the decision was that in order to attract the operation of the present section it was necessary that every matter in dispute in the second suit should be directly and substantially in issue in the first suit, but that that condition was not satisfied in the case before the Court as the pension claimed in the second suit was for a period subsequent to that claimed in the first suit. This decision, it is submitted, is not correct. There were only two “matters in issue” in the first suit, namely,—

- (1) whether B was entitled to the pension;
- (2) if so, what was the annual amount of the pension?

These and only these two matters would also be in issue in the second suit. If the Privy Council found in the first suit that B was entitled to the pension and that the amount of the pension was Rs. 5,000 per annum, those findings would be sufficient to dispose of also the second suit. No doubt, the reliefs claimed in the two suits were different (the pension claimed being for different periods), and this would be a ground under the old section for refusing to stay the trial of the second suit (v). But the test under the present section is not the identity of the relief claimed, but the identity of the matter or matters in issue, and the matters in issue in both the suits were, it is submitted, the same.

Previously instituted suit.—Note that it is the pendency of the previously instituted suit that constitute a bar to the trial of the subsequent suit. The word “suit” includes “appeal.” That it includes an appeal to His Majesty in Council is clear from the very words of the section. But it does not include an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council, for the application may not be granted at all, and, if granted, the applicant may not prefer any appeal (w). It seems that it does not also include applications under s. 47 (x).

Shall not proceed with the trial.—These words clearly indicate the action to be taken by the Court under this section. The second suit is not to be dismissed as barred; it is only the trial of the suit that is not to be proceeded with. That may render the institution of the subsequent suit unnecessary in a large majority of cases; but the section is no bar to the institution of such suit. Nay, there are cases in which it is necessary for a party to institute a regular suit to establish a right claimed by him, and failure to institute the suit within the period prescribed by the law of limitation precludes the party from asserting the right in any other suit or proceeding. Suits referred to in O 21, 163 (Code of 1882, s. 283) are of this character. This section does not dispense with the necessity of instituting such suits (y).

11. [S. 13.] No Court shall try any suit or issue in which the matter directly and substantially in issue has been directly and substantially in issue in a former suit between the same parties, or between parties under whom they or any of them claim, litigating under the same title, in a Court competent to try such subsequent suit or the suit in which such issue has been subsequently raised, and has been heard and finally decided by such Court.

Res judicata.

Explanation I.—The expression “former suit” shall denote a suit which has been decided prior to the suit in question whether or not it was instituted prior thereto.

Explanation II.—For the purposes of this section, the competence of a Court shall be determined irrespective of any provisions as to a right of appeal from the decision of such Court.

Explanation III.—The matter above referred to must in the former suit have been alleged by one party and either denied or admitted, expressly or impliedly, by the other.

Explanation IV.—Any matter which might and ought to have been made ground of defence or attack in such former suit shall be deemed to have been a matter directly and substantially in issue in such suit.

Explanation V.—Any relief claimed in the plaint, which is not expressly granted by the decree, shall, for the purposes of this section, be deemed to have been refused.

Alterations in the section.—

2. Explanation II is also new. See notes under "Condition IV," p. 53 below.
3. Explanation IV to s. 13 of the Code of 1882 has been omitted. The reason of the omission is stated to be that it was liable to misconception, and that the law was well established apart from the Explanation. The words of the Explanation if literally interpreted, would relieve parties from the bar of res judicata whenever there existed a latent power of alteration: see s. 149, O. 20, r. 3, and O. 20, r. 11.
4. The words "public right" have been added into Explanation VI in view of the provisions of section 91 relating to public nuisances.

Res Judicata.—The present section deals with the doctrine of res judicata. The leading case on the subject is the Duchess of Kingston's case (z). Contrasting the present section with s. 10, it may be said that the rule in s. 10 relates to res sub judice, that is, a matter which is pending judicial inquiry; while the rule in the present section relates to res judicata, that is, a matter adjudicated upon or a matter on which judgment has been pronounced. Section 10 bars the trial of a suit in which the matter directly and substantially in issue is pending adjudication in a previous suit. The present section bars the trial of a suit or an issue in which the matter directly and substantially in issue has already been adjudicated upon in a previous suit. If A sues B for damages for breach of a contract, and the suit is decided against A, no Court will try a subsequent suit by A against B for damages for breach of the same contract. This is the doctrine of res judicata stated in its simplest form. The question of A's right to claim damages from B having been decided in the previous suit, it becomes res judicata, and it cannot therefore be retried in another suit. It would be useless and vexatious to subject B to another suit for the same cause. Moreover, public policy requires that there should be an end of litigation. The rule of res judicata may thus be put upon two grounds—the one,

- S. 11. the hardship of the individual that he should be vexed twice for the same cause, and the other, public policy, that it is in the interest of the State that there should be an end of litigation (a). Looking at the matter from the side of jurisprudence it may be said, that every suit must be sustained by a cause of action, and there is no cause of action to sustain the second suit of A, it being merged in the judgment in the first (b). For what is A's cause of action in the subsequent suit? It is that he has sustained damages by reason of failure on the part of B to perform a contract with him. But this cause of action is the same as that in the first suit, and there being a judgment pronounced upon it in that suit, it is merged in that judgment. The cause of action having merged in the judgment, it is extinct in the eye of the law, and incapable of sustaining the subsequent suit. And the doctrine of res judicata has been carried so far as to hold that the plea of res judicata will prevail even where the result of giving effect to it will be to sanction what is prohibited by statute (c).

• Conditions of Res Judicata.—It is not every matter decided in a former suit that can be pleaded as res judicata in a subsequent suit. To constitute a matter res judicata the following conditions must concur :

- I.—The matter directly and substantially in issue in the subsequent suit or issue must be the same matter which was directly and substantially in issue, either actually (Explanation III) or constructively (Explanation IV) in the former suit.
- II.—The former suit must have been a suit between the same parties or between parties under whom they or any of them claim. Explanation VI is to be read with this Condition.
- III.—The parties as aforesaid must have litigated under the same title in the former suit.
- IV.—The Court which decided the former suit must have been a Court competent to try the subsequent suit or the suit in which such issue is subsequently raised. Explanation II is to be read with this Condition.
- V.—The matter directly and substantially in issue in the subsequent suit must have been heard and finally decided by the Court in the first suit. Explanation V is to be read with this Condition.

We proceed to consider the above Conditions in order.

CONDITION I.

A.—Matter directly and substantially in issue: herein of Explanation III.

The following table sets forth the several matters which we have to consider under Condition I:—

(a) Lockyer v. Ferryman [1877] L. R. 2 A. C. 519.

(b) King v. Hoare [1844] 13 M. & W. 494, 504;
Kendal v. Hamilton [1879] L. R. 4 A. C.

(c) Chhaganul v. Bai Harkha (1909) 33 Bom. 479.

Matter in issue and herein of pro forma defendant.—It is only a matter directly and substantially in issue that can constitute res judicata. In other words, to constitute a matter res judicata, it must have been, in the first place, in issue in the former suit; and, in the next place, it must have been in issue in that suit directly and substantially. If a matter was not in issue at all in the former suit, it is clear that it could not constitute res judicata in the subsequent suit. If A sues B for damages for breach of a contract, and B denies the contract, the factum of the contract is in issue between A and B. This is an illustration of the case in which a matter is in issue between the parties to a suit. There is one class of cases in which a matter put in issue by a plaintiff in a suit can never be in issue as between him and a defendant in that suit. Those are cases in which there are two or more defendants, and there is no relief sought by the plaintiff against a particular defendant or set of defendants.* A defendant against whom no relief is claimed is called pro forma defendant; he is merely a formal party to the suit. For it must be remembered that a person may be joined as defendant in a suit, though no relief is claimed against him, if his presence before the Court is necessary to enable the Court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon the question involved in the suit [sec O. 1, r. 10 (2). Code of 1882, s. 32]. A, claiming to be entitled to possession of a certain tank as tenant of X, sues B to recover possession thereof from him. X is joined as defendant, but there is no relief claimed against him. The suit is dismissed on a finding that B, and not X, is the owner of the tank. Subsequently X sues B to recover possession of the tank. B contends that the suit ought to be dismissed, on the ground that the matter of the ownership of the tank was in issue in the former suit, and it was decided in his favour; in other words, that the suit is barred as res judicata. The suit is not barred as res judicata, for the matter of the ownership of the tank in the former suit was in issue between A and B, and not between X and B, X being merely a formal party to that suit (d).

Matter directly and substantially in issue and herein of Explanation

III.—It is not enough to constitute a matter res judicata that it was in issue in the former suit. It is further necessary that it must have been in issue directly and substantially. A matter cannot be said to have been “directly and substantially” in issue in a suit, unless it was alleged by one party and denied or admitted, either expressly or by necessary implication, by the other. It is not enough that the matter was alleged by one party (e). At the same time it is not necessary to constitute a matter “directly and substantially” in issue that a distinct issue should have been raised upon it; it is sufficient if the matter was in issue in substance (f). A, claiming as the adopted son of X, sues B to recover possession of certain property forming part of the estate of X. Here the question of adoption would not be a matter “directly and substantially” in issue, unless B either admitted or denied the adoption. For B might neither admit nor deny the adoption, and might resist A’s claim on the ground of adverse possession, or on the ground that he is entitled to the property as a devisee under the will of X. In that case, the question of adoption would not be a matter “directly and substantially” in issue.

Matter collaterally or incidentally in issue.—Every suit must involve a matter “directly and substantially” in issue. It may also involve a matter “collaterally or incidentally” in issue. To constitute a matter res judicata it is necessary that it must be in issue “directly and substantially” in the suit under trial, and that it must have been in issue also “directly and substantially,” as distinguished from “collaterally or incidentally,” in a former suit.

All matters involved in a suit may be "directly and substantially" in issue, but they cannot all be "collaterally or incidentally" in issue. A collateral or incidental issue is one that is ancillary to a direct and substantive issue; the former is an auxiliary issue, the latter the principal issue. When we speak of a matter as being "collaterally or incidentally" in issue in a suit, it is understood that there is another matter which is "directly and substantially" in issue in that suit. A matter "collaterally or incidentally" in issue is ancillary or auxiliary to a matter "directly and substantially" in issue.

Distinction between matter "directly and substantially" in issue and matter "collaterally or incidentally" in issue.—The leading case on the subject is Barrs v. Jackson (g). Every suit must involve a matter or matters in respect of which relief is claimed by the plaintiff. It may also involve a matter or matters which, though there is no relief claimed in respect of them, are brought in issue for the purpose of deciding on the matter or matters in respect of which relief is claimed.

Matter directly and substantially in issue.—Every matter in respect of which relief is claimed in a suit is necessarily a matter "directly and substantially" in issue.

Illustrations.

1. A sues B for the rent due for the year 1907. The defence is that no rent is due. Here the claim for rent is the matter in respect of which relief is claimed. This therefore is a matter "directly and substantially" in issue.

2. A sues B (1) for a declaration of title to certain lands, and (2) for the rent of those lands. B denies A's title to the lands, and contends that no rent is due. Here there are two matters in respect of which relief is claimed, namely, (1) the matter of title, and (2) the claim for rent. Both these are matters "directly and substantially" in issue.

Matter collaterally or incidentally in issue.—A matter is in respect of which no relief is claimed, but which is put in issue for the purpose of enabling the Court to adjudicate upon a matter in respect of which relief is claimed, may be either "directly and substantially" in issue or it may be in issue "collaterally or incidentally." It will be a matter "directly and substantially" in issue, if the parties to the suit and the Court have dealt with the matter as if there was a relief claimed in respect of that matter also; that is to say, though the matter was, in the first instance, brought in issue as auxiliary or incidental to the matter in respect of which relief is claimed, it is dealt with and decided as if it formed a direct and principal issue in the suit. If the matter has not been dealt with by the parties to the suit and the Court in that way, it will be a matter "collaterally or incidentally" in issue.

Examination of pleadings and judgment.—Whether a matter has been dealt with in manner aforesaid is to be determined by a reference to the plaint, the written statement, the issues, and the judgment. The decree may also be referred to, but it is not enough to refer to the decree without the judgment, for a decree states merely how a suit is disposed of, and it is in the judgment that the findings on the issues are recorded (h). The judgment is admissible under s. 40 of the Evidence Act. See O. 20, rr. 5 and 6 (Code of 1882, ss. 204 and 206).

"In Sheoparsan v. Ramnandan (i), the Judicial Committee, referring to the rule of res judicata, observed that "the application of the rule by the Courts in India should be influenced by no technical considerations of form, but by matter of substance within the limits allowed by law."

The above topic considered with reference to reported decisions.—

We now turn to cases in which the distinction between a matter "directly and substantially" in issue and a matter "collaterally or incidentally" in issue arises most frequently. Those cases may be divided into the following three classes :—

A.—Where the first suit is for rent, and the subsequent suit is for title.

B.—Where both suits are for rent or other recurring liability.

C.—Where both suits relate to the rate of rent or the area for which rent is payable.

We shall deal with these three classes of cases in order.

A. First suit for rent, subsequent suit for title.—In this class of cases it is clear that the subsequent suit being one for title, the question of title is a matter "directly and substantially" in issue in that suit. Whichever party therefore raises the plea of res judicata must show that the question of title was also "directly and substantially" in issue in the former suit, that is, in the previously decided suit. If the question of title has been in issue in its entirety in the former suit, it will be said to have been "directly and substantially" in issue in that suit. But if the issue in the former suit does not cover the entire question of title, in other words, if it falls short of going to the very root of the title, and is confined only to some of the incidents of title, the question of title will be said to have been "collaterally or incidentally" in issue in the former suit (j).

Illustrations.

(a) A, claiming to be the chela and heir of a deceased mohunt, sues B (a tenant) for the rent of certain lands forming part of the estate of the mohunt. C claims that he, and not A, is the chela and heir of the deceased, and that he is therefore entitled to the rent. C is thereupon added as a defendant to the suit (see O. 1, r. 10, Code of 1882, s. 32). The issues raised are—

1. Whether A or C is the chela and heir of the mohunt?
2. Whether any and what rent is due by B?

The Court finds that A is the chela and heir of the mohunt. It also finds that there is a sum of Rs. 2,500 due by B for rent and it decrees A's claim.

Subsequently C sues A for a declaration that he is the chela and heir of the mohunt and claims that he is as such entitled to the whole of the property left by the mohunt. A contends that the question as to who is the chela and heir of the deceased is res judicata. The question is res judicata, and the suit ought to be dismissed, for though the former suit was for rent, the entire question of title to the property of the deceased was directly and substantially in issue in that suit and it was decided against C: Toponidhee v. Sreeputty (1880) 5 Cal. 832.

Note.—In this and the following illustration it is assumed that the other conditions of res judicata are present.

S. 11.

(b) A, a Hindu dies leaving a widow and a brother, C. The widow sues B (a tenant) for the rent of certain property alleging that it was the separate property of her deceased husband. C claims to be entitled to the rent on the ground that it was the joint property of himself and his deceased brother and that he became entitled to it by survivorship. C is thereupon added as a defendant to the suit. The issues are—

1. Whether the deceased alone received the whole rent of the property in his lifetime, or whether the rent was received by him jointly with C?
2. Whether any and what rent is due by B?

The Court finds on the first issue that the deceased alone received the whole rent in his lifetime. (The finding on the second issue is unnecessary for our present purposes).

Subsequently C sues the widow for a declaration that he and his brother were joint, and claims the said property by right of survivorship. The question whether the deceased and C were joint or separate is not res judicata, for it was not “directly and substantially” in issue in the former suit. It was in issue in that suit only “collaterally or incidentally,” for it will be seen on referring to the first issue in that suit that it did not cover the entire question of C’s title, but related merely to the joint or separate receipt of rent: Run Bahadur v. Lucho Koer (1885) 11 Cal. 301, 12 I. A. 23; Srihari v. Khatisk Chandara (1897) 24 Cal. 569.

B. Both suits for rent or other recurring liability.—The same principles that apply to the preceding class of cases also apply here. Thus where A sues B for rent due for a particular period, and the defence is that A has no title to the land of which the rent is claimed, then, if a direct issue is raised and decided on the question of title the decision will operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit by A against B for the rent for a subsequent period either of the same (k) or other (l) property held under the same title. But if there is no direct issue raised on the question of title, and the finding falls short of going to the very root of the title upon which the claim for rent is based, it will not have the effect of res judicata. If the question of title is gone into in the previous suit, not as if the right of rent were sought to be established for one particular year but once for all, it will be said to have been directly and substantially in issue. But if the question of title is gone into in the previous suit not as if the right of rent were sought to be established once for all, but for one particular year, it will be said to have been in issue collaterally or incidentally. These principles also apply in the case of other recurring liability, such as malikana (m), maintenance (n), interest (o), annuity (p), &c.

Illustration.

A sues B for rent due for the year 1903. The defence is that the land is rent-free. An issue is raised, “whether the land is rent-free.” The Court finds that the land is rent-free, and A’s suit is dismissed. Subsequently A sues B, claiming rent for the year 1904. B again sets up the same defence, namely, that the land is rent-free. Here the question of A’s right to recover the rent having been “directly and substantially” in issue in the previous suit the suit for the rent for 1904 is barred as res judicata: Rakhal Doss v. Heera (1874) 22 W. R. 282; Venkatachalapati v. Krishna (1890) 13 Mad. 287; Vishnu v. Ramling (1902) 26 Bom. 25; Natesa v. Venkatarama (1907) 30 Mad. 510; Dwarka Das v. Akhay Singh (1908) 30 All. 470.

(k) Nobo v. Foyzbux (1876) 1 Cal. 202.

(l) Chand Prasad v. Mahendra (1902) 24 All. 112.

(m) Balkishan v. Kishan Lal (1880) 11 All. 148.

(o) Pahlwan v. Risal (1882) 4 All. 55.

(p) Dwarka Das v. Akhay Singh (1908) 30 All. 470.

It may here be observed that each year's rent is in itself a separate and entire cause of action, and where a suit is brought for the rent due for a particular year, a judgment obtained in that suit, whatever the defence might be, would seem only to extend to the subject-matter of the suit and hence the landlord is at liberty to bring another suit for the next year's rent and the tenant is at liberty to set up to that suit any defence he thinks proper. The above proposition, however, is subject to this, and here comes in the doctrine of res judicata, that neither party is at liberty to re open in the suit for rent for the next year any question that was substantially and necessarily tried and determined between them in the suit for rent for the previous year (q). For the essence of the doctrine of res judicata is that where a material issue has been tried and determined between the same parties in a proper suit and in a competent Court as to the status of one of them in relation to the other or as to a right or title claimed by either of them against the other, it cannot again be tried in another suit between them (r).

As regards maintenance, it is to be noted that a decree for maintenance at a particular rate is no bar to a subsequent suit for maintenance at an enhanced rate on the ground of altered circumstances; for the rate of maintenance is a variable quantity changing from time to time according to the circumstances of the parties affected by the decree (s).

C.—Rate of rent or area for which rent is payable.—In this class of cases also both the suits are for rent, the first suit being for rent for a particular period, and the second for rent for a subsequent period. The matter which is pleaded as res judicata is not the plaintiff's title to the land of which the rent is claimed, but the rate of rent or the area for which rent is payable. If the Court in the first suit tries and determines the issue, "what is the proper rate of rent," or "what is the proper area for which rent is payable," it is clear that the issue relating from its very form not to the rent for a particular period but to the rent payable for the full term of the lease, the question of the rate or of the area as the case may be will be res judicata in all subsequent suits for rent for the remaining period of the lease (t).

Ex parte decree.—In the case of a suit in which a decree is passed ex parte [see O. 9, r. 6, Code of 1882 s. 100] the only matter that can be "directly and substantially" in issue is the matter in respect of which relief has been claimed by the plaintiff in the plaint. A matter in respect of which no relief is claimed can never be "directly and substantially" in issue in a suit in which a decree is passed ex parte, though the Court may have gone out of its way and declared the plaintiff to be entitled to relief in respect of such matter.

A sues B to recover Rs. 500, being the rent due for the year 1906 at the rate of Rs. 2 per square yard. A does not pray for a declaration in the suit that the rate of rent is Rs. 2 per square yard. B does not appear, and a decree ex parte is passed against him for Rs. 500. Subsequently A sues B for rent due for the year 1907 also at the same rate. B appears at the hearing, and contends that the rate is Re. 1 per square yard. B is not precluded from raising that contention, for the question of rate cannot be said to have been "directly and substantially" in issue between A and B in the former suit. It cannot therefore be res judicata. Even if the Court in the former suit had declared that

- S. 11. A was entitled to rent at the rate of Rs. 2 per square yard, the question of rate would not be res judicata, for A had not asked for a declaration in that suit in respect of the rate of rent. A's claim in the former suit was merely for the arrears of rent, Rs. 500, and the decree in that suit has no greater effect than evidence that Rs. 500 was due when the decree was passed. Had A in the former suit also prayed for a declaration in respect of the rate of rent as part of the substantive relief, and had the Court then declared that the rate of rent was Rs. 2, the question of rate would have been res judicata though the decree was passed ex parte, for it would then have been a matter "directly and substantially" in issue, every matter in respect of which relief is claimed in a suit being a matter "directly and substantially" in issue: Modhusudan v. Brae (1889) 16 Cal. 300. See ill. (2) cited under Rule II on p. 42 below.

Decree for injunction and res judicata.—A sues B for an injunction restraining B from doing certain acts. The injunction is granted. B repeats the acts complained of in the suit. A again sues B for an injunction. The suit is barred as res judicata for the relief claimed is covered by the injunction granted in the former suit, and A's remedy is to proceed against B for contempt of the Court's order in that suit: Ram Saran v. Chatar Singh (1901) 23 All. 465. See notes to s. 50 below.

Decree for restitution of conjugal rights and res judicata.—A sues B, his wife, for restitution of conjugal rights. Restitution is granted, and B goes and lives with A (that is to say, the decree is satisfied). B again leaves A, and A again sues B for the same relief. The suit is not barred as res judicata: Keshavlal v. Parvati (1894) 18 Bom. 327. [The distinction between this and the preceding case is this, that while in the suit for injunction the defendant is for ever restrained from doing the acts complained of, the wife cannot be directed in a suit for restitution of conjugal rights to live with her husband for the rest of her life; for many things may occur entitling her to leave him, for example, gross cruelty.]

Decree conditional on payment of money.—A decree in a former suit for possession of property conditional on the payment of a sum of money to the defendant is no bar to a subsequent suit for possession after the expiration of the period within which he might have obtained possession by execution of the decree (u).

It is the matter directly and substantially in issue in a suit, and not the subject-matter thereof, that forms the test of res judicata.—Hence it follows that though the subject-matter of the second suit may be entirely different from the subject-matter of the first, yet if a matter which is directly and substantially in issue in the subsequent suit was also directly and substantially in issue in the previous suit, the decision on the matter so in issue in the previous suit will operate as res judicata so as to bar the trial of that matter in the subsequent suit. Thus if A claims certain property as the adopted son of X, and the defendant denies the adoption, a finding in A's favour on the issue as to adoption will be binding on the defendant as res judicata in a subsequent suit by A against the same defendant to recover another property claimed under the same title (v). It is not open to the defendant to contend that the proerties claimed in the two suits being different, the decision on the question of A's adoption in the first suit cannot operate as res judicata in the second. Similarly, in the illustration cited under class B of rent-suits (p. 34 ante) it is no answer to the plea of res judicata that the subject matters of the two suits are different. The reason is that the matter directly and substantially in issue in both the suits is the same, namely, whether the particular land of which the rent is claimed is rent-free, and the decision therefore on that issue in the first suit operates as res judicata in the subsequent suit. But the decision cannot apply to other lands held by B under A, unless they form part of the same tenure (w).

From the same fundamental principle that the matter directly and substantially in issue, and not the subject-matter, constitutes the test of res judicata, it also follows that where a matter directly and substantially in issue in a suit is not the same as that in a previously decided suit, the trial of that matter will not be barred as res judicata, though the subject-matter of the two suits may be the same (x).

Where both the matter directly and substantially in issue and the subject-matter are the same in both the suits, the matter in issue will be res judicata, not because of the identity of the subject-matter, but because of the identity of the matter directly and substantially in issue (y). And where the matter directly and substantially in issue and the subject-matter are both different in the two suits, the matter in issue will not be res judicata, not because the subject-matters are different, but because the matters directly and substantially in issue in the two suits are different (z). A Mahomedan dies leaving a widow and other heirs. After his death some of his heirs sue the widow for the recovery of their share. The widow's defence is that her dower debt is not paid and she is entitled to remain in possession until the debt is paid. The widow's claim is decreed on payment by the plaintiffs to her of Rs. 3,900, the proportionate amount of dower payable by them. The sum adjudged to be due is not paid, and the suit is in consequence dismissed. This does not bar a subsequent suit by the same heirs for the recovery of their share on payment to the widow of the amount that might then be found payable to her for her dower. The decree in the first suit operates as res judicata only as regards the amount of dower, the rate of interest, and the sum payable by the plaintiffs before obtaining possession up to the date of the decree. But it does not operate as res judicata on the question of the plaintiffs' right to inherit the property of the deceased. The decree in the first suit did not by the dismissal of the suit extinguish the plaintiffs' right to inherit the estate of the deceased (a).

Former suit : Explanation I.—We have said above that a decision in a former suit may operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit. What is the meaning of "former suit"? Does it refer to the suit that has been first instituted or to the suit that has been first decided? The answer is that it refers to the suit that has been first decided; in other words, "former suit" means a previously decided suit. The result therefore is that if suit No. 2 is instituted after the date of the institution of suit No. 1, and suit No. 2 is decided first, the decision in suit No. 2 may operate as res judicata in suit No. 1 (b). The same rule applies to appeals (c). Explanation I, which is new, does no more than give effect to these decisions.

A sues B for possession of certain premises alleged to have been let to B as a monthly tenant. B sues A for a declaration that he holds the premises under a lease from A of which two years are yet to expire. Both the suits are heard together, and only one judgment is delivered in both, the finding of the Court being that B held the premises not under a lease as alleged by him, but as a monthly tenant. A decree is passed in A's suit directing B to deliver up possession, and a separate decree is passed in B's suit dismissing the suit with costs. B does not appeal from the decree passed against him in A's suit, but prefers an appeal from the decree passed against him in his own suit. A contends that the appeal is barred as res judicata, stating as a reason that no appeal having been preferred by B within the period allowed by law from the decision in his (A's) suit that B held the premises as a monthly tenant, the decision became final, and that decision having been given in a "former suit," the matter could not be re-tried in the appeal from the decision in B's suit. Does the decree passed in A's suit operate as res judicata so as to preclude the appellate Court from hearing the appeal preferred by B from the decree passed in his (B's) suit? No, according to the Calcutta and Madras High Courts, the reason given being that there being but one judgment in both the suits, neither suit can be said to be a "former suit" in relation to the other (d). Yes, according to recent rulings of the Allahabad High Court, the reason given being that if the appeal were heard and the appellate Court reversed the decree of the lower Court, there would be two inconsistent decrees on the files of the Court, the one in A's suit in A's favour, and the other in B's suit in B's favour, in respect of the same matter in issue, and this would cause a complete impasse in execution proceedings. The result is that according to the Allahabad High Court B must prefer an appeal from each decree if he wishes to avoid the bar of res judicata (e).

Suit.—"There is no definition of the word 'suit,' probably because it is not possible to frame one which will satisfactorily survive every test. But on the other hand it is not difficult to decide in the vast majority of cases whether a proceeding is in fact a suit or whether it is merely a summary or subsidiary application" (f). In the case of Venkatachandrappa v. Venkatarama (g), where the proceeding was held not to have been a suit, it was said, "suit is a very comprehensive term. It includes any proceeding in a court of justice by which a party pursues the remedy which the law gives him. If a right is litigated between parties in a court of justice, the proceeding by which the decision of the Court is sought is a suit."

The matter of which the trial is barred under this section must have been heard and decided in a former suit. Proceedings under the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, differ considerably from a regular suit; therefore, a decision of the Court under that Act with respect to the apportionment of compensation awarded in respect of property acquired under the Act does not operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit relating to the question of title to other properties, though held under the same title (h). But a proceeding under s. 22 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1907, for a declaration of title and for possession of property attached by the Insolvency Court as being property of the insolvent is a 'suit', and the decision in such proceeding is a bar to a subsequent suit by the applicant in a civil Court for the same relief (i).

B.—Explanation IV : Matter directly and substantially in issue “constructively.”

Matter which might and ought to have been made ground of attack or defence.—A matter directly and substantially in issue may be either “actually” in issue or it may be in issue “constructively.” In all the cases cited above, where a matter was held to have been in issue directly and substantially, it was “actually” in issue directly and substantially, for it was actually alleged by one party and denied by the other. It often happens that a matter which might and ought to have been made ground of attack by the plaintiff to substantiate the relief claimed by him in the suit is not alleged by him as a ground of attack; and also that a matter which might and ought to have been made ground of defence by the defendant is not set up as a ground of defence. A matter which might and ought to have been made ground of attack or defence in the former suit, but which has not been alleged as a ground of attack or defence, will be deemed to have been a matter directly and substantially in issue in such suit (Explanation IV). That is to say, though it has not been actually in issue directly and substantially, it will be regarded as having been constructively in issue directly and substantially. This section draws no distinction between the claim that was actually made in a suit, and the claim that might and ought to have been made. Where a matter has been actually in issue, it is necessary, to constitute res judicata, that it should have been heard and finally decided. But where a matter has been constructively in issue, it could not, from the very nature of the case, be heard and decided; and it will be deemed to have been heard and decided against the party omitting to allege it. This is in accordance with the view of the section taken by the High Courts of Allahabad and Bombay (j). On the other hand it has been held by the Calcutta High Court that though a matter, which might and ought to have been made ground of attack or defence should be deemed as provided by Explanation IV, to have been directly and substantially in issue, yet it could not be deemed to have been “heard and finally decided,” as there was nothing in Explanation IV to suggest that such matter should also be deemed to have been heard and finally decided (k). The view thus expressed does not seem to be sound law. It attaches greater importance to form than to substance. Its correctness was doubted in a later decision of the same Court (l), and the Chief Court of the Punjab has expressly dissented from it (m).

1. X, a Hindu, dies leaving a widow. The widow makes a gift of certain property belonging to her husband to her brother, B. After the death of the widow, A, alleging that he and X were members of a joint family sues B for a declaration that he is entitled to the property by right of survivorship. The Court finds that A and X were separate, and A's suit is dismissed. Subsequently A sues B for the recovery of the same property, alleging that as the nearest reversionary heir of X, he became entitled to the property on the death of the widow, and that the alienation made by her in favour of B was not binding upon him. The suit is barred as res judicata. A might and ought to have set up the title by heirship as a ground of attack in the former suit. It will therefore be deemed to have been “directly and substantially in issue” in that suit, and it will also be deemed to have been “heard and finally decided” against A : Guddapa v.

2. A, a Hindu, dies leaving a widow and a brother, B. The widow sues B for recovery of certain property, alleging that it was the self-acquired property of her husband, and that a will alleged to have been executed by her husband and relied on by B is a forgery. B alleges that the property was joint family property, and that on the death of A he became entitled thereto by right of survivorship, but he does not claim any title to the property under the will. The Court finds that the property was the self-acquired property of A, and decrees the widow's claim. Subsequently B sues the widow to recover the same property from her, now claiming the same as a devisee under A's will. The suit is barred as res judicata. B might and ought to have set up the claim under the will as a ground of defence in the former suit. "When a plaintiff claims an estate, and defendant, being in possession, resists that claim, he is bound to resist it upon all the grounds that it is possible for him according to his knowledge then to bring forward": Srimut Rajah v. Katama Natchiar (1866) 11 M. I. A. 50; Doorga Persad v. Doorga Konwari (1879) 4 Cal. 190, 5 I. A. 149.

3. A sues B to recover certain property belonging to the estate of C, alleging that his father had been adopted by C's brother, D, to whom the property descended on C's death. The suit is dismissed on the ground that the adoption is not proved. A then sues B to recover the same property claiming it as C's bandhu. The suit is barred as res judicata. A ought to have in the first suit claimed the property in the alternative as C's bandhu: Masilamani v. Thiruvengadam (1908) 31 Mad. 385.

Test.—The question whether a matter might have been made a ground of attack or defence in the former suit rarely presents any difficulty. Whether it ought to have been made a ground of attack or defence depends on the particular facts of each case. As a general rule we may say that if a matter could have been set up as a ground of attack or defence in the former suit, and if its introduction into that suit was necessary for a complete and final decision of the right claimed by the plaintiff therein, it will be deemed to be a matter which ought to have been made a ground of attack or defence in that suit, unless the matters in that and the subsequent suit are so dissimilar that their union might lead to confusion (n). Thus in ill. (1) above the title by heirship could have been made a ground of attack in the alternative in the first suit; it was not forbidden by any rule of pleading; moreover, it was necessary for the complete and final disposal of all questions as to A's right to the property. Further, the question in both suits being the same, namely, whether A was entitled to the property or B, the title by survivorship and the title by heirship could not be said to be so dissimilar that their union might lead to confusion. It may appear at first sight that the two matters are dissimilar, for the title by survivorship and the title by heirship have to be supported by different evidence. But the test of evidence which was brought to the front in some old decisions (o) is not a satisfactory one, and though it was advanced in argument in two cases before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, it was not even so much as noticed in the judgments in those cases (p). The reason is obvious, for when a plaintiff sets up alternative grounds of attack, or when a defendant sets up alternative grounds of defence, the evidence in support of such alternative grounds must in the majority of cases, be different. But where the evidence in support of one ground is such as might be destructive of the other ground, the two grounds, it has been said, need not be set up in the same suit. The reason given is that the test of determining whether both the grounds ought to have been set up in the same suit is afforded by the provisions of O. 2, r. 1, and the provisions of that rule as to the framing of suits are only to be applied "as far as practicable" (q).

It is clear that it cannot be said of any matter that it ought to have been set up as a ground of attack in a former suit, if its introduction would have been incongruous to the matter of that suit (r). See Rule IV below.

The decisions bearing on this branch of the subject are numerous and at first sight conflicting. A careful examination of these decisions leads to the following four Rules.

Rule I.—Where the right claimed in both suits is the same, the subsequent suit will be barred as res judicata, though the right in the subsequent suit may be sought to be established by a title different from that in the first suit.

Exception.—The dismissal of a plaintiff's suit for the recovery of land based on an alleged lease is no bar to a subsequent suit for the recovery of the same land on the strength of his general title.

[In this and the following rules when it is said that the subsequent suit is barred as res judicata, it is understood that it is barred by virtue of Explanation IV, and that the other conditions of res judicata are present.]

2. A Hindu, H, dies leaving a widow W, and a son-in-law, S, being the husband of a predeceased daughter, D. W sues S, as the heir of her husband H, to recover certain property, alleging that it forms part of the estate of H. The defence is that H had made a gift of the property to his daughter, D, and that on D's death, S as D's husband, became entitled to the property as D's heir. W alleges that the deed of gift relied upon by S is a forgery. The Court finds that the deed of gift is genuine, and the suit is dismissed. W then sues S to recover the same property, alleging that it being found that the property belonged to D, she is entitled to the property as the heir of her daughter, D. The suit is barred as res judicata. Here the right claimed in both the suits is the same, namely the right to the property in question. In the first suit, it was claimed by W as her husband's heir. In the second suit it is sought to be established by her by a different title, namely, as her daughter's heir. W "might and ought" to have claimed in the alternative as her daughter's heir in the former suit. Having failed to do so, her title, as her daughter's heir, will be deemed to have been "directly and substantially" in issue in the former suit, and it will also be deemed to have been heard and finally decided against her in that suit: Denobundhoo v. Kristomonee Dossee (1877) 2 Cal 152, dissented from in Ummatha v. Cheria (1882) 4 Mad. 308. The Madras case falls within the Exception rather than the Rule.

3. A lends Rs. 50,000 to a Hindu widow on a mortgage of her husband's property. The widow then surrenders the property to B, the reversionary heir of her husband, on B agreeing to pay all her debts. A sues B and the widow to recover Rs. 50,000 by sale of the mortgaged property. A also asks for a personal decree against the widow, but he does not ask for a personal decree against B. B is joined as a defendant on the ground that the mortgaged property formed part of the property transferred by the widow to him. The Court finds that the mortgage is not binding upon the husband's estate, and the suit against B is accordingly dismissed. As against the widow, a personal decree is passed for the amount of the loan. A realises Rs. 5,000 only from the widow, and after her death, he sues B for the balance of the money due under the decree (that is to say, A asks for a personal decree against B for the balance), alleging that B was personally liable under the agreement with the widow to pay her debts. The suit is barred as res judicata, for A "might and ought" to have alleged in the former suit that if the mortgage was not binding on the estate, B was at all events personally liable to pay the debt in consequence of the agreement which he (B) had entered into with the widow: Kameswar Pershad v. Rajkumari (1893) 20 Cal. 79, 19 I. A. 234.

Note.—Suppose that in the above illustration, A had applied in the first suit for amendment of the plaint by adding a claim for relief against B personally, but the application was refused. In such a case it has been held that the subsequent suit would not be barred: Alagirisami v. Sundareswara (1898) 21 Mad. 278; Thakore v. Thakore (1890) 14 Bom. 31.

For other cases under this Rule, see foot-note (s).

Illustration of the Exception to the Rule.

A sues B to recover certain land from him, alleging that B held the land under a lease, and that the lease had expired. The lease is not proved, and the suit is dismissed. Subsequently A sues B to recover the same land on the strength of his title. The is not barred as res judicata: Zamorin of Calicut v. Narayanan (1899) 22 Mad. 323; Kutti Ali v. Chindan (1900) 23 Mad. 629; Kandunni v. Katiamma (1886) 9 Mad. 251; Ummatha v. Cheiria (1882) 4 Mad. 308; Girdhar v. Dayabhai (1884) 8 Bom. 174.

Rule II.—If a matter which forms a ground of attack in the subsequent suit could have been alleged as a ground of defence in the former suit, but was omitted to be so alleged in that suit, it will be deemed to have been directly and substantially in issue in that suit within the meaning of Explanation IV.

This rule contemplates cases in which the plaintiff in the subsequent suit was defendant in the former suit.

moiety of the garden. B then sues C to recover possession of the moiety sold by A's widow to C, alleging that the sale was made by the widow without legal necessity, and that on the death of the widow, he became entitled to the moiety as the reversionary heir of A. The suit is barred as res judicata. B "might and ought" to have raised the question of the validity of the sale as a ground of defence in the former suit: Shyama Charan v. Mrinmayi Debi (1904) 31 Cal. 79.

3. A mortgagee, who holds the mortgaged property also as lessee from the mortgagor, sues the mortgagor to recover Rs. 3,000, being the amount of the mortgage-debt. At the date of the suit the mortgagee owes Rs. 4,000 to the mortgagor for rent under the lease, and this sum the mortgagor claims to set off against the mortgage-debt under an express agreement in that behalf. The agreement is not proved, and a decree is passed against the mortgagor for Rs. 3,000. The property is sold in execution of the decree, and it is purchased by the mortgagee with the leave of the Court. The mortgagor then sues the mortgagee to have the sale set aside, and for a declaration that the mortgage-debt is extinguished, now claiming that a general account may be taken as between him and the mortgagee, and that in taking such account the rent due to him may be set off against the mortgage-debt. The suit is barred, for the mortgagor "might and ought" to have set up that claim in the alternative in the former suit: Mahabir Pershad v. Macnaghten (1889) 16 Cal. 682, 16 I. A. 107.

4. A, who owns a share in a village, mortgages it to B, and sells it subsequently to C. C sues B for redemption of the mortgage, and obtains a decree. Subsequently B sues C for pre-emption of the share sold by A to C, alleging that he is a co-sharer in the village and entitled as such to a right of pre-emption. The suit is not barred. The right of pre-emption not being a "vested and ascertained" right when B filed his written statement in the former suit, it could not have been properly pleaded by B as an answer to the claim for redemption in that suit: Ram Chand v. Durga Prasad (1904) 26 All. 61.

For other cases under this rule, see foot-note (t).

Rule III.—Where the right claimed in the subsequent suit is different from that in the former suit, and it is claimed under a different title, the subsequent suit is not barred as res judicata.

Illustrations.

1. A sues B for possession of certain lands alleged to have come to his share on a partition of joint family property with B. The defence is that the family property has not yet been divided, and the suit is dismissed on a finding to that effect. A subsequent suit by A against B for partition of the family property is not barred: Shivram v. Narayan (1881) 5 Bom. 27; Konerrav v. Gurrav (1881) 5 Bom. 589; Nilo v. Govind (1886) 10 Bom. 24; contra, Bheeka v. Bhuggoo (1878) 3 Cal. 23.

2. A, alleging that B held certain lands from him under a lease and that the lease had expired, sues B to recover Rs. 500 for use and occupation of the land. The defence is that the lease is a subsisting lease, and the suit is dismissed on a finding to that effect. A subsequent suit by A to recover Rs. 500 as rent payable under the lease is not barred: Watson v. Dhonendra (1878) 3 Cal. 6.

3. A suit by A against B in 1869 to recover a talukdari estate is dismissed on a finding that the estate had become the absolute property of B under a conditional sale made by A to B in 1853. A then sues B in 1875 for redemption of the same property, alleging that he had mortgaged the property as absolute owner thereof to B in 1854. The suit is not barred: "It may be difficult to reconcile the position of B as mortgagee in 1854 with his position as absolute owner in 1853. But if it be established that A was mortgagor in 1854, why should he be debarred of his right [of redemption] merely because at a certain date [i.e., in 1853] he may have had no right to the property at all?" : Amanat Bibi v. Imdad Husain (1888) 15 Cal. 800, 15 I. A. 106; Balbhaddar v. Ram Lal (1904) 26 All. 501.

4. A sues B for redemption of a mortgage alleged to have been executed in 1856 of 50 cawnies of land. B denies the genuineness of the mortgage, and alleges that 14 out of the 50 cawnies were mortgaged to him in 1853, and that the 14 and the remaining 36 were sold to him by A in 1855. The mortgage is not proved, and the suit is dismissed. A then sues B to redeem the 14 cawnies on the footing of the mortgage of 1853. The suit is not barred: Ramaswami v. Vythinatha (1903) 26 Mad. 760; Veerana v. Mathukumara (1904) 27 Mad. 102; Parambath v. Puthengattil (1905) 28 Mad. 406; Thirikaikat v. Thiruthayil (1906) 29 Mad. 153; Mahabir v. Purbhoo Nath (1907) 12 C. W. N. 292; Ram Sahai v. Ahmadi Begam (1910) 33 All. 302.

5. A, alleging that he mortgaged certain lands to B with possession, sues B for redemption, the suit being brought by him as mortgagor. A fails to prove the alleged mortgage, and the suit is dismissed. A then sues B for possession of the same lands, now claiming as owner thereof. The suit is not barred: Mahomed Ibrahim v. Sheik Hamja (1911) 35 Bom. 507.

For other cases under this rule, see foot-note (v).

Rule IV.—It cannot be said of a relief which if claimed in the first suit would have made that suit bad for multifariousness that it ought to have been made a ground of attack in that suit (w).

Application of the above rules to suits on mortgage.—If a mortgagee, in a suit for redemption against him by the mortgagor, omits to obtain an order for sale of the mortgaged property on failure of payment by the mortgagor of the mortgage-debt within the time allowed for redemption, he will be precluded from bringing a separate suit for sale on default of payment by the mortgagor within the time aforesaid. The mortgagee "might and ought" to have claimed the right of sale in the suit for redemption brought against him (x). Similarly, if a prior mortgagee is made a party to a suit brought by a subsequent mortgagee on his mortgage, but omits to set up his claim under his prior mortgage, he will be precluded from bringing a separate suit to enforce his mortgage. This rule does not apply where the subsequent mortgagee admits in his plaint the debt due to the prior mortgagee and has actually offered to redeem that debt. In the same way, if a subsequent mortgagee is made a party to a suit on a mortgage prior to his own, but omits to claim his right to redeem such prior mortgage, he cannot afterwards sue for that purpose on the mortgage he has omitted to plead (y).

In this connection we may mention a point which was left open by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sri Gopal v. Pirthi Singh (z) cited above, namely, whether a mortgagee who has several mortgages on the same property can treat them as separate causes of action, or whether he must bring one suit on all of them. This point arose in a recent case before the High Court of Bombay, where it was held that if a mortgagee who has two mortgages upon the same property sues upon the mortgage of the later date, and the property is sold without reference to the prior mortgage, he cannot afterwards sue on the prior mortgage, not because the several mortgages constitute but one cause of action within the meaning O. 2, r. 2, but because of the general principles of the law of mortgage and of res judicata (a). Similarly it has been held by the High Court of Madras that if the mortgagee brings a suit on the prior mortgage without mentioning his subsequent mortgage, and the property is sold, he cannot afterwards sue to enforce the subsequent mortgage against the property (b). The ground of these decisions seems to be that the mortgagee in such a case must be deemed to be a party to the first suit as a prior or subsequent mortgagee according as the first suit is on the subsequent or prior mortgage, and that the case therefore is similar to the one where the prior or subsequent mortgagee being joined as a party does not set up his claim under the mortgage. But where a mortgagee who has two mortgages upon the same property sues on the mortgage of the later date reserving his rights under the prior mortgage, and the property is put to sale subject to the prior mortgage, there is nothing to preclude him from subsequently suing upon the prior mortgage (c).

In suits for redemption, foreclosure or sale, there ought to be a complete and final settlement of all accounts between the mortgagor and the mortgagee right up to the time of actual redemption, foreclosure or sale, as the case may be (d). A mortgagor, therefore, who has obtained a decree for redemption against a mortgagee in possession, and paid what was due according to the decree, and obtained possession, cannot subsequently sue for profits realized by the mortgagee for a period prior to the delivery of possession. Such profits "might and ought" to have been taken into account at the time of passing the decree (e). Similarly, where a suit is brought by a mortgagor under s. 62 of the Transfer of Property Act to recover possession of the mortgaged property, the mortgage being a usufructuary one, and a deposit is made by him in Court under s. 83 of the Act of the amount due to the mortgagee, and a decree is passed for possession, the mortgagor cannot subsequently sue for profits realized by the mortgagee from the date of the deposit to the date of the delivery of possession (f). In both these cases it might be said that there was but one cause of action, and the subsequent suit was therefore barred by the provisions of O. 2, r. 2 [Code of 1882, s. 43].

S. II. Subject-matter of the suit.—It is not necessary for Explanation IV to be applicable that both the issue and the subject-matters of the two suits must be the same. It is quite enough if the matters in issue are the same, otherwise in suits for arrears of rent there could be no res judicata at all, for the subject-matters of successive suits for arrears of rent are necessarily different (g). See notes on p. 38 above.

Issue of law.—Issues are of three kinds: (1) issues of fact, (2) issues of law, and (3) mixed issues of law and fact.

An issue of fact may be res judicata. Almost all the cases we have hitherto dealt with relate to issues of fact. Note the words with which the section begins “no Court shall try any suit or issue.”

An issue of mixed law and fact stands on the same footing as an issue of fact, and it may also be res judicata (h).

An issue of law may or may not be res judicata. It may be res judicata, if the cause of action in the subsequent suit is the same as that in the former suit, as was the case in the undermentioned cases (i). But it cannot be res judicata if the cause of action in the subsequent suit is different from that in the former suit, as was the case in the undermentioned cases (j). The latter cases are all cases of recurring liability, such as rent, maintenance, etc.

Illustrations.

1. X sells certain property to A. At the time of sale the property was in the possession of B who claimed it adversely to X. A then sues B in the High Court of Calcutta to recover possession of the property under the deed of sale from X. An issue is raised in the suit, and it is an issue of law, namely, whether a person who is not in possession of property at the time of sale is competent to convey it. The issue is found in the negative, and A's suit is accordingly dismissed. It is subsequently decided by a Full Bench of the same High Court in another case between different parties altogether that although a person may not have property in his possession, he is nevertheless competent to convey it. After the decision of the Full Bench, A again sues B to recover possession of the same property under the same deed of sale, and asks for a decision in his favour on the strength of the Full Bench ruling on the point of law that was decided against him in the former suit. Here the cause of action in the subsequent suit is the same as that in the former suit. The Court is therefore precluded from re-trying the same question of law in the subsequent suit, in other words, the issue of law is res judicata. It is immaterial that the decision on the question of law in first suit was erroneous: Gowri Koer v. Audh Koer (1884) 10 Cal. 1087. See as to this case the observations of Maclean, C.J., in Alimunnissa v. Shama Charan (1905) 32 Cal. 749.

B contends that A is not entitled to recover more than 3 years' allowance, having regard to the provisions of the Indian Limitation Act. The Court decrees the whole of A's claim. In the year 1907 A sues B for further arrears for 12 years from the year 1895 to the year 1906. B raises the same point of law that was raised by him in the former suit. Here the cause of action in the subsequent suit is different from that in the former suit, for the claim in the subsequent suit is for further arrears that had accrued due after the institution of the former suit. The Court, therefore, is not precluded from re-trying the same question of law, and if it finds that the question of law was wrongly decided in the former suit, it may decide the suit on what it considers is the correct interpretation of the law: Chamanlal v. Babubhai (1898) 22 Bom. 669.

It will be observed that in the case cited in ill. (2) the matter directly and substantially in issue in the subsequent suit was also directly and substantially in issue in the former suit, and the other conditions of res judicata were also present, and yet it was held that the subsequent suit was not barred as res judicata. The effect of this and other cases cited in foot-note (j) on p. 46 appears to be that where the matter directly and substantially in issue is a matter of law, it may not be res judicata, if the cause of action in the subsequent suit is different from that in the former suit (k). The reason given for the decisions now under review is that the Courts would be perpetuating an injustice for all time if they were to hold that an erroneous decision on a point of law in a former suit was binding upon the parties in a subsequent suit instituted upon a fresh cause of action.

CONDITION II : HEREIN OF EXPLANATION VI.

The former suit must have been a suit between the same parties or between parties under whom they or any of them claim.

Same parties.—A sues B for rent. The defence is that C, and not A, is the landlord. A fails to prove his title, and the suit is dismissed. A then sues B and C for a declaration of his title to the property. The suit is not barred, for the parties to the two suits are not the same, C not having been a party to the former suit (l).

Res judicata as between co-defendants.—As a matter may be res judicata between a plaintiff and a defendant, so it may be res judicata as between plaintiffs or as between co-defendants. First, as to res judicata between co-defendants: if in a suit by A against B and C, there is a matter directly and substantially in issue between B and C, and an adjudication upon that matter is necessary to the determination of the suit, the adjudication may operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit between B and C in which either of them is plaintiff and the other defendant (m). In other words, "if a plaintiff cannot get at his right without trying and deciding a case between co-defendants, the Court will try and decide the case, and the co-defendants will be bound. But if the relief given to the plaintiff does not require or involve a decision of any case between co-defendants, the co-defendants will not be bound as between each other by any proceeding which may be necessary only to the decree which the plaintiff obtains" (n). The above observations indicate the reluctance which the Courts

S. 11. ordinarily feel to extending the doctrine of res judicata to co-defendants (o). A Hindu, H, dies leaving two daughters D1 and D2 and a nephew N. D1 sues D2 and N to recover certain property under an oral will of H. D2 claims the property under a will in writing executed by H. N claims the property as undivided nephew of H. The Court finds that H and N were divided, that the will in writing is the valid will, and dismisses D1's suit. Subsequently D2 sues N to recover the property under the written will. N contends that he and H were joint, and that he became entitled to the property by right of survivorship. The question whether H and N were joint is res judicata. That question was directly and substantially in issue in the first suit, and it was necessary to decide it in that suit to adjudicate upon D1's claim, and it was decided against N (p).

Res judicata as between co-plaintiffs—Next, as to res judicata between co-plaintiffs. As a matter may be res judicata between co-defendants, so it may be res judicata between co-plaintiffs, subject to the same conditions that obtain in the case of co-defendants (q).

Parties in subsequent suit claiming under parties in former suit.—If the first suit is between A and B, and the second between A and C, the decision in the first suit cannot operate as res judicata in the second unless C claims under B. If C does not claim under B, he cannot be bound by any decision in a suit between A and B. The dismissal, therefore, of an ejectment suit brought by a lessee against a trespasser is no bar to a subsequent suit for ejectment by the lessor against the same person; for a lessor cannot be said to claim under his lessee (r). Where there are several reversioners entitled successively to a property held by a Hindu widow and forming part of the estate of her husband, no one of such reversioners can be said to claim through or derive his title from another; a decree, therefore, in a suit by one of the reversioners seeking to set aside an alienation made by the widow of her husband's property is no bar to a subsequent suit brought by another reversioner for setting aside the same alienation (s).

If the first suit is between A and B, and the second between C and D, the decision in the first suit cannot operate as res judicata in the second unless C claims either under A or B, and D claims under the other of them; that is to say, if C claims under A, D must be claiming under B, and if C claims under B, D must be claiming under A. It is clear that if both C and D claim under A alone, nothing that is decided in the suit between A and B will operate as res judicata in the subsequent suit between C and D, for neither of them claims under B. The result is the same if both C and D claim under B alone. In other words, the plea of res judicata cannot prevail if all the parties in the subsequent suit claim under one party only in the former suit (t).

A Hindu son in a joint family does not "claim under" his father within the meaning of this section; he becomes entitled by reason of his birth and in his own right, a right which he can enforce against his father. Therefore the dismissal of a suit for redemption of a mortgage of joint family property brought by the father alone is no bar to a subsequent suit for redemption by the son (u). But the son, it seems, would be bound by the decree, if he had knowledge of the suit and had assisted the father in the suit (v). Mere knowledge of the suit, however, is not enough to bind the son (w). The cases in which it has been held that a decree obtained against a Hindu father for a debt is binding upon the son stand on a different footing. They depend on the obligation of a Hindu son to pay his father's debts not improperly incurred, and upon the presumption in some of them that the suit was brought against the father as the representative of the family and of the family property (x).

A purchaser at a revenue sale does not "claim under" the defaulting proprietor: therefore a decree against the defaulting proprietor cannot constitute res judicata as against the purchaser (y).

The title by which the parties in the subsequent suit claim must have arisen "subsequently" to the commencement of the former suit.—In order that a decision in a suit between A and B may operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit between A and C, it is necessary to show that C claims under B by a title arising subsequently to the commencement of the first suit. Thus a purchaser, mortgagee, or donee of a property is not estopped by a decree obtained in a suit against the vendor, mortgagor or donor commenced after the date of the purchase, mortgage or gift (z).

See notes below under the head "Condition III: Litigating under the same title."

Explanation VI.—This explanation provides that where persons litigate bonâ fide in respect of a public right or a private right claimed in common for themselves and others, all persons interested in such right shall, for the purposes of this section, be deemed to "claim under" the person so litigating. It refers to cases in which a decision in a suit may operate as res judicata against persons not expressly named as parties to the suit, as where a suit is instituted by A and B on behalf of themselves "and others," or where it is instituted against A and B on behalf of themselves "and others." The conditions under which the decision in such a suit may constitute res judicata against the parties not expressly named in the suit are—

- (1) that there must be a right claimed by A and B in common for themselves and the parties not expressly named in the suit (a), and
- (2) that the parties not expressly named in the suit must be interested in such right.

Illustrations.

(1) A decree in a suit against certain members of a sect alleged to be wrongdoers in their individual capacity cannot operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit against the other members of the sect: Sadagopa Chariar v. Krishnamoorthy Rao (1907) 30 Mad. 185, 34 I. A. 93. [The wrong complained of in the former suit in this case was that the defendants carried an idol in procession through certain streets and that such processions were in violation of the plaintiff's rights. The suit was against the defendants in their individual capacity, and not as representing the sect to which they belonged].

(2) A, alleging that he is the proprietor of a village, sues B, C, and D for ejectment. The defence is that A is not the proprietor at all, that a part of the village belongs to B, C and D, and the rest to X, Y and Z. The Court finds that A is not the proprietor, and A's suit is dismissed. A then sues X, Y and Z, and also B, C and D, for a declaration, that he is the proprietor of the village and for possession. The question of A's title to the village is res judicata so as to bar the suit against B, C and D, who were parties to the former suit, but it is not res judicata so as to bar the suit against X, Y and Z who were not parties to the former suit. It cannot be said that B, C and D litigated in the Bel Saran* (1911) 33 All. 493.

(3) A and B as members of the Mahomedan community bring a suit against C for a declaration that a certain mosque and a garden appertaining to the mosque are wakf property. The plaintiffs fail to prove that the property is wakf property, and the suit is dismissed. After some years a suit is brought by nine other members of the same community against the same defendant C for the same relief. The suit is barred as res judicata: Muhammad v. Sumitra (1914) 36 All. 424.

The right referred to in this Explanation may either be a public right or a private right. The words "public right" have been added into this Explanation in view of the provisions of s. 91 below. The right to have a public nuisance abated is a public right. But the right of pasturage claimed by custom by the inhabitants of a village over a tract of land, or to take water from a spring or well, is a private right (b).

It may here be noted that in some of the cases that arose under the Code of 1882 the opinion was expressed that the present Explanation, so far as it relates to private rights, must be confined to cases where leave to sue had been obtained under s. 30 of that Code [now O. 1, r. 8 (1)] (c).

Representative suit.—If the parties in the subsequent suit can be said to have been represented by the parties in the former suit, the decision in the former suit will bind the parties in the subsequent suit. Thus a trustee of a devasam, a karnum, a holder of vatun lands, an administrator of the estate of a deceased person, a shebait, a holder of saranjam lands, represents each his successor: therefore, a decree against him will bind his successor (d). Similarly a decree against a benamidar binds the real owner (e). On the same principle a decree against the karnavan of a tarwad in his representative capacity binds the members of the tarwad (f).

A decree passed against a Hindu widow as representing the estate of her deceased husband in respect of a debt or other transaction binding on the estate is binding upon the reversioners (g), "unless," as was observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the Shivayanga case, "it could be shown that there had not been a fair trial of the right on that suit—or in other words, unless that decree could have been successfully impeached on some special ground" (h). The reason of this qualification is that, though a Hindu widow represents the estate of the reversioners for some purposes, it is her duty not only to represent the estate, but also to protect it (i). Thus it has been held that a compromise made by a Hindu widow is not binding on the reversioners, whether litigation has commenced or not, not even if it has been followed by a decree of Court (j)

And the opinion has also been expressed that a decree against a Hindu widow passed on an award does not bind the reversioners (k). In fact, the Courts have held that a decree against a Hindu widow does not bind the reversioners unless it was passed "in a suit contested to the end" (l), or, as put by the High Court of Allahabad, "the reversioners can be bound only by decree made after full contest in a bona fide litigation" (m). But if a decree is passed after full contest, it is binding on the reversioners, though the widow may have filed an appeal from the decree, and subsequently withdrawn the appeal (n). The effect of these decisions is that when a suit is brought against a Hindu widow by a creditor of her husband, and the widow consents to a decree being passed against her, the decree cannot bind the reversioners at all, though the widow may be quite satisfied that the debt was really due. But the High Court of Madras has held differently in a recent case (o). In that case it was observed that a Hindu widow "as representing the estate was certainly not bound to raise any defence in the case when satisfied that the debt was really due," and it was held that the decree, though it was a consent decree, was binding on the reversioners, the Court having been satisfied on the evidence adduced in the suit before it that the debt was in fact due and that there was no collusion or fraud in obtaining the decree. The effect of that decision is that a decree against a Hindu widow, though it is a consent decree, may bind the reversioners in a proper case, not that it cannot bind the reversioners in any case as held by the other High Courts. The same view has been recently taken by the High Court of Allahabad (p). The extreme view taken by the Bombay and Calcutta High Courts is difficult to support since the decision of the Privy Council in Khunni Lal v. Gobind Krishna (q), in which their Lordships expressly recognized the power of a daughter (who takes a widow's estate in provinces other than the Bombay Presidency) to enter into a compromise even without litigation. However that may be, it is quite clear that a decree passed against a widow not in her representative but personal character, cannot bind the reversioners (r). Similarly a decree passed against the legal personal representative of a Hindu widow in respect of her husband's estate cannot bind a reversioner, for the representative of a widow does not represent the estate of the husband (s). But there is no authority for the proposition that a Hindu widow, otherwise qualified to represent an estate in litigation, ceases to be so qualified merely owing to personal disability or disadvantage as a litigant, although the merits of a suit by or against her are tried and the trial is fair and honest. The mere fact, therefore, that she is personally estopped from denying the material facts of the case is no ground for withholding the application of the rule enunciated at the commencement of this paragraph, namely, that where the estate of a deceased Hindu has vested in his widow or other limited heir, a decree fairly and properly obtained against her, after a trial upon the merits, is binding on the reversionary heirs. Thus where a Hindu widow instituted a suit for a declaration that an adoption made by her to her deceased husband was invalid, and the suit was dismissed on the ground that the widow was estopped by her conduct from denying the validity of the adoption, and it was further found upon the facts that the adoption was valid, it was held in a suit brought by the reversionary heir after the widow's death for a declaration that the adoption was invalid, that the reversionary heir was bound by the decision in the first suit as res judicata (t). But a decree passed against a widow by reason of an admission made by her does not bind the reversioner (tl).

Judgment in rem.—It will have been seen from what has preceded that a judgment in a suit is binding only upon the parties to the suit and their privies. “As a general principle, a transaction between two parties in judicial proceedings ought not to be binding upon a third; for it would be unjust to bind any person who could not be admitted to make a defence, or to examine witnesses, or to appeal from a judgment he might think erroneous” (u). There are, however, certain judgments which bind all the world and not only the parties to the proceeding in which they were passed and their privies. A judgment that is binding upon the parties and their privies only is called a judgment in personam. A judgment which binds all the world is called a judgment in rem. Judgments in rem are outside the scope of the present section. They are dealt with in the Indian Evidence Act, s. 41.

Decree against minor.—A decree passed against a minor properly represented is binding upon him like a decree passed against an adult, but it is open to the minor to impeach such decree by a suit in cases where the next friend or guardian for the suit has been guilty of fraud or negligence in allowing the decree to be passed against him (v).

CONDITION III.

“Litigating under the same title.”

The third condition of res judicata is that the parties in the subsequent suit must have litigated under the “same title” in the previously decided suit. The expression “same title” means the same capacity. “A verdict against a man suing in one capacity will not stop him when he sues in another distinct capacity, and, in fact, is a different person” (w). Thus where a suit is brought by a person to recover possession from a stranger of math property claiming it as the heir of a deceased mohunt, but he does not produce any certificate of succession to establish his heirship and the suit is thereupon dismissed, the dismissal is no bar to a suit by him as manager of the math on behalf of the math (x). Similarly the dismissal of a suit brought by a son against his father for maintenance claimed under an agreement is no bar to a suit by him against the father for a declaration that he is entitled to maintenance out of certain lands in the hands of the father held under a sanad from Government whereby, it was alleged, the lands were charged at the time of grant with the maintenance of the junior members of the family (y).

* A mortgagee in possession, does not lose the character of mortgagee and become a trespasser because he refuses to deliver up possession of the mortgaged property to the mortgagor on deposit being made by the latter in Court of the amount payable on the mortgage. A executes a usufructuary mortgage of his property to B, and places B in possession thereof. At the proper time A tenders the mortgage-debt, Rs. 500, to B and asks to be restored to possession. B refuses to accept the tender on the ground that more is due to him and to deliver up possession of the property to A. A sues B for redemption, and deposits Rs. 500 in Court. The Court finds that the tender was proper, and directs B to deliver up possession to A. After entering into possession, A sues B to recover mesne profits from B from the date of the deposit in Court to the date of the recovery of possession. The suit is barred, for A "might and ought" to have claimed the mesne profits in the first suit. The suit is between the same parties litigating "under the same title," that is, as mortgagor and mortgagee. The mortgage is not extinguished after the tender and deposit, and B does not become a trespasser after that date. It cannot therefore be said that the suit against B for mesne profits is against him as a trespasser, and not as a mortgagee (z).

The words "between parties under whom they or any of them claim litigating under the same title" cover a case where the later litigant occupies by succession the same position as the former litigant. There may be a succession by the ordinary rules of inheritance or succession by some very special rules as in the case of Saranjam estates or Vatan estates. The words of the section do not make any distinction between different forms of succession. A decree, therefore, against a Saranjamdar may operate as res judicata against his heir and successor (a); so also a decree against a Vataradar (b).

See notes above, p. 50, "Representative suit," first para.

CONDITION IV; HEREIN OF EXPLANATION II.

The Court which decided the former suit must have been a Court competent to try the subsequent suit or the suit in which the issue alleged to be barred as res judicata is subsequently raised.

In order that a decision in a former suit may operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit, it is necessary that the Court which tried the former suit must have been a Court competent to try the subsequent suit.

The Court which decided the former suit may have been a Court of "exclusive" jurisdiction, or a Court of "concurrent" jurisdiction, or it may have been a Court of which the jurisdiction was "not concurrent" with that of the Court in which the subsequent suit is brought.

Where the Court which decided the former suit was a Court of "exclusive" jurisdiction.—If a matter directly and substantially in issue in a former suit has been adjudicated upon by a Court of exclusive jurisdiction, the adjudication will bar the trial of the same matter in a subsequent suit, though the Court which decided the former suit may not be competent to try the subsequent suit. Thus Courts of Revenue have jurisdiction in respect of certain matters to the entire exclusion of Civil Courts, and a judgment of a Revenue Court on such a matter will operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit in a Civil Court, though the Revenue Court may not be competent to try the subsequent suit (c).

Where the Court which decided the former suit was a Court of which the jurisdiction was "not concurrent" with that of the Court in which the subsequent suit is brought.—In such a case the Court which decided the former suit could not possibly be a Court "competent to try the subsequent suit" within the meaning of this section (d).

Where the Court which decided the former suit was a Court of "concurrent" jurisdiction.—In such a case the Court which decided the former suit may or may not have been "competent to try the subsequent suit." If it was, the decision would operate as res judicata, but not otherwise.

Summarising the above, we may say that in order that a decision in a former suit may operate as res judicata, the Court which decided that suit must have been either—

1. a Court of exclusive jurisdiction, or
2. a Court of concurrent jurisdiction "competent to try the subsequent suit." (e).

"Competent to try such subsequent suit."—In determining whether a Court of concurrent jurisdiction, which decided the former suit, was competent to try the subsequent suit, the following points should be noted :—

(1) The Court which decided the former suit must have been a Court competent to try the subsequent suit as regards the "amount" of the subsequent suit.—In other words, the jurisdiction of the Court which decided the former suit, and that of the Court in which the subsequent suit is brought, must be concurrent as regards their pecuniary limit. A sues B in Court X to recover interest due on a bond for Rs. 12,000. For the defence it is alleged that the amount actually lent by A was Rs. 4,000, that B being in want of money passed the bond for Rs. 12,000 and that A therefore was not entitled to interest on more than Rs. 4,000. The Court finds that the amount actually lent was Rs. 4,000, and awards A interest on that amount. Court X is a Court of which the jurisdiction is limited to suits of which the value does not exceed Rs. 5,000. A then sues B in a High Court to recover the principal sum of Rs. 12,000, alleging that that was the actual amount lent by him to B. B contends that the actual amount advanced was Rs. 4,000, and that the question as to whether Rs. 12,000 was lent or Rs. 4,000 is res judicata. The question is not res judicata for the jurisdiction of Court X being limited to Rs. 5,000, it was not a Court competent to try the subsequent suit in which the amount claimed is Rs. 12,000 (f). Contrast No. 7 below.

(2) The jurisdiction of the two Courts must be concurrent not only as regards the "pecuniary" limit, but also as regards the "subject-matter" of the subsequent suit.—Thus certain Courts have no jurisdiction to adjudicate upon questions of title, though that question may be gone into incidentally to decide the principal question. A finding on a question of title by such Court cannot operate as res judicata. This generally happens in the following cases :—

(a) Where the first Court is a "Probate Court" and the second Court a "Civil Court."—A and B, each claiming to be the heir of X, apply to a High Court, in the exercise of its testamentary jurisdiction, for letters of administration of the estate of X. The Court finds that A is the heir of X, and grants letters to him. B then sues A in the same Court in the exercise of its original jurisdiction for a declaration that he, and not A, is the heir of X. The suit is not barred, for a Probate Court has no jurisdiction to finally adjudicate upon questions of title (g). It must not, however, be supposed that a decision of a Probate Court cannot operate as res judicata in any subsequent proceeding in a Civil Court. Thus if A, alleging to be the executor of B's will, applies for probate of the will, and C, B's widow, opposes the application, and probate is refused on the ground that the will is not proved, A will be precluded, in a subsequent suit by C against him to recover her husband's property from him, from contending that he is the husband's executor and is entitled as such to retain possession of the property. Though the judgment of the Probate Court refusing probate to A does not operate in such a case as a judgment in rem, it operates as res judicata between A and C under s. 83 of the Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881) and s. 11 of the Code (h). Similarly a decision of the Probate Court that the testator executed the will sought to be proved as a free agent and not under undue influence precludes the party against whom the decision was given from reopening it in a suit in a Civil Court (i). See Evidence Act, 1872, s. 41.

(b) Where the first Court is a "Munsif's Court" and the second Court a "District Court."—A sues B for rent in a Munsif's Court. The defence is that C and not A is the landlord. The Court finds that A is not the landlord, and the suit is dismissed. A then sues B in a District Court for a declaration of title to the land. The suit is not barred, for a Munsif's Court has no jurisdiction to adjudicate upon questions of title (j).

Similarly, a decision in a suit for damages instituted in a Provincial Court of Small Causes [a Court not competent to try a suit for title] does not operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit for establishment of title (k).

(c) Where the first Court is a "Revenue Court" and the second Court is a "Civil Court."—A decision of a Revenue Court on a question of title is no bar to the trial of the same question by the ordinary Civil Courts, unless the Revenue Court is empowered by the Legislature to determine questions of title so as to constitute it pro tanto a Civil Court (l). The reason is that Courts of Revenue are generally Courts of jurisdiction limited to adjudicate upon questions of rent, tenure, etc. (m). There are, however, some matters of which the decision by a Revenue Court is expressly declared by the Act constituting the Court to have the force of a decree in a civil suit (n), and some as to which it is declared that the decision shall be final (o). In such cases, the decision of a Revenue Court will operate as res judicata so as to bar the trial of the same matter in a Civil Court.

(d) Where the first Court is a "Criminal Court" and the second Court is a "Civil Court."—An order by a Magistrate under s. 146 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, declaring a party to be entitled to possession of certain lands, is conclusive on the point of actual possession in a subsequent proceeding in a Civil Court (p). But a conviction or an acquittal in a criminal case is not conclusive in a civil suit for damages in respect of the act charged against the accused (q). The finding, therefore, of a Criminal Court that A assaulted or abducted B, is not res judicata in a suit for damages against A for assault or abduction (r).

The judgment of a Civil Court may in a proper case be admissible in evidence in a criminal proceeding between the same parties. Thus where A charged B with criminal breach of trust in respect of certain items, and it appeared that all those items had been dealt with by the Civil Court and the contentions of the accused with reference to all of them had been found to be correct by that Court, it was held that the judgment of the Civil Court was admissible in evidence in the criminal proceeding against the accused (s).

(3) To determine whether the Court which decided the former suit had jurisdiction to try the subsequent suit, regard must be had to the jurisdiction of that Court at the date of the "former" suit, and not to its jurisdiction at the date of the "subsequent" suit (t).

The leading case on the subject is Gopi Nath v. Bhugwat (u). In that case a suit was brought in the year 1860 to recover certain property of which the value at that time was less than Rs. 1,000, and therefore the proper Court to try it was that of the Munsif. A second suit was afterwards brought in the year 1880 between the same parties in the Court of the Subordinate Judge to recover the same property, which had then risen in value and become worth more than Rs. 1,000. The matter directly and substantially in issue in both the suits was the same, and the question arose whether the decision of the Munsif in the first suit operated as res judicata in the second suit. It was contended that as the Munsif could not have tried the second suit in consequence of the value of the property being more than Rs. 1,000, his decision could not have the effect of res judicata. But it was held that the decision operated as res judicata, for if the second suit were instituted in the year 1860, that is, at the time when the first suit was brought, the Munsif's Court would have been quite competent to try it. Mitter J. said: "The reasonable construction of the words 'in a Court of jurisdiction competent to try such subsequent suit' seems to us to be that it must refer to the jurisdiction of the Court at the time when the first suit was brought: that is to say, if the Court which tried the first suit was competent to try the subsequent suit, if then brought, the decision of such Court would be conclusive under s. 13 [of the Code of 1882], although on a subsequent date by a rise in the value of such property or from any other cause the said Court ceased to be a proper Court, so far as pecuniary jurisdiction is concerned, to take cognizance of a suit relating to that property." The High Court of Madras has also held the same way (v). But it has been held by the latter Court that the augmentation of a pecuniary claim by accrual of interest is not similar to a rise in the market value of a property, and that though in the latter case the decision in the prior suit may operate as res judicata in the subsequent suit, it cannot in the former case (w).

(4) The Court which decided the former suit must have been such a Court as would have been competent to try and decide not only the particular "matter in issue" in the subsequent suit, but also the subsequent "suit itself" in which the issue is subsequently raised (x).

(5) It is the competency of the "original" Court which decided the former "suit" that must be looked to, and not that of the "appellate" Court in which that suit was ultimately decided on "appeal" (y).—A suit is instituted in a Munsif's Court. An appeal from the decree in that suit is preferred to a District Court. A subsequent suit relating to the same matter in issue is brought also in a District Court. The decision in the first suit cannot operate as res judicata in the subsequent suit, for though the District Court that heard the appeal may have jurisdiction to try the subsequent suit, the Munsif's Court, that is, the Court which decided the former suit, is not a Court of jurisdiction competent to try the subsequent suit.

(6) A Court does not cease to be a "Court of jurisdiction competent to try the subsequent suit," if its inability to entertain it arises not from incompetence, but from the existence of another Court with a preferential jurisdiction (2). Thus a finding by a Munsif in a suit for possession under s. 9 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877, instituted in his Court that the plaintiff was wrongfully dispossessed by the defendant, is res judicata on the issue as to wrongful dispossession in a subsequent suit brought by the same plaintiff against the same defendant for damages for wrongful dispossession in a Court of Small Causes. It cannot be said that the Munsif who tried the first suit was not competent to try the subsequent suit for damages.

(7) A decision on a matter directly and substantially in issue in a former suit may operate as res judicata, though the plaintiff may in the subsequent suit join new causes of action with such matter and institute the subsequent suit in a Court of superior jurisdiction (a). Thus a decision in a suit brought in a Munsif's Court that the plaintiff is not entitled to road and public works cesses at the rate claimed by him will operate as res judicata (other conditions of res judicata being present) in a subsequent suit by the same plaintiff against the same defendant instituted in the Court of a Subordinate Judge to recover road and public works cesses at the rate claimed by him in the former suit and also embankment and dak cesses. It cannot be said that the claim for road and public works cesses is not barred as res judicata, because the Munsif was not competent to try the subsequent suit. "It would have been perfectly competent for a Munsif to try the plaintiff's present suit for road cess and public work cess."

(8) A decision on a matter directly and substantially in issue in a suit tried by a Revenue Court may operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit brought in the same Court, though the character of the suits may be such that in the one case an appeal lies to the Commissioner, and in the other to a District Court. The fact that in the two suits appeals may lie to different Courts does not affect the application of the rule of res judicata (b).

Explanation II.—This explanation is new. Under the Code of 1882 it was held by the High Courts of Bombay (c) and Madras (d) that a decision in a suit in which no second appeal was allowed by law could not operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit in which such appeal was allowed. Hence it was held that a decision in a suit of the nature cognizable in Provincial Courts of Small Causes could not operate as res judicata where the amount or value of the subject-matter of the suit did not exceed Rs. 500, as no second appeal could lie in such suit. (See s. 586 of the Code of 1882, now s. 102.) On the other hand, it was held by the High Court of Calcutta that a decision in a suit could operate as res judicata, notwithstanding that no second appeal was allowed by law in that suit (e). Explanation II is intended to affirm the view taken by the High Court of Calcutta that the competence of the jurisdiction of a Court does not depend on the right of appeal from its decision (f).

Judgment delivered by a Court not competent to deliver.—A judgment delivered by a Court not competent to deliver it cannot operate as res judicata [Evidence Act, 1872, s. 44]. For this purpose there is no distinction, so far as Chartered High Courts are concerned, between cases where a Court has no jurisdiction at all to try a suit and cases where it cannot exercise jurisdiction unless leave to sue has been obtained under cl. 12 of the Charter. Therefore, a judgment delivered by a Chartered High Court in a suit which it has no jurisdiction to try unless leave to sue has been obtained

- S. 11. cannot operate as res judicata if leave to sue was not obtained (g). See notes below, "The decision in the former suit must have been one on the Merits," p. 59.

Judgment obtained by fraud or collusion.—A judgment obtained by fraud or collusion (h) cannot operate as res judicata [Evidence Act, 1872, s. 44]. "Fraud is an extrinsic, collateral act, which vitiates the most solemn proceedings of Courts of Justice. Lord Coke says, it avoids all judicial acts, ecclesiastical or temporal" (i). Where a decree is impeached on the ground of fraud, the fraud alleged must be actual positive fraud, a meditated and intentional contrivance to keep the parties and the Court in ignorance of the real facts of the case, and the obtaining of the decree by that contrivance. The mere fact that a decree has been obtained by perjured and false evidence is no ground for setting it aside on the ground of fraud (j).

Summary of the above.—We cannot better summarise the rules of res judicata hitherto dealt with than by citing the following passage from the judgment in the Duchess of Kingstone's case :

"From the variety of cases relative to judgments being given in evidence in civil suits, these two deductions seem to follow as generally true: first, that the judgment of a Court of concurrent jurisdiction, directly upon the point, is as a plea, a bar, or as evidence, conclusive, between the same parties, upon the same matter, directly in question in another Court; secondly, that the judgment of a Court of exclusive jurisdiction, directly upon the point, is, in like manner, conclusive upon the same matter, between the same parties, coming incidentally in question in another Court, for a different purpose. But neither the judgment of a Court of concurrent or exclusive jurisdiction is evidence of any matter which came collaterally in question, though within their jurisdiction, nor of any matter incidentally cognizable, nor of any matter to be inferred by argument from the judgment."

CONDITION V: HEREIN OF EXPLANATION V.

The matter directly and substantially in issue in the subsequent suit must have been "heard and finally decided" by the Court in the first suit.

Heard and finally decided.—The mere fact that a matter directly and substantially in issue in a suit was directly and substantially in issue in a former suit is not sufficient to constitute the matter res judicata. It is further necessary, amongst other conditions, that the matter must have been "heard and finally decided" in the former suit. This does not mean that there should be an actual finding on the issue in question; it is enough if the decree necessarily involves a finding of the issue (k). In this connection it is also important to note that if a decree is specific, and is at variance with a statement in the judgment, it is the decree to which we must pay attention, and not to the statement in the judgment (l). And, further, that neither an obiter dictum nor a mere expression of opinion in a judgment has the effect of res judicata (m).

A matter will be said to have been "heard and finally decided," notwithstanding that the former suit was disposed of— S. 11.

- (i) ex parte (n); or
- (ii) by dismissal under O. 17, r. 3 [Code of 1882, s. 158] (o); or
- (iii) by a decree on an award (p); or
- (iv) by oath tendered under s. 8 of the Indian Oaths Act, 1873 (q).

If the plaintiff fails to adduce evidence at the hearing, and the suit is dismissed, it is none the less "heard and finally decided" (r). And a suit will be said to have been "heard and finally decided," though it may have been dismissed as barred by limitation.

The decision in the former suit must have been one on the merits.—

In order that a matter may be said to have been heard and finally decided, the decision in the former suit must have been one on the merits. Hence it could not be said of a matter that it was "heard and finally decided," if the former suit was dismissed—

- (i) for want of jurisdiction (s); or
- (ii) for default of plaintiff's appearance under O. 9, r. 8 [Code of 1882, s. 102] (t); or
- (iii) for want of necessary parties (u), or for misjoinder of parties (v), or for multifariousness (w), or on the ground that the suit was badly framed (x), or on the ground of a technical mistake (y); or
- (iv) for failure on the part of the plaintiff to produce probate or letters of administration or succession certificate when the same is required by law to entitle the plaintiff to a decree (z); or
- (v) for failure to furnish security for costs under O. 25, r. 2 [Code of 1882, s. 381] (a); or
- (vi) on the ground of improper valuation (b), or for failure to pay additional court-fees on a plaint which was under-valued (c).

It cannot be said of a suit that it was "heard and finally decided," if the suit was dismissed but the judgment in the suit left it open to the plaintiff to sue again (d). Nor can it be said of a matter that it was "heard and finally decided," if the Court not only did not decide it, but expressly excluded it from decision (e).

The decision in the former suit must have been necessary to the determination of that suit.— A matter directly and substantially in issue cannot be said to have been "heard and finally decided," unless the finding on the issue was necessary to the determination of the suit. A finding on an issue cannot be said to be necessary

- S. 11. to the decision of a suit unless the decision was based upon that finding. And a decision cannot be said to have been based upon a finding unless an appeal can lie against that finding. The reason is that "everything that should have the authority of res judicata is, and ought to be, subject to appeal, and reciprocally an appeal is not admissible on any point not having the authority of res judicata" (f). This leads to the following rules:—

RULE I.—If the plaintiff's suit is wholly dismissed, no issue decided against the defendant can operate as res judicata against him in a subsequent suit, for the defendant cannot appeal from a finding on any such issue, the decree being wholly in his favour (g) [see ill. (1)]; but every issue decided against the plaintiff may operate as res judicata against him in a subsequent suit, for the plaintiff can appeal from a finding on such issue, the decree being against him (h) [see ill. (2)]. The Allahabad High Court has expressed a doubt whether the second branch of this rule applies to cases where the Court after disposing of the suit against the plaintiff on a preliminary point proceeds to record its findings against the plaintiff on other issues; in such a case, according to the Allahabad Court, the findings on the other issues do not operate as res judicata against the plaintiff in a subsequent suit (i).

Illustrations.

(1) In a suit by A against B for ejectment, B contends (1) that no notice to quit was given, and (2) that the land being majhes land, he is not liable to be evicted at all. The suit is dismissed on the finding that no notice to quit was given. The Court, however, also finds that the land is not majhes land, but this finding does not find a place in the decree. A then sues B to evict him from the land after giving notice to B. B contends that the land is majhes land, and that he is not liable to be evicted. Does the finding in the first suit that the land was not majhes land operate as res judicata so as to preclude B from raising the same contention in the subsequent suit? No, for A's suit having been dismissed, B could not have appealed from the finding that the land was not majhes land. The Court having found in the first suit that A had not given notice to quit it was not necessary to the determination of the suit whether the land was majhes land or not. The decree against A in the first suit was not based upon the finding that the land was not majhes land; on the other hand, it was made in spite of that finding; Thakur Magundeo v. Thakur Mahadeo (1891) 18 Cal. 647; Nundo v. Bidhoo (1886) 13 Cal. 17.

Suppose that in the case put above, B had not raised the defence that the land was majhes land in the first suit. Would he be precluded from raising that defence in the second suit on the ground that he might and ought to have raised that defence in the first suit? No; the reason being that when a point of defence that has been actually raised and disallowed cannot operate as res judicata against a defendant, it certainly cannot operate as such when it has not been raised in fact, though it might and ought to have been raised (j).

(2) In a suit by A against B for damages for not removing certain offensive matter from A's land, B contends (1) that no notice was given as required by the Bengal Municipal Act, and (2) that he was not bound to remove the filth from A's land. The suit is dismissed upon two grounds: (1) want of notice under the Act; (2) that B was not bound to remove the filth. A then sues B for damages for non-removal of the filth over a subsequent period after giving notice to B. B contends that he is not liable to remove the filth, and that the question of his liability is res judicata by reason of its having been decided against A in the first suit. A contends that the question is not res judicata for the Court having decided in the former suit that the suit must fail for want of notice, it was not necessary for the Court to decide the issue as to B's liability to remove the filth. Held by the Calcutta High Court that the question is res judicata, and A could not raise it again in the second suit: Peary v. Ambica (1897) 24 Cal. 900. The Allahabad High Court would seem to be of a different opinion: Shib Charan v. Raghu (1895) 17 All. 174, 195.

RULE II.—If the plaintiff's suit is decreed in its entirety, no issue decided against the plaintiff can be res judicata, for the plaintiff cannot appeal from a finding on any such issue, the decree being wholly in his favour; but every issue decided against the defendant is res judicata, for the defendant can appeal from a finding on such issue, the decree being against him.

Illustration.

A, alleging that he is the adopted son of X, sues B to recover certain property granted to him by X under a deed and forming part of the estate of X. The Court finds that A is not the adopted son of X, but that he is entitled to the property under the deed and a decree is passed for A. The finding that A is not the adopted son of X will not operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit between A and B in which the question of adoption is again put in issue; for the decree being in favour of A, A could not have appealed from that finding. The Court having found that A was entitled to the property under the deed, the finding on the question of adoption was not necessary to the determination of the suit. The decree, far from being based on the finding as to adoption, was made "in spite of it": Rango v. Mudiyeppa (1899) 23 Bom. 296.

RULE III.—Where a suit is (1) for a declaration and (2) consequential relief, and the decree grants the declaration but refuses the consequential relief on account of a technical flaw, the decree to the extent to which it grants the declaration operates as res judicata against the defendant, the reason given being that the defendant could have appealed from that part of the decree (k).

Illustration.

A, the manager of a temple, sues B for a declaration that a mulgeni lease granted by A's predecessor to B is void and not binding on him, and that B being an annual tenant should be evicted. The defence is that (1) the mulgeni lease is valid, and (2) that no notice to quit having been given by A, B is not liable to eviction. A decree is passed (1) declaring that the mulgeni lease is valid, and (2) dismissing the rest of the plaintiff's suit for want of notice. A then gives notice to B, and sues B for possession of the land. B contends that he holds the land under the mulgeni lease and that the lease is binding on A and that A is not therefore entitled to evict him. The question as to whether the lease is binding on A is res judicata, for the finding on that issue having been embodied in the decree, B could have appealed from it; Mota v. Vithal (1916) 40 Bom. 662.

See also notes to s. 96 under the head "Who may appeal."

"Finality" of decree in redemption suits.—There is a conflict of decisions whether a mortgagor, who has brought a suit for redemption and obtained a decree nisi under the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act, which neither the mortgagor nor (k) Mota v. Vithal (1916) 40 Bom. 662.

S. 11. the mortgagee has applied to be made absolute, can after the execution of that decree is time-barred bring a fresh suit for redemption, or whether such suit is barred by s. 11 or s. 47 of the Code. It has been held by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court (l), and, following it, by a Full Bench of the Bombay High Court (m), that the mortgagor can bring a fresh suit for redemption. On the other hand, it has been held by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court (n), that the second suit is barred. As regards the High Court of Calcutta, it was held in the undermentioned case (o) that the second suit would not be barred, while in a later case (p) it was held that the second suit would be barred.

It has been held by the High Court of Bombay that where a mortgagee obtains a preliminary decree for sale, but does not apply for an order absolute for sale within the period prescribed by the decree, nor is any step taken by the mortgagor to redeem the property, the mortgagor is not precluded from bringing a suit for redemption of the mortgage (q). According to the Madras High Court, he is precluded by the provisions of the present section from bringing such a suit (r). See notes, "Application of the above rules to suits on mortgage," on p. 44 above.

Where a decree is appealed from, it is the appellate decree to which regard must be had to determine whether a matter is res judicata, and not the decree appealed from.—A decision liable to appeal may be "final" within the meaning of this section until the appeal is made. But once the appeal is made the decision loses its character of "finality," and what was once res judicata again becomes res sub judice (matter under judicial enquiry). The appeal destroys the finality of the decision, the decree of the lower Court is superseded by the decree of the Court of Appeal, and it is the latter decree that should be looked to to determine the question of res judicata (s).

A sues B for damages for cutting and removing certain trees on his land. The suit is dismissed on the grounds (1) that the land did not belong to A, and (2) that B did not cut the trees. A appeals from the decree on both these grounds, but the appeal is dismissed on the ground that A had failed to prove that B had cut the trees. Note that the appellate Court does not decide the question of A's title. A then sues B for possession of the land, claiming that the land belongs to him. B contends that the suit is barred as res judicata it having been found by the first Court in the former suit that the land did not belong to A. The suit is not barred, for the question of A's title became res sub judice when the appeal was made, and it did not become res judicata as the appellate Court did not adjudicate upon that question. But a judgment of an appellate Court will operate as res judicata as regards all findings of the lower Court which, though not referred to in it, are necessary to make the appellate decree possible only on such findings (t).

Consent decree and estoppel.—The present section does not apply in terms to consent decrees; for it cannot be said in the case of such decrees that the matters in issue between the parties "have been heard and finally decided" within the meaning of this section (u). A consent decree, however, has to all intents and purposes, the same effect as res judicata as a decree passed in invitum (v). It raises an estoppel as much as a decree passed in invitum (w). So long, therefore, as a consent decree stands, it is not open to either party thereto to give the go bye to it, even if it contains clauses that are bad in law (x). A consent decree, however, is a mere creature of the agreement on which it is founded, and it may be set aside on any ground which would invalidate an agreement between the parties (y). But unless all the parties agree, an application cannot be made to the Court of first instance in the original suit to set aside the judgment or order (z) except, apparently, in the case of an interlocutory order (a). See notes to s. 96, "Procedure for setting aside consent decrees."

Explanation V : relief claimed but not expressly granted.—If a relief is claimed in a suit, but it is not expressly granted in the decree, it will be deemed to have been refused, and the matter in respect of which the relief is claimed will be res judicata. Thus where in a suit by a mortgagee against his mortgagor (1) for a money decree, and, in default of payment, (2) for sale of the mortgaged property, the mortgagee was content to take a money-decree only, it was held that a subsequent suit by him, on failure of the mortgagor to satisfy the decree, to have the amount of the mortgage-debt paid to him by the sale of the property, was barred as res judicata. The relief as to sale having been claimed by the mortgagee, but not having been expressly granted in the former suit, must be deemed to have been refused so as to bar the subsequent suit (b). It is different, however, where there is no relief claimed for sale in the former suit (c).

It sometimes happens that a suit brought in a particular form is dismissed "in the form in which it is brought," that is to say, it ought to have been brought in another form, and it is dismissed because it is not brought in that form. In such a case, if the adjudication was arrived at on the merits of the case, the decree dismissing the suit will bar a fresh suit in respect of the same matter (d), though the decree may provide that the plaintiff may institute a fresh suit in proper form (e), the reason is that the Court has no power under the Code to include a reservation of this kind in a decree of dismissal (f). But if the adjudication was not arrived at on the merits of the case, a fresh suit in respect of the same matter would not be barred (g).

The provisions of this Explanation do not apply, unless the "relief" claimed was (1) substantial relief, and (2) it was such as it is obligatory on a Court to grant:—

1. The relief claimed must have been substantial, not auxiliary.—A sues B (1) to recover her share in the estate of D, claiming the same as D's widow, and (2) for a declaration that she was lawfully married to D, a fact which B had denied. A decree is made by consent awarding Rs. 55,000 to A in full satisfaction of her claim against the estate of D. The decree does not contain any declaration as to A's marriage with D. Thus

- S. 11. circumstance will not bar a subsequent suit by A as D's widow, against B, to recover her share in the estate of a deceased relative; for the relief claimed in the former suit in respect of the legality of marriage was not claimed as a "specific" or "substantial" relief, but it was "auxiliary" to the principal relief as to her share in the estate of D (h).

2. The relief claimed must have been one which the Court is bound to grant, and not one which it is discretionary with the Court to grant (i)—Thus a relief as to mesne profits subsequent to the date of the suit is one which it is not obligatory on the Court to grant. Therefore, if a suit is brought for possession and for past and future mesne profits, and the Court gives a decree for mesne profits down to the date of suit, but says nothing about subsequent mesne profits, the relief as to subsequent mesne profits will not be deemed to have been refused, and a fresh suit in respect thereof will not be barred (j). But it is otherwise as to mesne profits accrued due prior to the date of the suit (k). As stated by Wallis, C.J., in a Madras Full Bench case (l), "the word 'relief' in the Explanation means relief arising out of a cause of action which had accrued at the date of suit and on which the suit was brought, and [does] not include relief such as mesne profits accruing after the date of suit as to which no cause of action had then arisen, but which the Court was nevertheless expressly empowered to grant" [see O. 20, r. 12]. See notes to O. 2, r. 2, "First suit for possession, subsequent suit for mesne profits."

A relief claimed in a suit will not be deemed to have been "refused" if the Court which decided the suit refused to adjudicate upon the relief claimed, and suggested to the plaintiff that he should bring a fresh suit in respect of that relief. In such a case a fresh suit in respect of such relief will not be barred (m). "It would be idle to expect that a Court, which had judicially advised the second suit, should punish a plaintiff with dismissal of his suit for simply acting on the Court's advice" (n).

Orders in execution proceedings and interlocutory orders.—A applies for execution of a decree obtained by him against B. The application is rejected on the ground that it is time-barred. A then makes a fresh application for execution of the same decree. The rejection of the first application is a bar to the trial of the second (o), not under s. 11 of the Code, for the former application is not a "former suit" within the meaning of that section, but upon general principles of law. These principles are analogous to the principles of res judicata (p). In other words the principle of law underlying this section applies to proceedings in the execution of decrees. Hence the matters directly and substantially in issue in both the applications must be the same, either actually (q) or constructively (r). Thus where an order is made for attachment of the properties of a judgment-debtor after notice to him to show cause why the order should not be executed against him, the judgment-debtor is estopped from pleading in a subsequent application for execution that execution of the decree had been barred by limitation at the date of the order (s), even though the order passed may be an ex parte order (t). Also, the parties in the subsequent proceeding must have been parties to the former proceeding (u), and must have litigated under the same title (v). Further, the former application must have been heard and finally decided (v), and the decision must have been necessary to the determination of that application (x); therefore, the mere fact that an application for execution of a decree has been dismissed for default does not debar a subsequent application (y). But the principle of Explanation IV does not apply as regards the amount for which the decree is sought to be executed; thus if a judgment-debtor does not take exception to the amount erroneously set forth in the application for execution of the decree, he is not precluded from objecting to it on a subsequent application for execution (z). Nor does the principle of Explanation V, namely, that where a relief claimed in the plaint is not expressly granted it will be deemed to have been refused, apply to applications in execution of decrees (a).

When a decree has once been construed by a Court executing the decree, the construction is binding on the parties in subsequent proceedings in execution. Thus where a Court executing a decree decided in the course of execution proceedings that the decree according to its true construction did award mesne profits, it was held that this decision, not having been appealed from, became final between the parties (b).

Applications for amendment of decree.—Though an application for amendment of a decree is not a “suit” within the meaning of this section, yet if such an application is heard and finally decided, it will debar a subsequent application for the same purpose upon general principles of law analogous to those of res judicata (c).

Applications for review.—Where an application is made for a review of judgment, and the application is refused, it does not operate as res judicata so as to bar a subsequent suit for the same relief and on the same grounds as those put forward in the application for review. Neither s. 11 nor any doctrine of constructive res judicata can rightly be applied to such a case (d).

- (f) where it sustains a claim founded on a breach of any law in force in British India.

Alterations in the section.—Clause (a) is new. Other alterations are merely verbal.

Scope of the section.—The expression “foreign judgment” is defined in s. 2 as meaning the judgment of a foreign Court, that is, a Court situate beyond the limits of British India which has no authority in British India and is not established or continued by the Governor-General in Council. The present section provides that a foreign judgment may operate as res judicata except in the six cases specified in the section. In matters of foreign judgments the Courts here are guided by very much the same principles as those adopted by the courts of England (g). An “act of State” is not a judgment, and it cannot therefore have the effect of res judicata. Thus it has been held that an order of the Political Agent of Meywar and the Maharana of Udepore deposing a high priest from his gadi is not a foreign judgment, but merely an “act of State,” and it cannot, therefore, operate as res judicata (h).

How a foreign judgment may be enforced in British India.—A judgment of a Court of British India can only be enforced by proceedings in execution. A foreign judgment, however, may be enforced by proceedings in execution in certain specified cases only (s. 44). In other cases, a foreign judgment can only be enforced by a suit upon the judgment. That is to say, if A has obtained a decree against B for Rs. 5,000 in a French Court at Pondicherry, and if B has got no property in Pondicherry to satisfy the decree, but has got property in Bombay. A may bring a suit against B in Bombay to recover the amount of the judgment. The suit must be brought within six years from the date of the judgment (i), and if a decree is passed in favour of A, he may proceed to execute the same by attachment and sale of B's property in Bombay.

It was at one time doubtful whether a suit would lie in British India upon the judgment of a Court of a Native State in India, or whether the plaintiff should sue upon the original cause of action. On the one hand, it was held by the Madras High Court that a suit did lie in British India upon the judgment of a Court of a Native State (j). On the other hand, it was held by the Bombay High Court that such a suit did not lie (k). According to the Bombay Court, the suit ought to be brought de novo on the original cause of action, as distinguished from the judgment, to enable the Court to decide the case on its merits. The ground of the Bombay decision was that a Court which tries a suit upon a foreign judgment cannot institute an inquiry into the merits of the original suit, and hence it would result in grave miscarriage of justice if a suit were allowed to be brought on the judgment of tribunals of Native States where judicial inquiries were not ordinarily conducted with intelligence and integrity. To remove this doubt, and to obviate the danger contemplated by the Bombay Court, a clause was added into section 14 of the Code of 1882, which made it quite clear that a suit could be instituted in British India on the judgment of a Court of a Native State or of any other foreign Court in Asia or Africa (l). But it was at the same time provided by the said clause that a British Indian Court in which a suit might be brought on the judgment of a Court of a Native State or any other foreign Court in Asia or Africa should not be precluded from inquiry into the merits of the case in which the judgment sued upon was passed (m). The danger of miscarriage of justice referred to by the Bombay Court was thus effectively provided for. There was no such danger, however, in the case of the judgment of a foreign Court in Europe or America, and hence it was that the said clause was confined to judgments of foreign Courts in Asia and Africa including judgments of Courts of Native States in India. That clause has now been omitted for the simple reason that it is not possible to maintain the distinction above referred to in the case of all Asiatic Courts, for there are some Asiatic Courts, for instance, the Courts of Japan, that are entitled to be treated on the same footing as European Courts. The result is that a suit will lie upon a foreign judgment of any Court in Asia or Africa, and such a suit now stands upon the same footing as a suit brought on the judgment of a foreign Court in Europe or America.

Though a foreign judgment may be enforced by a suit in British India, it is not to be supposed that British Indian Courts are bound in all cases to take cognizance of the suit, and they may refuse to entertain it on grounds of expediency (n).

Operation of the section.—The operation of the section may be illustrated by the following cases:—

(a) A sues B in a foreign Court. If the suit is dismissed, the decision will operate as a bar to a fresh suit by A in British India on the original cause of action, unless the

- S. 13. decision is inoperative by reason of one or more of the circumstances specified in the section (o). If a decree is passed in favour of A in the foreign Court, and A sues B on the judgment in British India, B will be precluded from putting in issue the same matters that were directly and substantially in issue in the suit in the foreign Court unless the decision of the foreign Court is inoperative by reason of one or more of the circumstances specified in the section.

(b) A obtains a decree against B in the Cochin Court, and applies for execution of the decree in the High Court of Bombay. [Decrees of the Cochin Court may be executed in British India under s. 44.] It is proved by B that the decree at Cochin was obtained by A by fraud [see cl. (c) of the section]. The Bombay Court may refuse execution (p).

A British Indian Court will not give effect to a foreign judgment where it is pronounced by a Court without jurisdiction.—The leading case on the subject is Gurdial v. Raja of Faridkot (q). In that case A sued B in the Court of the Native State of Faridkot, claiming Rs. 60,000, being the amount alleged to have been misappropriated by B while in A's service at Faridkot. B did not appear at the hearing, and a decree ex parte was passed against him. B was a native of another Native State, Jhind. In 1869 he left Jhind, and went to Faridkot to take up service under A. In 1874 he left A's service, and returned to Jhind. The suit was brought against him in 1879. At the date of the suit B neither resided in Faridkot, nor was he a domiciled subject of the Faridkot State, nor did he owe allegiance to that State. Such being the case, the Faridkot State had no jurisdiction, on general principles of International Law, to entertain the suit against B in respect of the claim, which it should be noted, was a mere personal claim as distinguished from a claim relating to land or movables (r). The decree of the Faridkot Court was therefore an absolute nullity. A then sued B in a British Indian Court on the judgment of the Faridkot Court. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit on the ground that the Faridkot Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit. This decision was upheld by their Lordships of the Privy Council. The mere fact that the alleged embezzlement took place at Faridkot was not sufficient to give jurisdiction to the Faridkot Court. The result would be the same, if the suit were for damages for breach of a contract entered into by B with A at Faridkot (s). In other words a foreign Court cannot assume jurisdiction in cases where the claim is a personal one merely because the cause of action arose within its jurisdiction. But if B was residing at Faridkot at the date of the suit, the Faridkot Court would have had complete jurisdiction. In the case of personal claims, it is residence alone that gives jurisdiction in a suit against a foreigner (t). The same rule applies where the country in which the judgment was passed and that in which it is sought to be enforced have separate and distinct systems of administration and judicature, though owing allegiance to the same Sovereign. Thus a decree passed by the Ceylon Court [which is a foreign Court within the meaning of s. 2] in a suit on a contract against a native of British India who was not at the time of the action residing in Ceylon is a nullity, so that it cannot be enforced by a suit in a Court of British India (u).

Suppose now that in the above case there was an Act in force passed by the Faridkot Legislature empowering the Courts of Faridkot to entertain suits in cases where the cause of action had arisen in Faridkot though the defendant was a foreigner neither residing in Faridkot nor owing any allegiance or obedience to the Faridkot State. Could effect be then given to the judgment of the Faridkot Court in a suit brought upon the judgment in a Court in British India? It has been held that no effect could be given to the judgment even under these circumstances, because no one State can by its legislation confer jurisdiction upon its Courts to entertain a suit in respect of a personal claim against foreigners who at the date of the suit neither resided in that State nor owed any allegiance or obedience to that State (v). But British Indian subjects owe allegiance to the Sovereign of Great Britain, and the British Parliament may therefore by legislation confer jurisdiction upon the Courts of England, as it has in fact done, against British Indian subjects in British India (w). Hence where an ex parte decree is passed by the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice of England (a foreign Court) against a British Indian subject residing in British India in an action founded on breach of a contract committed within the jurisdiction of that Court, the decree is not a nullity, and effect may be given to it in a suit on the judgment instituted in British India (x).

In the last-mentioned case, as also in the case of the Raja of Faridkot, the decree passed against the defendant by the foreign Court was an ex parte decree; that is to say, the defendant did not appear before the foreign Court, and the decree was passed in his absence. But what if the defendant had appeared and defended the suit in the foreign Court? This question is considered in the following paragraph.

Submission to jurisdiction of foreign Court.—Where a suit is instituted in British India on the judgment of a foreign Court, effect will be given to the judgment, though that Court had no jurisdiction over the defendant, if the defendant appears and defends the suit brought against him in that Court without making any objection to its jurisdiction. But if he protests against the jurisdiction, and the suit is then proceeded with against him, the judgment is a nullity, and no effect will be given to it in a suit brought on the judgment. The protest against jurisdiction must be made at an early stage of the proceedings; hence where no objection to the jurisdiction was made until the case had reached the stage of appeal, it was held that it amounted to submission to jurisdiction (y). Nice questions may sometimes arise as to what amounts to submission to jurisdiction. A defendant who employs a pleader in a suit against him in a foreign Court will not be said to have submitted himself to the jurisdiction of that Court if the pleader states at the hearing that he has received no instructions from his client in the case (z). But a defendant who in addition to the objection to jurisdiction raises other defences, and does not withdraw after the protest, but takes the chance of getting a decree in his favour, will be deemed to have submitted himself to the jurisdiction of the Court (a). A fortiori, a defendant who appears in a foreign Court in answer to the process of the Court without any protest whatever, and applies for leave to defend a summary suit brought against him on a promissory note, will be deemed to have submitted himself to the jurisdiction of that Court (b). It must, however, be noted that submission is not voluntary if the appearance is made only to release property seized by a foreign tribunal in attachment or other proceedings. If it is not voluntary, the judgment of the foreign tribunal is not binding on the party. Whether submission was for the purpose of saving property or voluntary is a question of fact in each case (c).

Agreement to submit to foreign jurisdiction.—Where there is an express agreement to submit to the jurisdiction of a foreign Court, a judgment pronounced by such Court binds the parties, and effect will be given to such judgment in British Indian Courts (d).

The mere fact of entering into a contract of partnership in a foreign country does not involve an agreement that all matters and disputes arising in connection with the partnership shall be submitted to, and therefore lie within, the jurisdiction of the Courts of that country (e).

Carrying on business in a foreign country through an agent.—Persons who carry on business in a foreign country through an agent submit to the jurisdiction of the Courts of that country by giving the agent a power of attorney containing very wide powers including the right to institute or defend suits relating to any matters connected with their business or otherwise (f).

Possession of immovable property in a foreign country.—The possession of immovable property in a foreign country gives the Courts of that country jurisdiction to deal with the property (g), itself but not jurisdiction in personam over the possessor, even in regard to obligations connected with that property (h).

In cases where a foreign Court has jurisdiction, or where the defendant has submitted himself to the jurisdiction of a foreign Court, the judgment of such Court is not vitiated by irregularities which do not affect the jurisdiction of the Court even when they are such as would, in the view of the foreign Court, render the judgment there a nullity (i).

Foreign judgment against a foreign firm.—A, B, and C carry on business at Singapore in partnership in the name of X. Y. D, a creditor of the firm, brings a suit against the firm in the supreme Court of Singapore, but A alone is served with the writ of summons. B and C are British Indian subjects, and they did not reside at Singapore at the time of the suit or at any other time. A decree is passed against the firm by the Singapore Court. A suit is then brought by D in British India on the judgment of the Singapore Court against A, B, and C for a personal decree against them. No personal decree can be passed against B and C as they were not served, though a personal decree may be passed against A (j). Compare O. 21, r. 50.

Foreign judgment on a decree of a British Indian Court.—The judgment of a foreign Court, obtained on a decree of a Court in British India, is no bar to the execution of the original decree in British India (k).

Clause (b)—In order that a foreign judgment may operate as res judicata, it is necessary that it must have been given on the merits of the case [see notes to s. 11, “Heard and finally decided,” p. 58 above] whether it be the judgment of a foreign Court in Europe or America or of a foreign Court in Asia or Africa. If the foreign judgment is not given on the merits of the case, the plaintiff must prove his case independently of the judgment (l). Where in an action in the King’s Bench Division of the High Court of Justice in England to recover a liquidated amount, the defendant having failed to comply with an order to answer interrogatories his defence was struck out and judgment was entered for the amount claimed for the plaintiff [O. 11, r. 21 below], and the plaintiff subsequently instituted a suit on the judgment in the Madras High Court, it was held that the judgment sued on was one which had “not been given on the merits of the case” within the meaning of this clause, and that the suit was not maintainable (m). But a wrong view as to the burden of proof or as to the legal liability of a party does not render a foreign judgment one "not given on the merits of the case" within the meaning of this clause (n). Where the writ of summons in an action in the High Court of Justice in England was accepted by the defendant's solicitor and an appearance was entered by the solicitor on behalf of the defendant, a judgment passed against the defendant in his absence could not be said not to have been given on the merits of the case within the meaning of this clause, the defendant having been called away from England to India suddenly owing to the war (o).

Clause (c)—The mistake must be apparent on the face of the proceedings. In England it has been held that a mere mistake as to English law will not vitiate a foreign judgment, even though the mistake may appear on the face of the proceedings (p).

Clause (d)—The term 'natural justice, in this clause refers rather to the form of procedure than to the merits of the particular case. The mere fact that a foreign judgment is wrong in law does not make it opposed to 'natural justice.' There must be something in the procedure anterior to the judgment which is repugnant to natural justice (q). Thus a foreign judgment obtained without notice of the proceedings to the defendant is contrary to natural justice, and a suit on such judgment is not maintainable in a British Indian Court (r).

Limitation.—Whereas is the case of a suit on a contract limitation merely bars the remedy, but does not extinguish the right, the judgment of a foreign Court is not open to the objection that the suit was barred by the law of limitation applicable in the country where the contract was made (s).

14. [S. 13. Expl. VI.] The Court shall presume, upon the production of any document purporting to be a certified copy of a foreign judgment, that such judgment was pronounced by a Court of competent jurisdiction, unless the contrary appears on the record; but such presumption may be displaced by proving want of jurisdiction.

Presumption as to foreign judgments.

PLACE OF SUING.

15. [S. 15.] Every suit shall be instituted in the Court of the lowest grade competent to try it.

Scope and object of the section.—The object of the section in requiring a suitor to bring his suit in the Court of the lowest grade competent to try it, is that Courts of higher grades shall not be overcrowded with suits. This section is a rule of procedure, not of jurisdiction, and whilst it lays down that a suit shall be instituted in the Court of the lowest grade, it does not oust the jurisdiction of the Courts of higher

- S. 15. grades which they possess under the Acts constituting them (t). Although therefore, as a matter of procedure a suit below a certain value ought to be instituted in the Court of the Munsif, the Subordinate Judge has still jurisdiction to try it (u). As a matter of procedure, however, he ought not to entertain the suit, but should return the plaint to the plaintiff to be presented to the Munsif as provided by O. 7, r. 10 [Code of 1882, s. 57] (v). This is explained more fully below.

Jurisdiction.—The word “competent” used in this section has reference to the jurisdiction of a Court. Jurisdiction means the extent of the authority of a Court to administer justice. Thus a Presidency Small Cause Court has no jurisdiction to try suits in which the amount or value of the subject-matter exceeds Rs. 2,000; this is said to be the jurisdiction of a Court as regards its pecuniary limits. Nor can the said Court try suits for the specific performance of a contract or to obtain an injunction or for a dissolution of partnership. This is said to be the jurisdiction of a Court as regards the subject-matter of a suit.

The jurisdiction of a Court may again be original or appellate. In the exercise of its original jurisdiction, a Court entertains original suits; in the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction, it entertains appeals from decrees passed in original suits. The High Courts of Allahabad, Patna and Lahore have no original jurisdiction.

Court of lowest grade competent to try a suit.—We have in British India a great number of Courts. The High Courts of Madras, Calcutta, Bombay, Allahabad, Patna and Lahore, have been established each by a Royal Charter. Other Courts in India have been constituted by Acts of the Governor-General of India in Council. One main feature of the Acts constituting them is that they are of various grades with different pecuniary limits of jurisdiction.

In each of the three presidency towns, we have a High Court and a Small Cause Court. As regards High Courts, they are empowered in the exercise of their ordinary original civil jurisdiction to try suits of any value except suits falling within the jurisdiction of Presidency Small Cause Courts of which the value does not exceed Rs. 100 (w). The pecuniary jurisdiction of Presidency Small Cause Courts is confined to suits of which the value does not exceed Rs. 2,000 (x). From the above it is clear that both a High Court and a Small Cause Court are competent to try a suit, say for Rs. 500, for damages for breach of a contract. But of these two Courts it is the Small Cause Court that is the “Court of the lowest grade” in a presidency town competent to try the suit. The suit, therefore, “shall” be instituted in the Small Cause Court as required by the present section. This does not mean that the High Court has no jurisdiction to entertain the suit. It has jurisdiction to try the suit, but in order that the High Court may not be overcrowded with suits, the legislature has established Small Cause Courts, and the present section requires that suits which a Small Cause Court is competent to try shall be brought in that Court. We say “suits which a Small Cause Court is competent to try” for there are certain suits which a Small Cause Court is not competent to try such as suits for the recovery or partition of immovable property, or for the foreclosure or redemption of a mortgage of immovable property or suits for injunction or for specific performance (y). In presidency-towns these suits must be brought in the High Court, though the value of the suit may be under Rs. 100.

(y) Id s. 19.

Outside the Presidency-towns, we have in each presidency a number of Courts of different grades which may be divided into three classes as shown in the following table :—

S. 15.

Bombay Presidency. Act 14 of 1869.	Madras Presidency. Act 3 of 1873.	Bengal, N. W. P., and Assam Act 12 of 1887.
1. District Courts.	District Courts.	District Courts.
2. Courts of Subordinate Judges of the first class.	Subordinate Judges' Courts	Subordinate Judges' Courts.
3. Courts of Subordinate Judges of the second class.	District Munsifs' Courts.	Munsifs' Courts.

The jurisdiction of District Judges and Subordinate Judges, except Subordinate Judges of the second class in the Bombay Presidency, extends to all original suits, whatever may be the value of the suit. But a District Court is a Court of superior grade to a Subordinate Judge's Court, for a District Court is the principal Court of original civil jurisdiction in the district, and it is also the Court of appeal from decrees and orders in certain suits passed by other Courts in the district including Courts of Subordinate Judges. The jurisdiction of a Subordinate Judge of the second class in the Bombay Presidency extends to all original suits of which the value does not exceed Rs. 5,000. The jurisdiction of a District Munsif in the Madras Presidency extends to all original suits (not otherwise exempted from his cognizance) of which the value does not exceed Rs. 2,500. The jurisdiction of a Munsif in Bengal, North-Western Provinces, and Assam extends to all original suits of which the value does not exceed Rs. 1,000.

From the above it is clear that both a Subordinate Judge and a Munsif have jurisdiction to try a suit, say, to recover Rs. 500, for arrears of rent. But of these two Courts it is the Munsif's Court that is "the Court of the lowest grade" competent to try the suit. The suit therefore "shall" be instituted in the Munsif's Court as required by the present section.

As to Civil Courts in the Central Provinces, see Act 16 of 1885; in Oudh, Act 13 of 1879; in Jhansi, Act 18 of 1867. As to Provincial Small Cause Courts, see Act 9 of 1887.

Where a suit which ought to have been instituted in a Court of lower grade is instituted in a Court of higher grade.—Suppose that a suit which under the provisions of this section ought to have been instituted in a Munsif's Court is brought in the Court of a Subordinate Judge, and the Subordinate Judge, instead of returning the plaint under O. 7, r. 10, tries the suit notwithstanding objection taken by the defendant, and that a decree is passed against the defendant. Is the decree a nullity? No, for the Subordinate Judge has jurisdiction to try the suit. It is a case of irregularity not affecting the jurisdiction of the Court within the meaning of s. 99 below (z). As to the case where a suit is by reason of over-valuation brought in a Court of higher grade, see below notes, "Over-valuation and under-valuation."

(2) See Nidhi Lal v. Mazhar Husain (1885) 7 All. 230, and Matra Mondal v. Hari (1890) 17 Cal. 155, both cases of over-valuation but decided without reference to the Suits Valuation Act, 1887.

S. 15.

Where a suit which ought to have been instituted in a Court of higher grade is instituted in a Court of lower grade.—In such a case the Court of lower grade ought to return the plaint to the plaintiff to be presented to the Court of higher grade [O. 7, r. 10]. If this is not done, and the suit is heard by the Court of lower grade, the decree will be set aside in appeal as one passed without jurisdiction. This is a case of want of jurisdiction as distinguished from a mere irregularity within the meaning of s. 99 below (a). As to the case where a suit is by reason of under-valuation brought in a Court of lower grade, see notes below “Over-valuation and under-valuation.”

Principles regulating pecuniary jurisdiction.—It is the plaintiff's valuation in his plaint which fixes the jurisdiction of the Court, and not the amount which may be found and decreed by the Court (b). But jurisdiction may be destroyed, if the plaint is so amended as to exceed the pecuniary limits of the Court in which the suit is instituted (c). There is a difference of opinion, however, as to whether jurisdiction is ousted if interest or mesne profits claimed in a suit when ascertained and added to the value of the suit exceed the pecuniary limits of the jurisdiction of the Court in which the suit is instituted. See notes to s. 6, “Pecuniary jurisdiction in passing decrees,” and notes to s. 96, “Forum of appeal.”

Over-valuation and under-valuation.—Although it is the value put by the plaintiff on his suit that prima facie determines jurisdiction, it does not follow that a plaintiff is at liberty to assign any arbitrary value on the suit and thus be free to choose the Court in which he should bring the suit (d). Cases do occur in which a plaintiff sometimes over-values his suit and sometimes under-values it. The over-valuation or under-valuation may be erroneous, or it may be done intentionally by the plaintiff for the purpose of bringing his suit in a Court different from that in which it should have been brought had the suit been properly valued. If the over-valuation or under-valuation is patent on the face of the plaint, it is the duty of the Court to which the plaint is presented to return it to the plaintiff to be presented to the proper Court under O. 7, r. 10. If the over-valuation or under-valuation is not patent on the face of the plaint, but the defendant contends that the suit has been over-valued or under-valued, the plaintiff may be required to satisfy the Court that the suit has been properly valued, provided there are prima facie grounds for believing that the suit has not been properly valued (e), but not otherwise (f).

Suppose that a suit has been over-valued or under-valued, so that it is brought in a Court whose grade is higher or lower than that of the Court which would have been competent to try it if the suit were properly valued. Will the decree be set aside or reversed by the appellate Court as a matter of course? No, not unless (1) the objection as to jurisdiction by reason of over-valuation or under-valuation was taken by the defendant in the Court of first instance at or before the hearing at which issues were framed, or (2) the over-valuation or under-valuation is found by the appellate Court to have prejudicially affected the disposal of the suit on the merits (g). It has been so enacted by the Suits Valuation Act, 1887, s. 11. It does not make any difference that the over-valuation or under-valuation was erroneous or intentional (h). On this point the law was somewhat different before the passing of the Suits Valuation Act.

It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that where a suit is under-valued, with the result that the appeal from the decree in the suit is heard and decided by a District Court instead of by a High Court, the decree of the District Court is one passed by a Court without jurisdiction and it is therefore nullity. This happens in cases where a suit of which the true value exceeds Rs. 5,000 is valued at less than Rs. 5,000. A brings a suit against B for possession of immovable property in the Court of a Subordinate Judge. The real value of the suit exceeds Rs. 5,000, but the suit is valued at Rs. 2,100 only. A decree is passed in the suit for A. B files an appeal in the District Court, but the appeal is dismissed. According to the Calcutta decisions, the decree of the District Court is a nullity as being one passed without jurisdiction. The reason given is that the true value of the suit being more than Rs. 5,000, the proper forum of appeal, if the suit had been properly valued, would have been the High Court, and not the District Court, and that the result of the under-valuation was that the jurisdiction of the High Court as the Court of Appeal was ousted (i). See notes to s. 21, "Objection to jurisdiction, when to be raised."

Where the subject-matter of a suit does not admit of being satisfactorily valued.—There are several suits in which the subject-matter is not capable of being estimated at a money value, e.g., suits for restitution of conjugal rights, suits to remove a karnavan (j), suits to direct registration of a document under the Registration Act, 1908, s. 77 (k), etc. The court fee in such suits is Rs. 10 as provided by the Court Fees Act, 1870, Sch. II, art. 17, cl. vi. There is a distinction, however, between valuation for the purpose of jurisdiction and valuation for the purpose of ascertaining court fee. What we are here concerned with is valuation for purposes of jurisdiction.

We have stated above that the jurisdiction of a Court to try a suit is determined by the value of the suit. Since jurisdiction depends on the value of a suit, it follows that every suit must be valued for purposes of jurisdiction. When the subject-matter of a suit is capable of valuation, it is the plaintiff's valuation in his plaint which fixes the jurisdiction subject to what has been stated in the preceding paragraphs. But there are cases where the subject-matter of a suit does not admit of being satisfactorily valued. Suits in which the subject-matter is not capable of being estimated at a money value are prominent instances of this class. How then are such suits to be valued for purposes of jurisdiction? The case is provided for by s. 9 of the Suits Valuation Act, 1887, which enacts that in such cases the value of the suit is what the High Court may specify by rules made under that section. But no rules have yet been framed by the High Court under that section. It has been held by the High Courts of Allahabad and Calcutta that in the absence of any rules passed under that section the safest and the most convenient course to follow is to hold that the valuation made by the plaintiff of his suit should be prima facie considered as the true valuation; but if, from improper motives, he either under-values or over-values it, the Court must decide what should be considered to be the proper value (l). The cases in which the above rule was laid down were suits for restitution of conjugal rights. In a recent case it was held by the High Court of Madras that though the rule laid down by the High Courts of Allahabad and Calcutta might be the best rule in suits for restitution of conjugal rights, it was not the best rule in suits which affected property, and that the best rule in such cases was to value the suit according to the value of the property that might possibly be affected thereby (m). Thus it has been held by that Court that for purposes of jurisdiction a suit to compel registration of an instrument whether the instrument be registrable compulsorily (e.g., an instrument of gift) or voluntarily (e.g., a will) is to be valued according to the value of the property that would be affected by the suit (n). Similarly it has been held by that Court that though a suit for the removal of a karnavan is incapable of valuation, and the court fee leviable is only Rs. 10, it does not follow that a District Munsif has jurisdiction over every suit for the removal of a karnavan, though the value of the tarvad property may exceed the pecuniary limits of the jurisdiction of the Munsif's Court (o). And it has been held by the same Court that a Munsif has no jurisdiction to entertain a suit to set aside an adoption, if the value of the property, which would be lost to the adopted son if the adoption were set aside, exceeds the pecuniary jurisdiction of that Court (p). The High Courts of Allahabad and Calcutta would, it seems, hold differently. In fact, the High Court of Allahabad has held that the value, for the purposes of jurisdiction, of a suit to set aside an adoption is not the value of the property which may possibly change hands if the adoption be set aside, but the value put upon his plaint by the plaintiff (q). But whichever view be correct, it is certain since the enactment of the Suits Valuation Act (s. 11) that when once a suit of this class is decided on its merits by the lower Court, the decision will not be reversed in appeal on the ground of want of jurisdiction, unless the cognizance of the suit by that Court has prejudicially affected its disposal on the merits.

Provided that a suit to obtain relief respecting, or compensation for wrong to, immovable property held by or on behalf of the defendant may, where the relief sought can be entirely obtained through his personal obedience, be instituted either in the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the property is situate, or in the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the defendant actually and voluntarily resides, or carries on business, or personally works for gain.

Explanation—In this section “property” means property situate in British India.

Alterations in the section.—The words “with or without rent or profits” in cl. (a) are new. The word “sale” in cl. (c) has been newly added.

Chartered High Courts.—This section does not apply to Chartered High Courts in the exercise of their original civil jurisdiction (see s. 120). The High Courts of Calcutta, Madras, Bombay, Allahabad, Patna and Lahore are Chartered High Courts, each having been established by a royal charter. The nature and extent of the jurisdiction of these Courts is defined by the charter for each of these Courts. As to the extent of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the High Courts of Calcutta, Madras and Bombay, see clause 12 of the charter for these Courts set forth in Appendix II. The High Courts of Allahabad, Patna and Lahore have no original jurisdiction. As to the meaning of “original” jurisdiction, see notes to s. 15, “Jurisdiction,” on p. 72 above.

Scope of the section.—This section indicates the Court in which suits relating to immovable property and suits for the recovery of movable property actually under distraint or attachment are to be instituted. Section 19 indicates the Courts in which suits for compensation for wrong done to the person or to movable property are to be instituted. Section 20 is a general section.

Clause (a): suits for recovery of immovable property.—A suit for the recovery of immovable property situate in Bombay must be instituted in a Court in Bombay having jurisdiction to entertain the suit. The Small Cause Court in Bombay has no jurisdiction to try such suit (r). The suit must therefore be brought in the High Court of Bombay. Hence it is that the section commences with the words “subject to the pecuniary or other limitations prescribed by any law.” The insertion of the words “with or without rent or profits” is intended to remove any difficulty there may be where the defendant does not reside within the local limits of the Courts within whose jurisdiction the property is situate.

Clause (c): suit for foreclosure, sale or redemption.—A mortgages certain immovable property to B to secure repayment of a sum of money lent to him by B. Here A is the mortgagor and B is the mortgagee. If A does not repay the amount of the loan on the due date, B may institute a suit against A for sale of the mortgaged property, so that the mortgage-debt may be paid out of the sale-proceeds of the property, or he may sue for foreclosure of the mortgage. The decree in a foreclosure suit provides that if the mortgagor fails to pay the amount that may be found due to the mortgagee within a time specified by the Court (generally six months), the mortgagor shall be absolutely debarred of all right to redeem the property (s). If A offers payment of

- S. 16. the mortgage-debt to B, but B disputes the amount, A may sue B for redemption of the mortgage, and the Court will pass a decree ordering an account to be taken of what will be due to B, and directing that upon A paying to B the amount so due, B shall reconvey the property to A (t). Suits for foreclosure, sale or redemption must be instituted in the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the mortgaged property is situate.

Clause (d): Suits for the determination of any other right to or interest in immovable property.—There is no definition of immovable property in the Code. “Immovable property” is defined in the General Clauses Act, 1897, s. 3, cl. (25), as including land, benefits to arise out of land, and things attached to the earth, or permanently fastened to anything attached to the earth. Trees standing on land are immovable property (u). But once the trees are severed from the land, they assume the character of movable property. Growing crops are movable property (see s. 2, cl. 13). “Immovable property,” we have said, includes “benefits to arise out of land.” Rent that has already accrued due is movable property, for it is a benefit that has arisen out of land, but rent that is to accrue due is immovable property, for it is a benefit to arise out of land. Hence a suit for arrears of rent is governed not by the provisions of this section but by those of s. 20, and it may be instituted in any one of the Courts specified in that section, although in such suit the plaintiff’s title to the property of which the rent is claimed may incidentally come in question (v). But a suit for a declaration of the plaintiff’s right to rent comes under cl. (d) of the present section, and must be instituted in the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the property is situate (w). A suit to recover a share of the sale-proceeds of land that have already been realized is a suit for money governed by the provisions of s. 20 (x). But a suit by a vendor of land for the recovery of unpaid purchase money against a buyer who refuses to complete the purchase, is a suit “for the determination of any right to or interest in immovable property” within the meaning of cl. (d) (y). A suit by a mortgagee to recover the mortgage-debt from the mortgagor personally is a suit for debt governed by the provisions of s. 20. But if in addition to the claim against the mortgagor personally the mortgagee seeks to recover the mortgage-debt by sale of the mortgaged property, the suit will come under cl. (c) of the present section (z). A suit for maintenance is governed by the provisions of s. 20. But if in addition to the claim for maintenance the plaintiff claims that she is entitled to a charge on immovable property in the hands of the defendant, the case is one within cl. (d) of this section (a). A suit for dissolution of partnership with the usual ancillary reliefs is not a suit within cl. (d) merely because part of the partnership assets consists of a factory (b).

Clause (e): wrong to immovable property.—This refers to torts affecting immovable property, such as trespass (c), nuisance, infringement of easements, etc.

Proviso to the section.—The last paragraph of the section provides that suits to obtain relief respecting, or compensation for wrong to, immovable property, may be instituted at the plaintiff’s option either in the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the property is situate, or in the Court within the local limits of whose

S. 16.

- (1) the property is held by or on behalf of the defendant ;
- (2) the relief sought can be entirely obtained through the personal obedience of the defendant (d), and
- (3) the property is situate in, and not beyond, British India (e).

Equity acts in personam.—We have in this proviso an application, though in a highly modified form, of the maxim Equity acts in personam. When it is said that Equity acts in personam what is meant is that the Court of Equity in England (now the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice) has jurisdiction to entertain certain suits [suits in cls. (a), (b), and (e) of the present section being entirely excluded] respecting immovable property, though the property may be situate abroad, if the relief sought can be obtained through the personal obedience of the defendant. The personal obedience of the defendant can be secured only if the defendant resides within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court, or carries on business within those limits. For in the one case, the person of the defendant being within the jurisdiction, and, in the other, his personal property, if he does not comply with the judgment, the Court may arrest the defendant and commit him to jail, or attach his goods until he complies with the judgment of the Court (f). But if neither the person of the defendant nor his personal property is within the jurisdiction, the Court will not entertain a suit to obtain relief respecting immovable property situate beyond its jurisdiction, for the Court cannot in that event execute its decree either in rem or in personam, and a Court will not entertain a suit if it cannot enforce its own decree (g).

Suits in personam.—Suits in respect of which the Court of Equity in England exercises jurisdiction in personam are called suits in personam. The essential feature of suits in personam is that the land in respect of which the suit is brought is situate abroad, but the person of the defendant or his personal property is within the jurisdiction of the Court in which the suit is brought. The land being situate abroad, the decree cannot be executed in rem, that is to say, it cannot be executed against the land. But the person or the personal property of the defendant being within the jurisdiction, the decree can be executed in personam, that is to say, against the person or personal property of the defendant. It must, however, be noted that the only class of cases in which the Court of Equity in England has jurisdiction over suits relating to land situated abroad, are cases of contracts, fraud, and trust. Thus suits for specific performance of contracts for sale of land (h) and suits for foreclosure (i), sale (j) or redemption (k) in the case of a mortgage of land, are cases of contract, and the English Court of Equity will take cognizance of such suits, if the contract is made in England, and the defendant resides or carries on business in England, though the land may be situate abroad. Similarly, where lands abroad have been acquired by the fraud of a party residing in England, a suit to set aside the transaction will be entertained by the English Court of Equity (l). And the English Court of Equity will likewise entertain a suit to enforce express trusts affecting land situate in a foreign country, if the trustee is resident in England (m). But the Court of Equity in England has no jurisdiction to entertain suits for Actually and voluntarily "resides."—Clause 12 of the Charter provides that suits other than those for land may be brought in the Chartered High Courts if the defendant at the time of the commencement of the suit "dwells or carries on business or personally works for gain" within the local limits of the ordinary original jurisdiction of those Courts. There is no distinction between "residing" and "dwelling" used in its ordinary signification (q). The word "reside" is used in other parts of the Code sometimes in a narrower and sometimes in a more extended meaning; see s. 136, O. 3, r. 2, and O. 25, r. 1. But there does not appear to be any difference between "residing" within the meaning of ss. 16, 19 and 20 and "dwell" within the meaning of cl. 12 of the Charter. We therefore proceed to note the decisions bearing on the term "dwell."

"Dwell" within the meaning of cl. 12 of the Charter.—The dwelling or residence contemplated by clause 12 must be of a more or less permanent character. It must be of such a nature as to show that the High Court in which a defendant is sued is his natural forum (r). Hence it follows that where a party has got a permanent place of dwelling in one place, he cannot be said to "dwell" at a place where he has lodged for a temporary purpose only, e.g., to defend a suit brought against him (s), or for a change while on leave (t). Every person is deemed in law to have a dwelling or place of residence, and where a person has no permanent place of residence, he will be deemed to "dwell" where he is actually staying at the time. Thus where a defendant, who was Political Agent at Kolhapur left Kolhapur, en route for England on a year's furlough, after having sold off his furniture and other effects at Kolhapur, where he lived in a house belonging to Government, and stayed in Bombay for three days before sailing for England, it was held that he "dwelled" in Bombay so as to give jurisdiction to the High Court in a suit instituted against him during his stay in Bombay (u). And in a Calcutta case, a racing man, who had come to Calcutta for a month for racing, was held to dwell in Calcutta, he having no other residence at the time when the suit was instituted against him (v).

A person may have more than one permanent place of residence at the same time. In such a case he will be deemed to "dwell" in any one of the places where he is actually staying for the time being, and he may be sued in that place. In Orde v. Skinner (w) the defendant, who had a dwelling-place at Mussoorie, was held under the circumstances of the case to have another dwelling-place at Bilaspur. Similarly, where a defendant spent his time alternately in Calcutta and the mufassal, it was held that he could be sued in Calcutta where he was residing at the time (x). But a person who has been living and carrying on business in Bombay for twenty years cannot be said to be residing at Ahmedabad because he has a family house at Ahmedabad which he visits occasionally; in such a case Ahmedabad cannot be said to be one of his places of residence (y). Where an Acharya (Hindu head-priest), who had his permanent place of residence at Nathdwara, came to Bombay in April 1889 at the invitation of his devotees, it being his first visit to Bombay since his installation on the gadi in 1875, and while in Bombay exchanged visits with his followers, and stayed in a house purchased by him in 1888, it was held in a suit brought against him in Bombay in May 1889, that he did not “dwell” in Bombay, it not having been shown that he had purchased the house for a Bombay residence intending to come to Bombay from time to time and live in it (z). Where a person who was domiciled and resided in Mysore left his house in charge of a servant, and hired a house in Madras to which he brought his wife and family, and apprenticed himself for a year to a Vakil in Madras, it was held in a suit brought against him in Madras some months after his residence there, that inasmuch as he had taken up his abode in Madras, meaning to remain there for several months, and was actually living there when the suit was instituted, he “dwelled” in Madras within the meaning of cl. 12 of the Charter (a).

Carries on business.—These words also occur in cl. 12 of the Charter, and the decisions under that clause will apply equally to cases arising under ss. 16, 19 and 20. For a person to be said to “carry on business” at a place, it is not necessary that he should have an office or a regular place of business there. Thus a person residing in the mufassal who goes once or twice a week from the mufassal to a friend’s house in Calcutta, and does business there, will be said to “carry on business” in Calcutta (b). Nor is it necessary that the business should be conducted by him personally (c). It may be carried on by an agent employed by him, but it is necessary in that event that the following three conditions should concur, namely,—

(1) The agent must be a special agent who attends exclusively to the business of the principal, and carries it on in the name of the principal, and not a general agent who does business for any one that pays him. Thus a trader in the mufassal, who habitually sends grain to Madras for sale by a firm of commission agents whose business it is to sell goods for others on commission, cannot be said to “carry on business” in Madras (d). So a firm in England, carrying on business in the name A. B. & Co., which employs upon the usual terms a Bombay firm carrying on business in the name of C. D. & Co., to act as the English firm’s commission agents in Bombay, does not “carry on business” in Bombay, so as to render itself liable to be sued in Bombay (e).

(2) The person acting as agent must be an agent in the strict sense of the term. The manager of a joint Hindu family is not an “agent” within the meaning of this condition (f).

(3) To constitute “carrying on business” at a certain place, the essential part of the business must take place in that place. Therefore, a retail dealer in the mufassal who gains his livelihood by the profit upon sales of his goods in the mufassal cannot be said to “carry on business” in Bombay, merely because he has an agent in Bombay to receive his goods from Europe, and to make purchases for him in Bombay and to forward the same to him up-country. In order that such a dealer may be said to “carry on business” in Bombay, it must also be shown that the agent made sales on behalf of the dealer in Bombay (g).

Has a British Indian Court jurisdiction to entertain a suit against a foreigner, who does not reside in British India, upon a cause of action that has arisen in a foreign country, if the foreigner carried on business through an agent in the local limits of that Court’s jurisdiction? This question was raised in a recent case before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, but it was not decided by their Lordships (h).

16, 17.

Business.—A Hindu priest, who receives presents and offerings from his followers in Bombay, and keeps an account thereof, cannot be said to “carry on business” in Bombay, though the offerings may be on so large a scale as to oblige him to employ servants to collect and keep an account of them. The expression “carry on business” is intended to relate to business in which a man may contract debts and ought to be liable to be sued by persons having business transactions with him (r). Zamindari business is not business of the kind contemplated by s. 20 (j) or by s. 16 or s. 19.

Personally works for gain.—The Government of this country cannot be said to “work for gain,” for whatever income is obtained by it is held for the benefit the Indian Exchequer (k).

17. [S. 19.] Where a suit is to obtain relief respecting, or compensation for wrong to, immoveable property situate within the jurisdiction of different Courts, the suit may be instituted in any Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction any portion of the property is situate :

Suits for immoveable property situate within jurisdiction of different Courts.

Provided that, in respect of the value of the subject-matter of the suit, the entire claim is cognizable by such Court.

Scope and object of the section.—The provisions of this section are intended for the benefit of suitors, the object being to avoid plurality of suits (l). A sues B in a Court in district X on a mortgage of two properties one situate in district X and the other in district Y. The Court in district X has jurisdiction under this section to order the sale not only of the property in district X, but the property in district Y, and also to sell in execution of its decree the property in district Y (m). It is not necessary for A to bring two suits one in the Court in district X and the other in the Court in district Y. In the above case there are two properties situate in different districts. It does not make any difference if it is one entire property situate in different districts (n). The same principle applies to suits for partition (o) and to suits for the recovery of immoveable property (p). But no partition can be made of property situated outside British India (pp).

A sues B in a Court in district X to recover possession of two properties one situate in district X and the other in district Y. The suit is compromised as regards the property situate in district X. This does not take away the jurisdiction of the Court in district X to proceed with the suit as regards the property situate in district Y, unless it be shown that the compromise was a mere contrivance to defeat the policy of the rule of procedure as to local jurisdiction (q).

Chartered High Courts.—This section does not apply to Chartered High Courts in the exercise of their original civil jurisdiction (see s. 120). See notes to s. 16, “Chartered High Courts”.

within the local limits of the jurisdiction of which of two or more Courts any immoveable property is situate, any one of those Courts may, if satisfied that there is ground for the alleged uncertainty, record a statement to that effect and thereupon proceed to entertain and dispose of any suit relating to that property and its decree in the suit shall have the same effect as if the property were situate within the local limits of its jurisdiction :

Provided that the suit is one with respect to which the Court is competent as regards the nature and value of the suit to exercise jurisdiction.

(2) Where a statement has not been recorded under sub section (1), and an objection is taken before an appellate or revisional Court that a decree or order in a suit relating to such property was made by a Court not having jurisdiction where the property is situate, the appellate or revisional Court shall not allow the objection unless in its opinion there was, at the time of the institution of the suit, no reasonable ground for uncertainty as to the Court having jurisdiction with respect thereto and there has been a consequent failure of justice.

20. [S. 17.] Subject to the limitations aforesaid, every suit shall be instituted in a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction—

- (a) the defendant, or each of the defendants where there are more than one, at the time of the commencement of the suit, actually and voluntarily resides, or carries on business, or personally works for gain ; or
- (b) any of the defendants, where there are more than one, at the time of the commencement of the suit, actually and voluntarily resides, or carries on business, or personally works for gain, provided that in such case either the leave of the Court is given, or the defendants who do not reside, or carry on business, or personally work for gain, as aforesaid, acquiesce in such institution ; or

Explanation I.—Where a person has a permanent dwelling at one place and also a temporary residence at another place, he shall be deemed to reside at both places in respect of any cause of action arising at the place where he has such temporary residence.

Explanation II.—A corporation shall be deemed to carry on business at its sole or principal office in British India or, in respect of any cause of action arising at any place where it has also a subordinate office, at such place.

He may also sue them at Calcutta, where B resides, or at Delhi, where C resides; but in each of these cases, if the non-resident defendant objects, the suit cannot proceed without the leave of the Court.

Alterations in the section.—The words “wholly or in part” in cl. (c) are new. Explanation III to s. 17 of the Code of 1882, which related to causes of action in case of contracts, has been omitted in view of the addition of the words “wholly or in part” in cl. (c). See notes below “Cause of action in suits on contracts.”

Chartered High Courts.—This section does not apply to Chartered High Courts in the exercise of their original civil jurisdiction (see s. 120).

Scope of the section.—The provisions of this section are to be read subject to the provisions of sections 16 and 19 (s). At common law, actions are transitory, such as actions on tort or contract, or local, such as actions of ejectment from land. Section 16 deals with local actions. Sections 19 and 20 deal with transitory actions. If we divide actions into real, personal, and mixed, we may say that section 16 deals with real and mixed actions. Mixed actions stand midway between real and personal actions; suits for compensation for wrong to immoveable property are an example of this kind. Real actions, that is, actions against the res or property, must be brought in the forum rei sitæ, that is, the place where the property is situate; and so must mixed actions. But personal actions may be brought in any place where the defendant can be found and hence they are called transitory actions as distinguished from local actions.

The present section provides that suits falling under it may be brought at the plaintiff's option (1) either where the cause of action arises or (2) where the defendant resides, or carries on business, or personally works for gain (t).

Actually and voluntarily resides.—See notes under the same head on p. 80 above. Note that the word “residence” in this section comprises also the temporary lodging of a defendant in respect of a cause of action arising at the place where he has such temporary lodging: see Explanation I to the section.

Carries on business.—See notes under the same head on p. 81 above. With this read Explanation II.

Acquiesce.—Under the Code of 1882 it was held that if a defendant, who did not reside within the local limits of the Court in which the suit was brought, did not apply for a stay of proceedings under section 20 of that Code, he should be deemed to have “acquiesced” within the meaning of clause (b) (u). But section 20 of the Code of 1882 has been omitted from this Code, there being sufficient provision made for transfers under section 22 of this Code. It would, therefore, seem that a defendant, who does not apply for a transfer under section 22 will be deemed to have “acquiesced” within the meaning of clause (b) of the present section.

Leave of Court.—The leave to sue referred to in clause (b) may be given even after the institution of the suit (v).

Cause of action.—"Cause of action" means every fact which it would be necessary for the plaintiff to prove in order to support his right to the judgment of the Court. It does not comprise every piece of evidence which is necessary to prove each fact, but every fact which is necessary to be proved to entitle him to a decree (w). It is a bundle, in other words, of essential facts which it is necessary for the plaintiff to prove before he can succeed in the suit (x). It has no relation whatever to the defence which may be set up by the defendant, nor does it depend upon the character of the relief prayed for by the plaintiff. It refers entirely to the grounds set forth in the plaint as the cause of action, or, in other words, to the media upon which the plaintiff asks the Court to arrive at a conclusion in his favour (y). A cause of action, it need hardly be stated, must be antecedent to the institution of the suit (z).

Cause of action in suits on contracts.—In a suit for damages for breach of contract, the cause of action consists of the making of the contract and of its breach in the place where it ought to be performed (a). Hence in the case of a contract, the whole cause of action would be said to have arisen at a particular place, say Poona, if the contract was made in Poona and the breach of it also took place at Poona. But if the contract was made in Belgaum, and the breach took place at Poona (where it was to be performed), or if it was entered into in Poona, and the breach took place in Belgaum (where it was to be performed), part of the cause of action would be said to have arisen in Belgaum and part in Poona. If the whole cause of action arose in Poona, a suit on the contract could be brought in the Court at Poona. If part only of the cause of action arose in Poona, and part in Belgaum the suit may be instituted in the Poona Court or in the Belgaum Court (b) [see cl. (c)].

As regards the making of a contract it may be said that a contract will be presumed to have been "made" at the place where, on the face of it, it purports to have been made, though it may have been actually made elsewhere. Thus a promissory note dated at Bellary will be presumed to have been made at Bellary, though it may have been actually signed at another place (c). When a contract is concluded by postal communication, it will be deemed to have been "made" at the place where the letter of acceptance is posted (d). And where the acceptance of a proposal consists of the performance of the condition of the proposal, the contract will be deemed to have been "made" at the place where the condition is performed (e). A, residing at Karwar sends a sum of money to his agent in Bombay to pay the same to B, a resident of Bombay, if B undertakes to purchase goods for him in Bombay and ship them to him at Karwar. B receives the money, but fails to ship the goods. A sues B at Karwar to recover the amount paid to him. The Court at Karwar has no jurisdiction to entertain the suit, for the whole cause of action arose in Bombay. The contract is made in Bombay, for the money is received by B in Bombay. And the place of performance is also Bombay, for the goods are to be purchased in Bombay and shipped from that place (f).

As regards breach of a contract, it is to be noted that where a place is named in the contract for its performance, the suit may be brought in the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the contract was to be performed or performance thereof completed. Where no place of performance is named in the contract, the intention of the parties must guide the Court in determining the place of performance (g). The mere fact that the creditor is described in a promissory note as residing at K does not make K the place of payment so as to give jurisdiction to the Court at K (h). Further, if any money is or becomes payable by one party to a contract to another in performance of the contract, and the money is not paid, the suit may be brought in the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction such money was expressly or impliedly payable. Thus where A and B entered into an agreement at Rutlam to carry on business in partnership at Muttra, and after the business was carried on for some time the partnership was dissolved, and a sum of Rs. 1,00,000 was found due by B to A on taking the accounts at Muttra, it was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that A could sue B at Rutlam to recover the amount, that being the place where the contract was made, or he could sue him at Muttra, that being the place where the balance was struck and the amount became due and payable (i). Similarly, if goods are sold according to sample in Bombay and they are paid for in Bombay, but under the contract they are to be delivered at Allahabad, the purchaser may sue the vendor in the Allahabad Court for recovering back the price of the goods if they are not according to the sample. The question in such a case is whether the place of delivery is an essential part of the contract (j). In a Bombay case, A, a merchant in Bombay, ordered goods from B, a commission agent at Phulgaon. A sued B in Bombay for the amount due to him at the foot of the accounts between him and B. The Court held that as (1) instructions were sent by A to B from Bombay, (2) accounts were rendered to A at Bombay, and (3) demand was made for the payment of the amount due from Bombay, the payment of money was to be in Bombay, and a material part of the cause of action arose in Bombay (k). But where A sued B at Madras for services rendered to B at Hyderabad where also the contract was made, alleging that after the work had been done, B promised to pay in Madras, it was held that as there was no consideration for the promise to pay in Madras, there was no contract in law to pay in Madras, and therefore there was no breach of a contract in Madras so as to enable A to sue B in Madras (l).

D draws a hundi at Benares on his firm at Bombay in favour of B. P. & Co., a firm at Calcutta. The hundi is then endorsed by B. P. & Co. at Calcutta to P. The endorsement having taken place in Calcutta, part of the cause of action arose at Calcutta. P may therefore sue D in the Calcutta High Court after obtaining leave to sue under clause 12 of the Charter (m). No leave would be necessary under the present section if the endorsement took place outside the limits of the original jurisdiction of a Chartered High Court.

Before leaving this subject it may be observed that the corresponding section of the Code of 1882 contained an Explanation being Explanation III, which ran as follows:

“Explanation III.—In suits arising out of contract, the cause of action arises within the meaning of this section at any of the following places, namely:

- (i) the place where the contract was made;

(g) Dhunjisha v. Ffords (1887) 11 Bom. 640;
Muhammad v. Muhammad (1916) P. R.
 no. 2, p. 3.
 (h) Raman v. Gopalachari (1908) 81 Mad. 223.
 (i) Lucknee Chund v. Zohour Mul (1880) 8

 (1881) 4 Mad. 372.

(j) Sheo Charan v. Taj Bhai (1917) 39 All. 368.
 (k) Motilal v. Surajmal (1906) 30 Bom. 167.
 (l) Seshagiri Row v. Nawab Askur Jung (1907)

 451.

- S. 20. (ii) the place where the contract was to be performed or performance thereof completed ;
- (iii) the place where, in performance of the contract, any money to which the suit relates was expressly or impliedly payable."

That Explanation was added into the old section in the year 1888 to remove a doubt as to whether a suit on a contract could be instituted in the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the cause of action arose only in part. The doubt arose from the fact that that section provided for the institution of a suit in the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction "the cause of action" arose, and it was not clear whether the expression "cause of action" meant the whole cause of action or included also a part of the cause of action. Explanation III left no doubt that a suit on a contract could be instituted in a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the cause of action arose wholly or in part. As Explanation III was confined to suits on contracts only the question arose whether a suit other than one on a contract could be instituted in a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the cause of action arose in part only, and it was held that as in the case of suits arising out of contract, so in the case of other suits, it was enough to give a Court jurisdiction over the suit if the cause of action arose in part only within the local limits of the Court (n). The addition of the words "wholly or in part" in cl. (c) after the words "cause of action" makes it quite clear that a suit, whether it arises out of contract or not, may be instituted in a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the cause of action arose wholly or in part (o). It has also rendered Explanation III unnecessary, and the same has accordingly been omitted. But decisions bearing on that Explanation are still good law, and they have been retained in the present commentary.

Cause of action in other suits.—A suit for restitution of conjugal rights may be brought in the Court of the place where the husband resides, or it may be brought in the Court of the place where the wife resides (p). A suit by a guardian for the custody of his ward removed by the defendant from Allahabad to Lahore may be brought in the Court at Lahore, or it may be brought in the Court at Allahabad (q). A suit for damages for infringement of a trade mark may be brought in the Court of the place where the defendant resides or in the Court of the place where the defendant publishes advertisements constituting infringement of the trade mark (r).

Place of suing where a decree is impeached on the ground of fraud :—

(1) A obtains a decree against B in the Court at Krishnagar (in Nadia). The decree is sent for execution to the Court at Katwa (in Burdwan). In execution of the decree B's property in Katwa is sold by the Katwa Court. B sues A in the Katwa Court (1) to have the decree set aside on the ground that it was obtained by fraud, and (2) to set aside the sale. The question is whether the Katwa Court has jurisdiction to entertain the suit. Here the cause of action consists of two parts, one of which arose at Krishnagar, being the passing of the decree, and the other at Katwa, being the sale of B's property there. Part of the cause of action having arisen at Katwa, the Katwa Court has jurisdiction to entertain the suit under this section, though the decree sought to be set aside was passed by the Krishnagar Court (s).

(2) A obtains a decree against B in the High Court of Calcutta. The decree is transmitted for execution to the District Court of Cawnpore. A applies for execution of the decree to the District Court of Cawnpore by attachment and sale of B's property in Cawnpore. B sues A in the District Court of Cawnpore (1) for a declaration that the decree is inoperative the same having been obtained by fraud, and (2) for an injunction restraining A from executing the decree against his property in Cawnpore. Here also part of the cause of action having arisen at Cawnpore, namely, the application by A to the Cawnpore Court to attach B's property in Cawnpore, the Cawnpore Court has jurisdiction to entertain the suit, though the decree impeached as fraudulent was passed by the High Court of Calcutta (t).

(3) A obtains a decree against B in the Small Cause Court at Calcutta. The decree is transferred for execution to the Munsif's Court at Agra. B sues A in the Munsif's Court at Agra to have the decree set aside on the ground that it was obtained by fraud. Has the Agra Court jurisdiction to entertain the suit? It has been held that it has not, for the suit being solely to set aside the decree, there is no part of the cause of action that has arisen in Agra. The only cause of action is the obtaining of the decree by fraud and it arose in Calcutta where the decree was obtained (v).

Suits against corporations: Explanation II.—Irrespective of the Companies Act, the domicile of a trading company is fixed by the situation of its principal place of business (v), that is to say, its chief office, where the central management and control are actually to be found (w). In the case of a company registered under the Companies Act the controlling power is, as a fact, generally exercised at the registered office, and that office is therefore, not only for the purposes of the Act, but for other purposes, the principal place of business (x). This is not, however, necessarily the case (y); and the question whether that or some other place is the principal place of business of the company is in each case a pure question of fact to be determined upon a scrutiny of the course of business and trading (z).

Clause 12 of the Charter.—As already stated, sections 16 and 20 do not apply to Chartered High Courts. Under clause 12 of the Charter, the High Courts of Calcutta, Madras and Bombay are empowered to try the following suits in the exercise of their ordinary original civil jurisdiction :—

I. Suits for land, if the land is situated wholly within the local limits of the said jurisdiction; or, if a part thereof only is situated within the said limits, with the leave of the Court previously obtained.

II. Suits other than those for land,

- (i) if the whole cause of action has arisen within such limits;
- (ii) if part only of the cause of action has arisen within such limits with the leave of the Court previously obtained;
- (iii) if the defendant, at the time of the commencement of the suit, dwells, or carries on business, or personally works for gain, within such local limits.

Distinguishing cl. 12 of the Charter from the provisions of the present section, it may be said that in the case of a suit other than a suit for land, a Chartered High Court has no jurisdiction to entertain the suit, unless the whole cause of action has arisen within the local limits of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction, or if part only of the cause of action has arisen within such limits, unless the leave of the Court has been previously obtained. No such leave is necessary if the suit is brought in a Court to which the provisions of the present section apply : see cl. (c).

Suits against non-resident foreigners.—We now proceed to consider the applicability of the section where the defendant is a foreigner residing out of British India. If a foreigner (that is, a non-British subject) resides, or himself carries on business, or personally works for gain, in British India, it is clear that he is amenable to the jurisdiction of British Indian Courts. But what if a foreigner does not reside or does not himself carry on business, or personally work for gain, in British India, and

- (1) the cause of action arises within the local limits of a British Indian Court, or
- (2) the cause of action also does not arise within the local limits of any British Indian Court (i.e., it arises in a foreign country), but he carries on business through his agent within the local limits of a British Indian Court ?

As to case (1), it is settled that a non-resident foreigner, who is a subject of a protected Native State, may be sued in the Court of British India, if the cause of action arises within the jurisdiction of such Court (a). Thus if A, a subject of the Native State of Sangli, and resident therein, borrows money from B at Belgaum, B may sue A for recovery of the money in the Belgaum Court, for the cause of action has arisen at Belgaum.

As to case (2), the point was raised in a recent case before their Lordships of the Privy Council, but was not decided by their Lordships (b).

21. [New.] No objection as to the place of suing shall be allowed by any appellate or revisional Court unless such objection was taken in the Court of first instance at the earliest possible opportunity and in all cases where issues are settled at or before such settlement, and unless there has been a consequent failure of justice.

Objections to jurisdiction.

This section is new. It proceeds on the lines of the Suits Valuation Act, 1887, s. 11.

Scope of the section.—This section relates to objections as to the place of suing and has reference to sections 15 to 20 above. The section does not deal with objections going to the nullity of a decree or order on the ground of want of jurisdiction. Thus the Court of a district subject to the Code of Civil Procedure has no jurisdiction under s. 17 to entertain a suit so far as it claims a sale of mortgaged land situated in a scheduled district [see. s. 1 (3)]. If a decree, therefore, is passed by such a Court for a sale of land so situated, it can be set aside although no objection was taken to the jurisdiction in the Court of first instance (c).

Absence of jurisdiction.—Where a Court has no inherent jurisdiction over the subject-matter of a suit, its decree is a nullity, though the parties may have consented to the jurisdiction of the Court (d). The reason is that jurisdiction over the subject-matter of a suit is given only by law, and cannot be conferred by consent of parties. “When the Judge has no inherent jurisdiction over the subject-matter of a suit, the parties cannot, by their mutual consent, convert it into a proper judicial process, although they may constitute the Judge their arbitrator, and be bound by his decision on the merits when those are submitted to him” (e). See notes below, “Waiver of plea to jurisdiction.” See also Presidency Small Cause Court Act, 1882, s. 20.

Objection to jurisdiction, when to be raised.—The plea of want of jurisdiction may be taken at any stage of the proceedings (f). Thus it may be taken for the first time in appeal (g), or in second appeal (h), or revision (i), and even after remand by the High Court in second appeal (j), provided that in all these cases the objection is patent on the face of the proceedings. When a decision given by a Court having no inherent jurisdiction to try a case is sought to be set aside in revision, the High Court may, in the exercise of its discretion, refuse to set aside the order if greater evil will result from setting aside the order than from allowing the order to stand (k).

In a recent case, when the objection to jurisdiction was taken in the Court of the first instance, but it was not taken on appeal to the High Court nor on the appeal to the King in Council, and the point was again raised in argument before the Privy Council their Lordships entertained the objection, and said: “Seeing that it is a question of jurisdiction, and depends on no disputed facts, their Lordships are of opinion that they cannot decline to entertain it although it is not specifically raised on the appeal, more especially as it necessarily presented itself in the argument” (l).

There are two cases, however, in which an objection on the ground of want of jurisdiction will not be allowed by an appellate or revisional Court, namely:—

1. Where a suit has been instituted in a Court which, having regard to the provisions of ss. 15 to 20, has no jurisdiction to entertain it. In such a case it is provided by the present section that the objection as to jurisdiction will not be allowed in appeal or in revision, (1) unless such objection was taken in the Court of first instance at the earliest possible opportunity and in all cases where issues are settled at or before such settlement, and (2) unless there has been a consequent failure of justice (m). Note that the section is confined to objections to jurisdiction as regards the place of suing.

2. Where a party has under-valued his claim, and brought the suit in a Court which would have had no jurisdiction to try the suit had the suit been properly valued. In such case, it is provided by the Suits Valuation Act, 1887, s. 11, that the objection as to jurisdiction will not be entertained in appeal or in revision, (1) unless the objection was taken before the Court of first instance at or before the settlement of issues, or (2)

- S. 21. unless the under-valuation has prejudicially affected the disposal of the suit on its merits (n).

In a recent case a suit which, having regard to its pecuniary value, ought to have been instituted in a Court of a lower grade was instituted in a Court of a higher grade, but no objection was taken to it by the defendant. An appeal from the decree was preferred to the High Court. The defendant contended that having regard to the value of the subject-matter of the suit, the appeal lay only to the District Court and that the appeal to the High Court was not competent. The Judicial Committee held that the defendant not having objected to the jurisdiction of the trial Judge, could not dispute the jurisdiction of the High Court to entertain the appeal (o).

Waiver of plea to jurisdiction.—Where a Court has no jurisdiction over the subject-matter of a suit, no waiver on the part of the defendant can confer jurisdiction upon the Court. “When no jurisdiction exists no action on the part of the plaintiff, no inaction on the part of the defendant, can invest the Court with any of the elements of power or of vitality, so as to convert the proceeding before it into a proper judicial process” (p). The question of waiver to the plea of jurisdiction can only arise where a Court has jurisdiction over the subject-matter, but there are irregularities in the initial procedure which, if objected to at the time, would have led to the dismissal of the suit. As observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council “when in a cause which the Judge is competent to try, the parties without objection join issue and go to trial upon the merits the defendant cannot subsequently dispute his jurisdiction upon the ground that there were irregularities in the initial procedure which, if objected to at the time, would have led to the dismissal of the suit” (q). A sues B for infringement of a patent in the Court of a Subordinate Judge. The Subordinate Judge has no jurisdiction to try the suit and it ought to have been instituted in the District Court. A then applies to the District Court under s. 24 below for a transfer of the suit to its file. B may object to the transfer, for an order of transfer under s. 24 could not be made unless the suit was in the first instance brought in a Court having jurisdiction. If B does not object, and the order of transfer is made, it is open to him to object even after the order has been made, and the Court is bound to entertain the objection. But if he waives his objection to the trial of the suit by the District Court, and agrees that the case should be tried on its merits by that Court, he will be precluded by reason of his consent from subsequently disputing the jurisdiction of the Court. Note that here the District Court has jurisdiction to try the suit. But the suit having been first brought in the Court of a Subordinate Judge which had no jurisdiction to try the suit, the District Court could not transfer the suit to its file. If the order of transfer is made, it is an “irregularity in the initial procedure,” and if no objection is made thereto, the decree will bind the parties. In the undermentioned case, there was no evidence of waiver of the plea to the jurisdiction on the part of B, and the Privy Council held that A’s suit having been brought in the Court of the Subordinate Judge should be dismissed (r).

Objection to jurisdiction : procedure to be followed.—Where a suit is instituted in a Court that has no jurisdiction to entertain it, the proper course is not

21-23.

22. [S. 22.] Where a suit may be instituted in any one of two or more Courts and is instituted in one of such Courts, any defendant, after notice to the other parties, may, at the earliest possible opportunity and in all cases where issues are settled at or before such settlement, apply to have the suit transferred to another Court, and the Court to which such application is made, after considering the objections of the other parties (if any), shall determine in which of the several Courts having jurisdiction the suit shall proceed.

Power to transfer suits which may be instituted in more than one Court.

Power of Court to stay suit pending before it.—Sections 22-24 deal with the power of the Court to transfer, not with the power of the Court to stay. But a Court has inherent jurisdiction to stay any suit which is an abuse of the process of the Court. Whether the institution of a suit in a particular Court is an abuse of the process of the Court is a question of fact in each case. A sued B in the Bombay High Court for damages for defamation alleged to be contained in the Bombay Gazette, a daily journal published in Bombay. A and B both reside at Wardha in the Central Provinces. B applies for an order that the suit be stayed and the plaint returned to A in order that, if A thought proper, it may be presented to the Court at Wardha. The grounds of the application are that neither he (B) nor the plaintiff (A) resides or carries on business in Bombay, and that all his (B's) witnesses reside at Wardha. These facts are not sufficient to support B's application for a stay of the suit in the Bombay Court (t).

After notice and at or before settlement of issues.—The words of this section are mandatory, and therefore notice must be given before the application is made, and the application must be made, in a case where issues are settled, at or before such settlement (u).

Power of High Court to stay suit pending in another Court.—See notes under the same head to O. 39, r. 1.

23. [Ss. 22, 23, 24.] (1) Where the several Courts having jurisdiction are subordinate to the same Appellate Court, an application under section 22 shall be made to the Appellate Court.

(3) Where such Courts are subordinate to different High Courts, the application shall be made to the High Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the Court in which the suit is brought is situate.

Note that s. 20 of the Code of 1882, which provided for a stay of proceedings, has been omitted, as sufficient provision has been made for transfers under the present section.

Two suits in two Courts under different High Courts.—Where two suits between the same parties are pending in two Courts under two different High Courts, either High Court may direct the suit pending in the Court subordinate to it to be transferred to the other Court (v).

24. [S. 25.] (1) On the application of any of the parties and after notice to the parties and after hearing such of them as desire to be heard, or of its own motion without such notice, the High Court or the District Court may at any stage—

General power of transfer and withdrawal.

- (a) transfer any suit, appeal or other proceeding pending before it for trial or disposal to any Court subordinate to it and competent to try or dispose of the same, or
- (b) withdraw any suit, appeal or other proceeding pending in any Court subordinate to it, and
 - (i) try or dispose of the same ; or
 - (ii) transfer the same for trial or disposal to any Court subordinate to it and competent to try or dispose of the same ; or
 - (iii) retransfer the same for trial or disposal to the Court from which it was withdrawn.

(2) Where any suit or proceeding has been transferred or withdrawn under sub-section (1), the Court which thereafter tries such suit may, subject to any special directions in the case of an order of transfer, either re-try it or proceed from the point at which it was transferred or withdrawn.

(3) For the purposes of this section, Courts of Additional and Assistant Judges shall be deemed to be subordinate to the District Court.

S. 24.

(4) The Court trying any suit transferred or withdrawn under this section from a Court of Small Causes shall, for the purposes of such suit, be deemed to be a Court of Small Causes.

Alterations in the section.—These have been noted in their appropriate place in the commentary below.

Form.—For form of notice of application, see App. H, form no. 2.

Jurisdiction.—An order for the transfer of a suit from one Court to another cannot be made under this section unless the suit has been in the first instance brought in a Court having jurisdiction; such an order, if made, is void. And even though it may have been made by consent of parties, it is open to either party, notwithstanding such consent, to contend that it is void. But if, after the transfer is made, the parties without objection join issue and go to trial upon the merits, the order of transfer cannot subsequently be impeached (w). See notes to s. 21, “Waiver of plea to jurisdiction”, p. 92 above. The same rule applies to appeals (x).

General powers of transfer.—It is a well-known maxim of law that the plaintiff is the person to choose where his suit shall be brought provided that he chooses a forum which the law allows him to choose. The transfer of a suit is an extraordinary matter, and the Court should not transfer a suit against the plaintiff's will without good cause. Where an application, therefore, was made by the defendants for the transfer of a suit on a mortgage from the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Benares to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Allahabad on the ground that a very large proportion of the properties mortgaged by the defendants to the plaintiff was situated in Allahabad and that most of their witnesses resided in Allahabad, it was held that those facts did not constitute a good cause for transferring the case and the application was refused (y).

“After giving notice.”—Want of notice does not render the order of transfer void (z).

“At any stage.”—Under the corresponding section of the Code of 1882, it was held by the High Courts of Bombay, Madras and Allahabad that a suit could be transferred or withdrawn at any stage, though it might be part heard, and even in the course of execution proceedings (a). On the other hand, it was held by the High Court of Calcutta that no order of transfer could be made after the hearing had once commenced, and that the Court had no power to make an order of transfer in execution proceedings (b). The words “at any stage” have been added to make it clear that a suit can be transferred even after the hearing has commenced.

“Pending before it.”—Under the corresponding section of the Code of 1882 it was held that a District Judge had no power to transfer to a Subordinate Court a suit pending before himself (c). Under cl. (a) of the present section the High Court and the District Court have the power conferred upon them to transfer a suit or appeal, though it may be pending before them.

District Court.—District Court in this section means a Court of unlimited pecuniary jurisdiction. An order of transfer under this section cannot therefore be made by an Assistant Judge whose pecuniary jurisdiction is limited to suits of a certain value (d).

"Clause (a): Court subordinate to it."—W obtains a decree in a suit filed by her in the Court of the Divisional Judge, Nagpur Division, for dissolution of marriage under the Indian Divorce Act 4 of 1869. The decree is then confirmed by the High Court of Bombay. A then applies for alimony to the High Court of Bombay. The proper Court to entertain the application is not the High Court, but the Nagpur Court. Nor has the High Court power under this section to transfer the proceedings to the Nagpur Court, the latter Court not being a Court subordinate to the High Court within the meaning of cl. (a) of sub-s. (1) of this section (e).

Clause (b): other proceeding.—A District Court has power under this clause to withdraw to its own file proceedings in execution transmitted by it to a Subordinate Court (f).

Re-transfer.—Under the corresponding section of the Code of 1882 it was held that where a District Judge had once transferred a case to his own file from the file of a Subordinate Court, he could not afterwards re-transfer the case to that Court (g). Under the present section he has such power: see cl. (b), sub-cl. (iii).

Suit transferred or withdrawn from a Court of Small Causes.—It has been held by the High Court of Allahabad (h) and Madras (i), that the expression "Court of Small Causes" in the last clause of this section includes a Court vested with the powers of a Court of Small Causes. On the other hand, it has been held by the High Courts of Bombay and Calcutta that that expression means a Court of Small Causes constituted under the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, 1887, and that it does not include a Court vested with the powers of a Court of Small Causes under another Act (j).

As a result of the provisions of sub-s. (4), the procedure of the Court to which a suit is transferred from a Court of Small Causes is governed by the provisions of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (k), and, further, no appeal lies from the decree of that Court in cases in which no appeal lies from decrees of a Court of Small Causes (l).

(2) The law applicable to any suit, appeal or proceeding so transferred shall be the law which the Court in which the suit, appeal or proceeding was originally instituted ought to have applied to such case.

The object of this section is to empower the Governor-General in Council to transfer cases from one High Court to another under certain circumstances. The section proceeds on the analogy of s. 527 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898.

INSTITUTION OF SUITS.

26. [S. 48.] Every suit shall be instituted by the presentation of a plaint or in such other manner as may be prescribed.

Changes introduced by the section.—The words “or in such other manner as may be prescribed” are new.

SUMMONS AND DISCOVERY.

27. [S. 64.] Where a suit has been duly instituted, a summons may be issued to the defendant to appear and answer the claim and may be served in manner prescribed.

Summons to defendant.

(2) The Court to which such summons is sent shall, upon receipt thereof, proceed as if it had been issued by such Court and shall then return the summons to the Court of issue together with the record (if any) of its proceedings with regard thereto.

See notes to O. 5, r. 23.

29. [S. 650A.] Summonses issued by any Civil or Revenue Court situate beyond the limits of British India may be sent to the Courts in British India and served as if they had been issued by such Courts :

Ss.
29-32. Provided that the Courts issuing such summonses have been established or continued by the authority of the Governor-General in Council, or that the Governor-General in Council has, by notification in the Gazette of India, declared the provisions of this section to apply to such Courts.

By notification.—For notifications issued under this section, see General Statutory Rules and Orders, Vol. I, pp. 642-655, and Vol. IV, pp. 682-684.

30. [New.] Subject to such conditions and limitations as may be prescribed, the Court may, at any time, either of its own motion or on the application of any party,—

Power to order discovery and the like.

(a) make such orders as may be necessary or reasonable in all matters relating to the delivery and answering of interrogatories, the admission of documents and facts, and the discovery, inspection, production, impounding and return of documents or other material objects producible as evidence ;

(b) issue summonses to persons whose attendance is required either to give evidence or to produce documents or such other objects as aforesaid ;

32. [New.] The Court may compel the attendance of any person to whom a summons has been issued under section 30 and for that purpose may—

Penalty for default.

(a) issue a warrant for his arrest ;

- (b) attach and sell his property ;
- (c) impose a fine upon him not exceeding five hundred rupees ;
- (d) order him to furnish security for his appearance and in default commit him to the civil prison.

Ss.
32-34.

JUDGMENT AND DECREE.

33. [S. 198.] The Court, after the case has been heard, shall pronounce judgment, and on such judgment a decree shall follow.

See O. 20, r. 1.

On such judgment a decree shall follow.—Under this section it is imperative that a decree shall follow the judgment and that it is the duty of the Court to comply with the provisions of the law. Hence where no decree is drawn up, and an appeal is preferred from the judgment, the appeal should not be dismissed, but time should be given to the appellant to apply to the Court which passed the decree for drawing up the decree (m).

INTEREST.

34. [S. 209.] (1) Where and in so far as a decree is for the payment of money, the Court may, in the decree, order interest at such rate as the Court deems reasonable to be paid on the principal sum adjudged, from the date of the suit to the date of the decree, in addition to any interest adjudged on such principal sum for any period prior to the institution of the suit, with further interest at such rates as the Court deems reasonable on the aggregate sum so adjudged, from the date of the decree to the date of payment, or to such earlier date as the Court thinks fit.

(2) Where such a decree is silent with respect to the payment of further interest on such aggregate sum as aforesaid from the date of the decree to the date of payment or other earlier date, the Court shall be deemed to have refused such interest, and a separate suit therefor shall not lie.

Scope of the section.—This section applies only where the decree is for the payment of "money." It does not apply where the decree is for the enforcement of a mortgage or charge. See notes below under the head "Interest in suits for enforcement of mortgage."

S. 34. The three divisions of Interest.—Interest that may be awarded to a plaintiff in a suit for money may be divided into three heads, according to the period for which it is allowed, namely—

- (1) interest accrued due prior to the institution of the suit on the principal sum adjudged (as distinguished from the principal sum claimed);
- (2) additional interest on the principal sum adjudged, from the date of the suit to the date of the decree, “at such rate as the Court deems reasonable;”
- (3) further interest on the aggregate sum adjudged, i.e., the principal sum plus interest, from the date of the decree to (i) the date of realization or (ii) to such earlier date as the Court thinks fit, “at such rate as the Court deems reasonable.”

This section does not apply to the first head of interest. It applies only to the second and third heads.

1. Interest prior to date of suit.—As has just been said, this head of interest does not come within the purview of the present section. It is governed by other enactments to be presently noted. The subject may be considered under the following two heads :

- (1) where there is a stipulation for the payment of interest at a fixed rate ;
- (2) where there is no stipulation at all for the payment of interest.

1. If the rate of interest is stipulated, the Court must allow that rate up to the date of the suit, however high it may be [Usury Laws Repeal Act 28 of 1855, s. 2]. But if the rate is penal, the Court may award interest at such rate as it deems reasonable [Indian Contract Act, 1872, s. 74]. Even if the rate is not penal, the Court may reduce it if the interest is excessive and the transaction was substantially unfair [Usurious Loans Act 10 of 1918, s. 3].

2. If there is no stipulation for payment of interest, the plaintiff is not entitled to interest except in the following three cases :—

(i) Mercantile usage.—When there is no stipulation to pay interest, it may be awarded if there is a mercantile usage to pay interest (n), but not otherwise (o).

(ii) Negotiable Instruments Act 26 of 1888, s. 80.—When no rate of interest is specified in a promissory note or bill of exchange, interest will be awarded at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from the date on which the amount claimed became due and payable.

(iii) Interest Act 32 of 1839.—Where there is no stipulation to pay interest, but the amount claimed is a sum certain (as distinguished from unascertained damages) and is payable at a certain time by virtue of some “written instrument,” the Court will allow interest at a rate not exceeding the current rate of interest from the date on which the amount became payable. If no time is fixed for the payment of the amount, the Court will award interest at the rate aforesaid from the time the creditor demands payment in writing intimating to the debtor that interest will be claimed from the date of such demand up to the date of payment.

II. Interest from date of suit to date of decree.—The rate of interest from the date of the suit to the date of the decree is in the discretion of the Court, and this discretion is not excluded even if a fixed rate is mentioned in the contract as payable "up to realization" (p). But though the rate of interest for the aforesaid period is discretionary, the Court should, in the exercise of that discretion, award interest at the contract rate, unless it would be inequitable to do so (q).

(n) Doolubdas v. Ramlall (1850) 5 I. A. 109, 136 (Bombay); Juggomohun v. Manickchund (1859) 7 M. I. A. 263 (Calcutta).

(o) Juggomohun v. Kaisreechund (1862) 9 M. I. A. 260 (Calcutta).

III. Interest from date of decree to date of realization.—The rate of interest from the date of the decree to the date of realization is also in the discretion of the Court. "The plaintiff getting security of a decree, has his interest reduced in the generality of cases" (r). If the Court awards interest from the date of the decree, but no rate is specified, the decree-holder will be entitled to interest at the Court rate, which is 6 per cent. (s). But if such interest is not given in the decree, it will be deemed to have been refused: see sub-sec. (2).

Illustration of the above rules.—A lends Rs. 5,000 to B to be repaid with interest at the rate of 24 per cent. per annum. In a suit by A to recover the amount of the loan with interest at the rate aforesaid, it is contended on behalf of B that the rate of interest is penal (Contract Act, s. 74). The Court finds that the rate of interest is not penal nor is the transaction substantially unfair. Hence—

- (1) as regards interest [on Rs. 5,000] from the date of the loan to the date of the suit, the Court must allow it at the contract rate, that is, at the rate of 24 per cent. per annum: Usury Laws Repeal Act, s. 2.
- (2) as regards interest [on Rs. 5,000] from the date of the suit to the date of the decree, the Court may allow it at the contract rate, that is, at the rate of 24 per cent. per annum, or it may in its discretion allow it at a lower rate or may disallow it altogether.
- (3) as regards interest from the date of the decree to the date of realization on the aggregate sum adjudged [i.e., Rs. 5,000 plus the interest adjudged under the above two heads], the Court may allow interest at such rate as it deems reasonable. This rate is usually 6 per cent. As to interest on costs, see s. 35, cl. (3).

Interest in suits for enforcement of mortgage.—The section does not apply to decrees for the enforcement of a mortgage or charge. A decree for foreclosure of a mortgage or for the sale of mortgaged property passed under sections 86 and 88, respectively, of the Transfer of Property Act, now O. 34, rr. 2 and 4, is a decree for the enforcement of the mortgage. Where such a decree is passed, the Court is bound to award to the mortgagee—

- (1) interest on the principal prior to the date of the suit at the rate provided by the mortgage [Usury Laws Repeal Act, s. 2], unless the rate is penal, in which case the Court may award such interest as it deems proper (t) [Contract Act, s. 74], or the interest is excessive and the transaction was substantially unfair in which case also the Court may reduce it [Usurious Loans Act, 1918, s. 3]; and
- (2) interest on the principal from the date of the suit up to the date fixed by the Court for payment of the mortgage-debt, also at the rate provided by the mortgage [Transfer of Property Act, ss. 86, 88, now O. 34, rr. 2 and 4] unless the rate is penal, in which case the Court may award interest at such rate as it deems proper (u), or the interest is excessive and the transaction was substantially unfair in which case also the Court may reduce it;

further, where the decree is for the sale of the mortgaged property, the Court may in its discretion award—

- (3) interest on the aggregate amount of principal, interest and costs, from the date fixed for the payment of the mortgage-debt up to the date of realization or actual payment, at such rate as the Court deems proper. It may be allowed at the Court rate, that is, 6 per cent. per annum (v) or at any other rate (w). The Court is not bound to award it at the contract rate (x).

As to item (3) above, it was contended on behalf of the mortgagor before their Lordships of the Privy Council in Maharaja of Bhartpur v. Kanno Dei (y) that, according to the true construction of s. 88 of the Transfer of Property Act, the Court had no power to award interest subsequent to the date fixed for payment of the mortgage-debt, but this contention was over-ruled, and it was held that that section did not preclude the payment of such interest, and this view was reiterated by their Lordships in Sundar Koer v. Rai Sham Kishen (z) and Raja Gokuldas v. Sheth Ghasiram (a). O. 34, r. 4 which is in the main a reproduction of s. 88 of the Transfer of Property Act, now contains an express provision for the payment of such "subsequent" interest.

As to the rate at which such interest may be allowed, it was contended on behalf of the mortgagee in Sundar Koer v. Rai Sham Kishen (b) that the Court was bound to award the same at the rate provided by the mortgage, and not at the Court rate as was done by the Court below, but this contention was over-ruled, their Lordships holding that the rate was entirely in the discretion of the Court.

Rule of Damdupat.—This is a rule of Hindu Law according to which interest exceeding the amount of the principal sum cannot be recovered at any one time. This rule is in force in the Bombay Presidency (c) and in the Presidency Town of Calcutta (d), but it is not recognized outside that town (e) or in the Madras Presidency (f). The meaning of the rule is that if a Hindu lends Rs. 500 to another Hindu, and the loan is not repaid till the interest amounts to Rs. 600, the lender cannot sue the borrower for more than Rs. 500 for principal and Rs. 500 for interest. But the Court may, under this section award further interest to the lender from the date of the suit, though the aggregate interest may thereby exceed Rs. 500. The reason is that the rule of damdupat ceases to operate from the date of the suit (g). It has been held by the High Court of Madras that the rule of damdupat does not apply where interest is claimed under a mortgage governed by the Transfer of Property Act, 1882 (h). A different view has been taken by the High Courts of Bombay (i) and Calcutta (j). The rule of damdupat does Costs.

(1) Subject to such conditions and limitations as may be prescribed, and to the provisions of any law for the time being in force, the costs of and incident to all suits shall be in the discretion of the Court, and the Court shall have full power to determine by whom or out of what property and to what extent such costs are to be paid, and to give all necessary directions for the purposes aforesaid. The fact that the Court has no jurisdiction to try the suit shall be no bar to the exercise of such powers.

(2) Where the Court directs that any costs shall not follow the event, the Court shall state its reasons in writing.

(3) The Court may give interest on costs at any rate not exceeding six per cent. per annum, and such interest shall be added to the costs and shall be recoverable as such.

“Costs of and incident to suits.”—This expression includes not only costs of suits, but costs of applications in suits.

As regards costs of applications, the Court may make an order as to costs—

- (1) at the time of disposing of the application; or
- (2) it may reserve the consideration of such costs for any future stage of the proceedings, in which case the form of the order as to costs is either—
 - (a) “costs (of the application) reserved,” or
 - (b) “costs (of the application) costs in the cause.”

The costs of applications in a suit, like the costs of a suit, are in the discretion of the Court, whether the order be in form (a) or form (b). The expression “costs costs in the cause” means that if no other order is made at the hearing of the suit as to the costs of the application, the party to whom the costs of the cause or suit are awarded is entitled to the costs of the application. It does not mean that the party to whom the costs of the suit are awarded is entitled as a matter of course to the costs of the application. The Court has a complete discretion to deal with those costs in any manner it thinks fit (l).

Costs to be in the discretion of the Court.—The section provides that the costs of suits and applications shall be in the discretion of the Court. Having regard to this provision, no hard-and-fast rule can be laid down as to costs. But the discretion conferred is very wide. Thus the Court may order the costs to be paid by the parties in definite proportions, or it may order one party to pay to the other a fixed

S. 35. sum in lieu of taxed costs (m). Similarly it may disallow costs to a successful plaintiff, as where the rate of interest claimed by the plaintiff and allowed to him under the Usury Laws Repeal Act (n) is usurious (o); or it may make a successful plaintiff pay the whole costs of the other side (p). But though the discretion conferred upon the Courts by this section is wide, it is a judicial discretion, and must be exercised on fixed principles. Where there are no materials before the Court on which it can exercise its discretion, it is not justified in depriving a successful party of his costs (q). The following are the leading rules on the subject :—

1. Costs shall follow the event.—The general rule is that costs shall follow the event unless the Court, for good reason, otherwise orders. This means that the successful party is entitled to costs unless he is guilty of misconduct or there is some other good cause for not awarding costs to him (r). The Court may not only consider the conduct of the party in the actual litigation, but the matters which led up to the litigation (s). A refusal to go to arbitration is no ground for refusing costs (t); nor is the fact that the plaintiff brought his action without previous communication with the defendant (u). An offer of compromise which the Court considers insufficient is no bar to a plaintiff's right to costs (v).

It is provided by O. 45, r. 1, of the English Rules that “where any action, cause, matter, or issue is tried with a jury, the costs shall follow the event, unless the judge by whom such action, cause, matter, or issue is tried, or the Court, shall, for good cause, otherwise order.” It has been recently held by the House of Lords that the expression “the costs shall follow the event” means that the party who on the whole succeeds in the action gets the general costs of the action, but where the action involves separate issues, whether arising under different causes of action or under one cause of action, the word “event” should be read distributively and the costs of any particular issue go to the party who succeeds upon it. An issue, in this sense, need not go to the whole cause of action, but includes any issue which has a direct and definite event in defeating the claim to judgment in whole or in part. A sued B for 164*l.* for the price of 34 bags of goat's hair sold to B. B, by his defence, pleaded (1) that the goods were not according to sample and were consequently worth 24*l.* less, (2) that there was an overcharge on the bags for 2*l.*, and (3) payment into Court of the balance. B succeeded upon the first issue, but failed on the second. The Court of first instance gave judgment for A for 2*l.* with costs. On appeal it was held by the House of Lords, reversing the decision of the Court of Appeal, that the issue as to quality (1st issue) was an “event”

S. 35.

2. Where a party successfully enforces a legal right, and in no way misconducts himself, he is entitled to costs as of right (x).
3. The fact that a successful defendant has set up the Gaming Act as an answer to the plaintiff's claim is not good cause for depriving him of his costs (y). Nor is the fact that he has pleaded the Statute of Limitations (z).
4. If a plaintiff substantially succeeds, he is entitled to his costs, though he may not have got the precise form of relief he wanted (a).
5. If a plaintiff recovers a less (but not a trifling less) amount than he claimed in the plaint, his costs should be apportioned according to the amount recovered and not to the sum claimed (b).
6. Where a plaintiff succeeds on part of his claim, but fails on the most important and expensive heads of controversy, he may be made to pay the whole costs of the suit to the defendant (c).
7. A successful party ought not to be deprived of part of his costs because some of his witnesses were guilty of exaggeration (d).
8. A person wrongfully made a party should get his costs (e).
9. Where both the parties advance pleas far in excess of their legal rights, each party will be made to bear his own costs (f).
10. Separate costs should not be allowed to defendants if the defence is common to all, or their interests are the same (g).
11. Where two defendants join in defending an action, and judgment is entered for one and against the other, the successful defendant is prima facie entitled to receive from the plaintiff half the costs incurred in the joint defence (h).
12. Where two plaintiffs join in one action, claiming for separate and distinct causes of action, and judgment is entered in favour of one plaintiff and against the other, the successful plaintiff is entitled to recover from the defendant the whole of his general costs of the action, and the defendant is only entitled to recover from the unsuccessful plaintiff the costs occasioned by joining such plaintiff (i).
13. Where the decree of the lower Court is confirmed by the appellate Court, the mere fact that the grounds upon which the confirmation proceeds are not the same as the ratio decidendi of the Court below, is no ground for departing from the rule that the costs shall follow the result (j).

Discretion not to be delegated.—The discretion given to the Court under this section cannot be delegated to the taxing officer (k).

Costs against person not a party to the suit.—An order for costs cannot be made against persons who are not parties to the suit (l). As regards an action for costs against a third person on the ground that he was the mover of and had an interest in a suit, it has been held by the Privy Council that such an action cannot be maintained in the absence of malice and want of probable cause (m).

Costs where relief claimed against defendants in the alternative.—See notes under the same head to O. 1, r. 3.

No separate suit for costs.—If costs are not awarded to a party, he cannot bring a separate suit for costs. If costs are awarded, no separate suit will lie to realise these costs. The proper procedure in such case is if the costs are awarded by a decree, to realise the costs by execution of the decree, and if the costs are awarded by an order, to realise them by executing the order as if it were a decree for the payment of money (n).

"Subject to such conditions and limitations as may be prescribed."—"Prescribed" means prescribed by rules contained in or made under this Act (see s. 2, cls. 16 and 18). As to rules dealing expressly with costs, see O. 11, r. 3 (costs of interrogatories), O. 24, r. 4 (costs on payment into Court), O. 35, r. 3 (costs in interpleader suits).

"The provisions of any law for the time being in force."—The rule contained in this section, which leaves costs to the discretion of the Court, does not affect the provisions of special enactments giving costs in particular cases. Thus it is provided by s. 27 of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, that when the award of the Collector is not upheld by the Court, the costs shall ordinarily be paid by the Collector, unless the Court shall be of opinion that the claim of the party whose property has been acquired was so extravagant, or that he was so negligent in putting his case before the Collector that some deduction from his costs should be made, or that he should pay a part of the Collector's costs. These provisions are not affected by the rule contained in the present section: see Land Acquisition Act, s. 53, and the undermentioned case (o).

Whether an appeal lies for costs only?—The decisions of a Court of law may be divided into three classes, namely,—

- I. Decrees. [Every decree is appealable (s. 96)].
- II. Appealable orders (s. 104).
- III. Non-appealable orders (s. 105).

(o) Ekambara v. Muniswamy (1908) 31 Mad. 328.

I. It is settled that an appeal will lie for costs only when the costs are awarded by a "decree," if the order as to costs involves a question of principle; but it is not settled whether such an appeal will lie, if no question of principle is involved.—A decree contains—

1. a decision on the rights of parties in the suit—this we shall call item No. 1—and
2. a direction as to costs—this we shall call item No. 2.

A party, while appealing from item No. 1 or any part thereof, may appeal also from item No. 2. He may at the hearing abandon the appeal from item No. 1, and yet he is entitled to proceed with the appeal from item No. 2 (p). But can he appeal from item No. 2 alone without appealing from item No. 1? In other words, does an appeal lie on a matter of costs only?

All the High Courts are agreed that such an appeal does lie—

- (1) where the order as to costs involves a matter of principle (q), as where a formal party to a suit against whom no relief is claimed is made to pay the costs of the suit (r): or
- (2) where there has been no real exercise of discretion in making the order as to costs. This may happen when a successful party is made to pay the costs of the losing party (s).

So long as the discretion was in fact exercised, an appellate Court will not interfere, merely because it would itself have exercised the discretion differently (t);

- (3) where the order as to costs proceeds upon a misapprehension of fact or law (u).

For brevity's sake we shall describe all the three cases as cases where a question of "principle" is involved. We may therefore say that it is settled law that an appeal will lie for costs only, where the order as to costs involves a question of principle. But it is not settled whether an appeal will lie for costs only, where no question of principle is involved. The earlier decisions of the Calcutta Court are against allowing an appeal in such a case (v). In a recent Calcutta case, however, the point was regarded as a doubtful one (w). On the other hand, it has been held by the Bombay High Court that an appeal will lie for costs only whether the order as to costs involves a question of principle or not (x). The ground of the Bombay decisions is that every decree being appealable, any part of it is also appealable, though it be the part relating to costs, whether there is a matter of principle involved or not. But even according to the Bombay decisions, though an appeal may lie for costs only, the appellate Court will not as a rule vary or set aside the order of the lower Court as to costs, unless there is a principle involved and the principle has been violated. From a practical point of view, it may be said that the distinction between the Calcutta and Bombay decisions is a distinction without a difference.

S. 35. Does a second appeal lie on a matter of costs only? It has been held that it does lie, but only if there is a question of law or principle involved (y); see s. 100, cl. (a).

II. Appeal from direction as to costs contained in an "appealable order."—The law as to appeal from a decision as to costs contained in an appealable order is the same as that for costs awarded by a decree (z). Substitute "appealable order" for "decree" in the notes under head I above, and we have the statement of law relating to appeals for costs awarded by an appealable order. But no second appeal lies on a matter of costs awarded by an appealable order, for no second appeal lies from any order: see s. 104, sub-sec. (2).

III. Appeal from direction as to costs contained in a "non-appealable order."—Since no appeal lies from a non-appealable order, no appeal can lie from a direction as to costs contained in such order. Thus if an order is made adjourning the hearing of a suit, and one of the parties is directed to pay the costs occasioned by the application for adjournment, he cannot appeal from the direction as to costs, for an order adjourning the hearing of a suit is not an appealable order, not being included in s. 104 below (a).

Letters Patent, clause 15.—An order as to costs is not a "judgment" within the meaning of clause 15 of the Letters Patent, and is not appealable as such (b).

Suit for contribution towards costs.—A defendant is not entitled as against a co-defendant to contribution in respect of costs to which both are liable unless there be some equity existing between him and the co-defendant (c).

PART II.

Execution.

GENERAL.

36. [New.] The provisions of this Code relating to the execution of decrees shall, so far as they are applicable, be deemed to apply to the execution of orders. S. 36.

Application to order.

What decrees may be executed.—(i) The only decree capable of being executed is the decree of the Court of last instance.—When an appeal is preferred from a decree, and a decree is passed in appeal, the question frequently arises as to which decree is the one capable of execution, the decree of the lower Court or the decree of the appellate Court. The question above referred to arises in the following cases :—

- (a) Where a decree has to be amended. [The decree to be amended must be the decree capable of execution.
- (b) Where the question is whether the execution of a decree is barred by limitation. [Time runs from date of decree capable of execution.
- (c) Where the lower Court has by its decree fixed a time for the payment of money, as in a suit for redemption. [Time runs from date of decree capable of execution.]
- (d) Where under O. 20, r. 12, mesne profits are awarded from the date of the suit until the expiration of three years from the date of the decree. [Here 'decree' means decree capable of execution.]
- (e) Where notice is to be given under O. 21, r. 22, when execution is applied for more than one year after the date of the decree. [Here 'decree' means decree capable of execution.]

In answering the question—which decree is capable of execution, it is important to bear in mind the provisions of O. 41, rr. 11 and 32. By O. 41, r. 11, it is provided that the appellate Court may dismiss an appeal (1) without serving notice of the appeal on the respondent in the circumstances there indicated; also (2) if the appellant does not appear when the appeal is called on for hearing. But when the case goes on to a hearing, then the powers of the Court are defined in O. 41, r. 32, which provides, not that the appeal is to be dismissed, but that "the judgment may be for confirming, varying or reversing the decree from which the appeal is preferred." It may be that when the appeal is incompetent as being out of time or as coming within the provisions of s. 102, the proper course is to dismiss it. Apart from that the proper course is to confirm, vary or reverse the decree from which the appeal is preferred as provided by O. 41, r. 32 (d)

S. 36. Bearing these observations in mind, it may be stated that where an appeal is dismissed simpliciter, the decree capable of execution is the decree appealed from (e). But where the appellate Court acting under O. 41, r. 32, confirms, varies or reverses the decree appealed from, the decree capable of execution is the decree of the appellate Court (f). Similarly where the decree of the Court of first instance is confirmed by the High Court on appeal, and the latter decree is confirmed by the Privy Council, the decree capable of execution is the decree of the Privy Council (g). The result is that even where the decree of the lower Court is confirmed on appeal, the period of limitation to execute the decree runs from the date of the decree of the appellate Court. Similarly when time is fixed by the lower Court for the payment of money, and the decree of the lower Court is confirmed on appeal, the time for payment runs from the date of the decree of the appellate Court, though the latter decree does not expressly provide that the time for payment should be calculated from the date of the appellate decree (h). There are, however, two cases in which the decree of the lower Court was confirmed on appeal, but the Court held that the time for payment commenced to run from the date of the decree of the lower Court (i). But these cases seem to be of doubtful authority.

(ii) The decree to be executed must be a subsisting decree.—A obtains a decree against B and C. B subsequently sues A to set aside the decree on the ground of fraud, and the decree is set aside as against him. A cannot execute the decree as against B, for the decree does not subsist as against B. But he may execute the decree as against C, for the decree is a subsisting decree as against C (j).

(iii) The decree to be executed must be a decree of which execution is not barred by the law of limitation.—See Limitation Act, 1908, arts. 182 and 183, and see notes to s. 48 below.

Execution of orders.—The term “order” is defined in s. 2, cl. 14, as the formal expression of any decision of a civil Court which is not a decree. An order under s. 34 of the Guardians and Wards Act 8 of 1890 directing a guardian to pay a sum of money out of his ward’s estate for the marriage expenses of a person dependent on his ward is not an ‘order’ within the meaning of s. 2, cl. 14, and it cannot be enforced against the ward after he has attained majority and the guardian has been discharged (k).

Merger of decree.—As to merger of decree of the first Court in the decree of the appellate Court, see Gajraj v. Swami Nath (l) where all the cases are reviewed. See also notes to O. 9, r. 13, “Hearing of application after disposal of appeal.”

37. [S. 649, 2nd para.] The expression "Court which S. 37.
 passed a decree," or words to that effect, shall, in relation to the execution of decrees, unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context, be deemed to include,—

Definition of Court which passed a decree.

- (a) where the decree to be executed has been passed in the exercise of appellate jurisdiction, the Court of first instance, and
- (b) where the Court of first instance has ceased to exist or to have jurisdiction to execute it, the Court which, if the suit wherein the decree was passed was instituted at the time of making the application for the execution of the decree, would have jurisdiction to try such suit.

Changes introduced by the section.—This section differs from the corresponding section 649 of the Code of 1882 in that the expression "the Court of first instance" in clause (a) has been substituted for the expression "the Court which passed the decree against which the appeal was preferred." As to the effect of this alteration see notes below.

Court by which decree may be executed.—Section 38 indicates the Courts by which decrees may be executed. A decree may be executed either by the Court which passed it, or by the Court to which it is sent for execution. The present section explains the meaning of the expression "Court which passed a decree."

The expression "Court which passed a decree" includes not only the Court which actually passed the decree, but the Courts mentioned in clauses (a) and (b) of the present section. Reading sections 37 and 38 together, we obtain the following rules:—

1. Where the decree to be executed is a decree of a Court of first instance, the proper Court to execute it is the Court of first instance.
2. Where the decree to be executed is a decree passed by a Court of first appeal, the proper Court to execute it is also the Court of first instance [see cl. (a) of the section].
3. Where the decree to be executed is a decree passed by the High Court in second appeal, then also the proper Court to execute it is the Court of first instance. Thus where a suit is instituted in the Court of a Subordinate Judge, and an appeal from the decree is preferred to the District Court, and a second appeal to the High Court, the proper Court to execute the decree of the High Court is the Court of first instance, that is, the Court of the Subordinate Judge. Under the Code of 1882, s. 649, para. 2, of which the present section is in the main a reproduction, the proper Court to execute the decree in the case put above would be the District Court, the expression there used being "the Court which passed the decree against which the appeal was preferred." As a matter of practice, however, the Court of intermediate appeal never executed decrees passed by the High

Court in second appeal. The substitution of the expression "Court of first instance" in clause (a) of the present section for the expression "Court which passed the decree against which the appeal was preferred," gives legislative recognition to the practice hitherto followed.

4. Where the Court of first instance has ceased to exist, the only Court that can execute the decree is the Court which at the time of making the application for execution would have jurisdiction to try the suit in which the decree sought to be executed was passed. A Court does not cease to exist merely by reason that its head-quarters are removed to another place, or merely because the local limits of the jurisdiction of such Court are altered (m).
5. Where the Court of first instance has ceased to have jurisdiction to execute the decree.—A decree is passed by Court X directing the sale of immoveable property within its jurisdiction. After the decree and before the application in execution for sale, the property directed to be sold is transferred by the Local Government's notification from the jurisdiction of Court X to the jurisdiction of Court Y. Has Court X jurisdiction to entertain the application in execution and to order the sale of the property? According to the Calcutta decisions, both Court X and Court Y have jurisdiction to entertain the application in execution for the sale of the property, but if the application is made to Court X, it should not itself order the sale of the property, but transfer the application to Court Y for passing and executing the order for sale (n). According to an earlier decision of the Madras High Court, Court X has jurisdiction to entertain the application in execution, but the question whether it could itself order the sale of the property was not decided (o). In a later Madras case, the opinion was expressed that Court X had no jurisdiction to entertain the application for execution (p), but this view was overruled by a Full Bench of the same High Court, the Full Bench taking the same view as the Calcutta High Court (q).

"Ceased to have jurisdiction."—A Court does not cease to have jurisdiction to execute its decree, merely because its business is transferred by the District Judge under the Act constituting it to another Court (r). Where an order was made by the High Court of Calcutta rejecting a petition for leave to appeal to the Privy Council, and directing the petitioner to pay the respondent's costs, but the order was silent as to the Court by which it was to be executed, it was held that the circumstance that the High Court on its appellate side does not in practice execute its own decrees and orders, did not make that Court, as regards the execution of the order, a Court that had "ceased to have jurisdiction to execute" its decree (s). Nor does a Court which passed a decree "cease to have jurisdiction to execute it," because after the passing of the decree a party [e. g., Court of Wards] is added in execution who, had he been a party when the suit wherein the decree was passed was instituted, would have deprived the Court of its

COURTS BY WHICH DECREES MAY BE EXECUTED;

38. [S. 223, 1st para.] A decree may be executed either by the Court which passed it, or by the Court to which it is sent for execution.

Court by which decree may be executed.

Court which passed a decree.—See s. 37 and notes thereto.

Jurisdiction of Court executing decree.—The following are the leading rules relating to the jurisdiction of Courts executing decrees:—

RULE I.—No Court can execute a decree in which the subject-matter of the suit or of the application for execution is property situate "entirely" outside the local limits of its jurisdiction.—Territorial jurisdiction, in other words, is a condition precedent to a Court executing a decree (w).

Exception I.—The Court which passed a decree for the "enforcement of a mortgage of immoveable property" included therein has power in execution of its decree to order the sale of such property, though the whole of it may be situate "beyond" the local limits of its jurisdiction.—A sues B in a Court in district X on a mortgage of two properties, one situate in district X and the other in district Y. A decree is passed for the sale of both the properties. The Court in district X having jurisdiction to entertain the suit in respect of the property situate in district Y (s. 17), has also jurisdiction to sell that property in execution of its decree, though the property is situate beyond its jurisdiction. It is not bound to send the decree for execution as respects the property in district Y to the Court of that district under cl. (c) of s. 39, but it may do so (x). In the latter case the decree as respects the property in district Y may be executed by the Court of district Y (y). See also notes to s. 17.

Exception II.—Where "after the passing of a decree" in a "suit for the enforcement of a mortgage" the whole of the immoveable property included therein falls, by transfer of jurisdiction, within the local limits of the jurisdiction of another Court, the application for execution of the decree, according to the Calcutta decision, may be made either to the Court which passed the decree (though the property is no longer within its jurisdiction), or to the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the immoveable property falls by such transfer, but where the application is made to the former Court, it should not itself order the property to be sold, but should transfer it to the latter Court for passing and executing the order

In a recent Madras decision, the opinion was expressed that it is the latter Court alone that has jurisdiction to execute the decree, and that it is to that Court alone that the decree-holder should apply for execution (a). But this view was overruled by a Full Bench of the same High Court, the Full Bench taking the same view as the Calcutta High Court (b). In the Full Bench case it was observed by Wallis, C.J., that the fact that s. 150 of the present Code confers upon the Court of the transferred area power to entertain the application in the first instance does not take away from the Court which passed the decree the power which it had according to the unbroken current of decisions for many years, namely, the power to entertain the application (c). See notes to s. 37.*

Exception III.—The salary of a public officer or of a servant of a Railway company of local authority may be attached by a Court though the disbursing officer may not be within the local limits of the Court's jurisdiction. See O. 21, r. 48, and notes thereto.

RULE II.—Where a decree has been passed for the payment of money, and the decree-holder applies for attachment and sale of immovable property (belonging to the judgment debtor) which forms one estate of which a part is situated within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court executing the decree and part beyond such local limits, the Court executing the decree has the power to attach and sell the whole estate including the portion situated beyond the local limits of its jurisdiction. See O. 21, r. 3, and notes thereto.

RULE III.—Whether a Court to which a decree has been sent for execution under s. 39 has jurisdiction to execute the decree, if the amount of the decree exceeds the limits of the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Court? To put the question in a concrete form, whether if a decree for Rs. 7,000 is sent for execution to a Court whose pecuniary jurisdiction does not exceed Rs. 5,000, the latter Court can execute the decree? Yes, according to Madras decisions (d). No, according to Calcutta and Bombay decisions (e). See notes to s. 6 "Pecuniary jurisdiction in passing decrees."

RULE IV.—Where the decree sought to be executed is passed by a competent Court, the Court will not be deemed to be incompetent to execute the decree merely because by reason of the amount of interest or mesne-profits ascertained for a period "subsequent" to the institution of the suit, the pecuniary limits of the jurisdiction of such Court are exceeded.—A obtains a decree against B for Rs. 4,000 and interest in a Court of which the pecuniary jurisdiction is limited to Rs. 5,000. A then applies to the Court for execution. At the date of the application for execution, the total amount of the decree by reason of accumulation of interest exceeds Rs. 5,000. Has the Court jurisdiction to execute the decree, regard being had to the fact that the amount sought to be recovered in execution exceeds the pecuniary limits of its jurisdiction? It has been held that it has (f). See notes to s. 6, "Pecuniary jurisdiction in passing decrees."

The Court executing a decree cannot go behind the decree.—The Court executing a decree must take the decree as it stands (g). It has no power to go behind the decree, in other words, it cannot entertain any objection as to the legality or correctness of the decree (h). The reason is that a decree though it may not be according to law, is binding and conclusive between the parties, if it is not appealed from (i). For the same reason the Court executing a decree cannot alter, vary, or add to the terms of the decree (j). It is different, however, where the decree sought to be executed is a nullity as where it is passed against a party to a suit who had died before the hearing was concluded; in such a case there is no decree to be executed (k). See notes to s. 47, p. 123, case (4).

Construction of decree by executing Court.—But though a Court executing a decree cannot go behind the decree, it is quite competent to construe the decree where the terms of the decree are ambiguous, and to ascertain its precise meaning for unless this is done, the decree cannot be executed. The construction of a decree must be governed by the pleadings and the judgment (l). And the Court should, if possible, put such a construction upon the decree as would make it in accordance with law (m). Where a certain construction is put on a decree on a former application for execution, it is not competent to the Court on a subsequent application to treat that construction as erroneous and put another construction on the decree (n).

Agreement between parties to execution proceedings.—An agreement arrived at between the parties to an execution proceeding with the sanction of the Court cannot be subsequently altered by the Court without the concurrence of both the parties (o).

Inconsistent decisions in execution proceedings—Where there are two inconsistent decisions in the course of execution proceedings, the later must prevail against the earlier (p).

- (e) if the decree directs the sale or delivery of immoveable property situate outside the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court which passed it, or
- (d) if the Court which passed the decree considers for any other reason, which it shall record in writing, that the decree should be executed by such other Court.

(2) The Court which passed a decree may of its own motion send it for execution to any subordinate Court of competent jurisdiction.

Transmission of decree for execution.—A decree passed by one Court may be transmitted for execution to another Court either on the application of the decree-holder on one of the grounds stated in this section, or by the Court which passed it of its own motion. When a decree is sent by the Court which passed it for execution to another Court, the Court sending the decree shall send a copy of the decree and other documents mentioned in O. 21, r. 6, to the Court by which the decree is to be executed. The latter Court shall, on receiving the copy of the decree and the other documents, cause the same to be filed (O. 21, r. 7). The decree-holder may then apply to that Court for execution (O. 21, r. 10). The Court executing a decree sent to it for execution has the same powers in executing such decree as if it had been passed by itself (s. 42).

Clause (d).—In a Bombay case, doubt was expressed whether clause (d) of this section enabled a Subordinate Judge to transfer a decree for execution to a Small Cause Court, where the property attached was within the local jurisdiction of the Subordinate Judge (q).

A decree may be executed simultaneously in more places than one.—A Court passing a decree has the power to send its decree to more Courts than one for concurrent execution. But this power should be sparingly exercised, and, when exercised, it would be in many cases proper to impose terms on the decree-holder that he should not proceed to a sale under all the attachments at once (r).

Appeal.—An appeal lies from an order rejecting an application for the transfer of a decree. The reason is that questions relating to the transfer of decrees are questions relating to "execution" within the meaning of s. 47 [Code of 1882, s. 244] (s). See s. 2, cl. (2).

Jurisdiction.—See notes to s. 38 under the head "Jurisdiction of Court executing decree," p. 113 above.

"Executed in such manner as may be prescribed by rules in force in that province."—The manner of execution is that of the Court which executes the decree, but as to whether execution of the decree is barred by limitation or not it is the law governing the Court which passed the decree that applies (i).

41. [S. 223, 4th para.] The Court to which a decree is sent for execution shall certify to the Court which passed it the fact of such execution, or where the former Court fails to execute the same, the circumstances attending such failure.

Result of execution proceedings to be certified.

42. [S. 228.] The Court executing a decree sent to it shall have the same powers in executing such decree as if it had been passed by itself. All persons disobeying or obstructing the execution of the decree shall be punishable by such Court in the same manner as if it had passed the decree. And its order in executing such decree shall be subject to the same rules in respect of appeal as if the decree had been passed by itself.

Powers of Court in executing transferred decree.

Powers of Court in executing transferred decree.—A Court executing a transferred decree has no power to entertain any objection regarding—

- (a) the legality or propriety of the order directing execution, or
- (b) the right of the person shown in the order as the person entitled to execute the decree.

By reason of the rule contained in cl. (a), the Court executing a transferred decree cannot refuse execution on the ground that the order directing execution was wrong or improper, and that it ought not to have been made under the particular circumstances of the case (u). Nor can it refuse execution on the ground that the execution of the decree was barred by limitation on the date on which the order for execution was made and that the order was therefore illegal (v). It is otherwise, however, where the transferring Court has made no order for execution, but has merely transferred the decree for execution, and sent a certificate of non-satisfaction. In the latter case, the Court to which the decree is transferred for execution has the power to decide whether execution is barred by limitation (w), or it may stay execution (O. 21, r. 26) so as to leave the objection to be decided by the Court which passed the decree (x). See notes to s. 11 under the head "Orders in execution proceedings" on p. 64 ante. As to decrees of Courts of Native States, see notes to s. 44 below.

By reason of the rule contained in cl. (b), the Court executing a transferred decree cannot entertain any question as to the validity of an assignment of the decree (O. 21, r. 16) if the assignee is shown in the order for execution as the person entitled to execute the decree (y).

42, 43.

Subject to the limitations mentioned above, the Court executing a transferred decree has the same powers in executing such decree as if the decree had been passed by itself. From this it follows that a Court executing a transferred decree has no more powers in execution than a Court executing its own decree. Thus a Court executing its own decree has no power to entertain any objection regarding the legality or the correctness of its decree. Therefore, a Court executing a transferred decree has also no such power. It cannot therefore refuse to execute the decree sent to it on the ground that the decree is wrong in point of law (z), or that it is defective (a), or that it directs a sale of property which is not "saleable" within the meaning of s. 60 of the Code (b), or that it was obtained by fraud (c), or that it was passed without jurisdiction (d). It is clear that if a Court executing a transferred decree were allowed to enter into these questions, it would be virtually allowing it to sit in judgment upon the decree of the transferring Court. See notes to s. 38.

Continuance of jurisdiction of Court executing transferred decree.—

The Court to which a decree is sent for execution retains its jurisdiction to execute the decree (1) until the execution has been withdrawn from it (e), or (2) until it has executed the decree and has certified that fact to the Court which sent the decree, or (3) until it has failed to execute the decree and has certified that fact to the Court which sent the decree (s. 41). Until some one of these events happen, the only Court which has seisin of the execution proceedings is the Court to which the decree is sent for execution, and the Court which passed the decree has no jurisdiction to entertain an application for execution unless concurrent execution was ordered, or proceedings in the Court to which the decree is sent are stayed for the purpose of executing the decree by the Court which passed it (f). It follows from this that if a decree is sent for execution by Court A to Court B, and an application for execution is made to Court B (O. 21, r. 10), but the application is rejected on the ground of some informality, and a fresh application for execution is subsequently made to Court B, it (Court B) cannot refuse to entertain it on the ground of want of jurisdiction, for its jurisdiction has not ceased as none of the three events mentioned above has happened (g). But if the application for execution is dismissed by the Court to which the decree is sent in consequence of the decree-holder's failure to prosecute, and a certificate is sent to the Court which passed the decree that execution has failed by reason of non-prosecution, the former Court has no power to receive a subsequent application for execution for its jurisdiction ceased when the certificate was sent; the proper Court then to deal with the decree is the Court that passed it (h).

43. [S. 229.] Any decree passed by a Civil Court established in any part of British India to which the provisions relating to execution do not extend, or by any Court established or continued by the authority of the Governor-General in Council in the territories of any foreign Prince or State, may, if it cannot be executed within the jurisdiction of the Court by which it was passed, be executed in manner herein provided within the jurisdiction of any Court in British India.

44. [s. 229B] The Governor-General in Council may, by notification in the Gazette of India, declare that the decrees of any Civil or Revenue Courts situate in the territories of any native Prince or State in alliance with His Majesty and not established or continued by the authority of the Governor-General in Council, or any class of such decrees may be executed in British India as if they had been passed by the Courts of British India.

Execution of decrees passed by Courts of Native States.

By notification.—For notifications issued under this section, see General Statutory Rules and Orders, Vol. I, pp. 622-625, and Vol. IV, pp. 682, 683 and 685.

Where foreign judgment passed without jurisdiction.—This section was merely intended to alter the procedure by which decrees passed by Courts of Native States can have effect given to them in British India (i). It does not preclude a Court of British India to which a decree of a Native State is sent for execution by virtue of a notification under this section from ascertaining whether the foreign Court had jurisdiction to pass the decree, and from refusing execution if it finds that the foreign Court had no jurisdiction to pass the decree (j). See notes to s. 10, "A British Indian Court will not give effect to a foreign judgment, etc."

Limitation for execution of a decree of a Court of a Native State.—The period of limitation for execution of a decree of a Court of a Native State transferred for execution to a Court of British India is not the period prescribed by the law of that State, but that prescribed by the law of British India, that is, within three years from the date of the decree [Limitation Act, 1908, Sch. I, art. 182] (k).

45. [s. 229A] So much of the foregoing sections of this Part as empowers a Court to send a decree for execution to another Court shall be construed as empowering a Court in British India to send a decree for execution to any Court established or continued by the authority of the Governor-General in Council in the territories of any foreign Prince or State to which the Governor-General in Council has, by notification in the Gazette of India, declared this section to apply.

Note that there is no provision for sending decrees of British Indian Courts for execution to Courts in Native States other than those mentioned in this section, though s. 44 provides for the issue of notifications declaring that the decrees of these very Courts may be executed in British India as if they had been passed by the Courts of British India. Such a notification was issued with regard to the Travancore Courts and also the Cochin Courts in 1887 as part of a reciprocal arrangement by which those Courts were to execute the decrees of our Courts, and there are regulations made by the Travancore and other States providing for execution of decrees of our Courts upon receipt from our Courts of a copy of the decree, a certificate of non-satisfaction, and a copy of any order for execution, or a certificate that no such order has been made. Such being the case, there is no reason why our Courts should not act in aid of the Travancore Courts and furnish them as matter of comity the documents they require to enable them to execute the decrees of our Courts under the powers conferred upon them by the legislative authority in Travancore. The policy of the Indian legislature has been to leave the decrees of our Courts to be executed in the Courts of Native States pursuant to the legislative authority of such States, but not to provide, as they have in s. 45 as regards a limited number of such Courts, for the transfer to them of the decrees of our Courts for execution so as to make them the executing Courts as regards such decrees for all purposes with authority to decide all questions arising in the course of execution (1).

"By notification."—For notifications issued under this section, see General Statutory Rules and Orders, Vol. I, pp. 618-621.

46. [New.] (1) Upon the application of the decree-holder the Court which passed the decree may, whenever it thinks fit, issue a precept.

Precepts.

cept to any other Court which would be competent to execute such decree to attach any property belonging to the judgment-debtor and specified in the precept.

(2) The Court to which a precept is sent shall proceed to attach the property in the manner prescribed in regard to the attachment of property in execution of a decree :

Provided that no attachment under a precept shall continue for more than two months unless the period of attachment is extended by an order of the Court which passed the decree or unless before the determination of such attachment the decree has been transferred to the Court by which the attachment has been made and the decree-holder has applied for an order for the sale of such property.

Attachment under precept.—The object of a precept is to enable a decree-holder to obtain an interim attachment where there is ground to apprehend that he may otherwise be deprived of the fruits of his decree. No such attachment, however, can continue for more than two months except in the two cases mentioned in the section.

The effect of the latter part of the section is to do away with a re-attachment of property attached under a precept where, before the determination of the interim attachment, the decree-holder applies for execution against the property.

QUESTIONS TO BE DETERMINED BY COURT
EXECUTING DECREE.

S. 47.

47. [s. 244.] (1) All questions arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed, or their representatives, and relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree, shall be determined by the Court executing the decree and not by a separate suit.

Questions to be determined by the Court executing decree.

(2) The Court may, subject to any objection, as to limitation or jurisdiction, treat a proceeding under this section as a suit or a suit as a proceeding and may, if necessary, order payment of any additional court-fees.

(3) Where a question arises as to whether any person is or is not the representative of a party, such question shall for the purposes of this section, be determined by the Court.

Explanation.—For the purposes of this section, a plaintiff whose suit has been dismissed and a defendant against whom a suit has been dismissed, are parties to the suit.

Changes introduced by the section.—This section corresponds with s. 244 of the Code of 1882 except in the following particulars :—

1. Sub-clauses (a) and (b) of s. 244, which provided for the determination of questions regarding the amount of mesne profits and interest in execution, proceedings have been omitted, as it was deemed expedient that such questions should be determined by the decree and not in execution. See O. 20, r. 12.

The words “or to the stay of execution thereof” which occurred in s. 244 after the words “execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree” have been omitted in the present section. There are two possible views as regards the omission of these words. The one is that the words omitted may have been regarded as superfluous, for a plea that the execution of a decree may be stayed is equivalent to the plea that the decree should not be executed, and it is thus a question “relating to the execution” of the decree (m). The other view is that questions relating to the stay of execution are no longer within the provisions of this section and no appeal will lie from orders determining such questions (mm). The latter view seems to be the correct view.

3. Sub-section (2) of the present section is new. It gives legislative recognition to the practice followed by the Courts under the Code of 1882. See notes below under the head “Sub-section (2).”

by B to A on the mortgage, and a decree is passed for A for that amount. After the decree has been fully executed, B discovers an error in calculation, and the decree is amended by substituting Rs. 6,000 for Rs. 7,000. B may claim a refund of Rs. 1,000 by an application under this section, but not by a separate suit (g). Similarly if A discovers an error in calculation after the decree has been executed, and the decree is amended by substituting, say Rs. 7,500, for Rs. 7,000, A may claim the excess of Rs. 500 by an application under this section, but not by a separate suit (r).

3. Restitution of property sold in execution, when the sale is set aside.—A obtains a decree against B for Rs. 5,000. B fails to pay the amount of the decree and his property is thereupon sold in execution, and purchased by A, the decree-holder. The sale is set aside on B's application on the ground that the property was purchased by A without the leave of the Court as required by O. 21, r. 72. B may claim restitution of the property by an application under this section, but not by a separate suit (s). See now s. 144, sub-s. (2).

4. Claim by legal representative of a deceased judgment-debtor for restitution of property taken in execution, on the ground that the decree in execution of which the property was taken is a nullity.—If the hearing of a suit is concluded and judgment reserved, and the defendant then dies, the decree is binding upon his estate, though the judgment is delivered after his death (t). The reason is that in such a case nothing is left to be done by the parties from the moment the judgment is reserved, and any delay that takes place is the delay of the Court (u). See O. 22, r. 6. But if the defendant dies before the hearing is concluded, and a decree is passed against him without his legal representative being brought on the record, the decree is a nullity, and it cannot be executed against his legal representative (v). Suppose now that a defendant dies before the hearing is concluded, that a decree is passed against him without his legal representative being brought on the record, that the decree-holder applies for execution of the decree against the legal representative under s. 50, that the latter does not object to execution on the ground that the decree is a nullity, and that the property of the deceased is sold in execution. Is the legal representative entitled to have the sale set aside, and to recover back the property on the ground that the decree being a nullity, the execution proceedings are void, or is he estopped from doing so on the ground that he ought to have objected to the execution proceedings before the sale of the property? It has been held that the decree being a nullity, he is entitled to recover back the property and that he is not estopped from claiming back the property, for it was no duty of his to inform the decree holder that the proceedings adopted by him were illegal (w). Taking it then that the property sold can be claimed back, the question to be considered is, by what procedure is the property to be recovered, whether it is to be recovered by an application under this section or by a separate suit? According to an earlier decision of the Allahabad High Court, the legal representative is entitled to an order for restitution by an application under this section (x). According to a later decision of the same Court, he may bring a

- S. 47. regular suit for the purpose (y). The earlier decision was not referred to in the later decision. Having regard to the decisions that questions relating to the validity of a decree cannot be tried in execution proceedings, but must be decided in a regular suit, the procedure by suit would appear to be the proper one. See ill. (1) under the head "Separate suit will lie," p. 126 below.

Note.—In some of the cases cited above, it was contended that the provisions of this section did not apply to questions arising subsequent to the execution of a decree, and since a claim for restitution could only arise after a decree has been completely executed, such claim should be made by a regular suit, and not by an application under this section. But this contention was overruled and it was held that this section applies to questions arising between the parties after the decree has been executed as much as to questions arising between them previous to execution (2). All that is necessary is that the question must be one relating to execution.

5. Proceedings for recovery of possession of property sold in execution.—A obtains a decree against B. In execution of the decree certain immoveable property belonging to B is put up for sale. The property may be purchased by A, the decree-holder, with the leave of the Court obtained under O. 21, r. 72, or it may be purchased by a third person. If the property is sold, and the judgment-debtor or his tenants obstruct the purchaser in obtaining possession of the property, the question arises as to what procedure should be adopted by the purchaser to recover possession from the judgment-debtor. The answer depends upon who is the purchaser, for the property may be purchased by the decree-holder himself after obtaining the leave of the Court, or it may be purchased by a stranger.

(i) Where the property is purchased by a stranger, he may either apply for delivery of possession under O. 21, r. 95, or he may bring a regular suit for possession (see notes to O. 21, r. 95 below). To such a case the provisions of s. 47 do not apply. The purchaser being a stranger, that is, one who is not a party to the suit, is not precluded from bringing a regular suit for possession (a). The period of limitation for an application for delivery of possession is three years from the date when the sale becomes absolute [Limitation Act, 1908, Sch. I, Art. 181]. The period of limitation for a suit for possession is twelve years from the date when the sale becomes absolute [ib., art. 138].

(ii) Where the decree-holder himself is the purchaser, there is a conflict of decisions as to what procedure should be adopted by him for obtaining possession. According to the view taken by the High Courts of Bombay (b) and Madras (c) and in some cases also by the High Court of Calcutta (d), the only course open to him is to apply for possession under O. 21, r. 95, coupled with s. 47. He cannot bring a separate suit for possession, for his case is governed by the provisions of s. 47. The case being governed by s. 47, an appeal also will lie from any order that may be made on his application. According to this view, the question as to delivery of possession is a question relating to the "execution, discharge or satisfaction" of the decree, and, further, the question is treated as one between the "parties to the suit" on the ground that the decree-holder does not lose his character of a party to the suit merely because he happens also to be the purchaser. It follows from this that where the decree-holder, after purchasing the property, sells it to a third person, and such person is resisted by the judgment-debtor in obtaining possession, he too should proceed by way of application under this section and not by a regular suit, the reason being that a purchaser from a decree-holder who has purchased at a Court sale is a "representative" of the decree-holder within the meaning of this section (e). In two of the cases cited above, however, the Madras Court observed that if this question had not already been settled by previous decisions of that Court, they would be disposed to hold that such proceedings could not be regarded as those "relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree" within the meaning of this section (f). According to the other view, which is the view taken by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court (g) and a Full Bench also of the Patna High Court (h) and in a large majority of cases by the Calcutta High Court (i) and in recent cases by the Chief Court of the Punjab (j), a decree-holder purchaser stands on the same footing as a purchaser who is a stranger, so that he may proceed either by an application under O. 21, r. 95, or by a separate suit for possession. This view proceeds on the ground that the question as to delivery of possession is not one relating to the "execution, discharge or satisfaction" of the decree within the meaning of s. 47, and that even if it be so, a decree-holder after he becomes purchaser of the property can no longer be said to be a "party to the suit" within the meaning of s. 47. According to this view, the matter is not within s. 47 at all, and no appeal therefore lies from an order made on the application of the decree-holder purchaser for delivery of possession under O. 21, r. 95. We are inclined to think that s. 47 does not apply to the case at all, not because the decree-holder purchaser is not a "party to the suit" within the meaning of s. 47—for we think he is such a party (k), but because the question as to delivery of possession cannot be said to be a question "relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree" within the meaning of s. 47. The following are the main points of distinction between the two views:—

- (1) According to the former view, that is, the view taken by the High Courts of Bombay and Madras and in some cases by the High Court of Calcutta, a decree-holder purchaser, who is resisted by the judgment-debtor in taking possession of the property purchased by him at the auction-sale, can proceed only by an application under O. 21, r. 95, coupled with s. 47, and such application should be made within three years from the date on which the sale becomes absolute [Limitation Act, Sch. I, art. 181]. According to the latter view, that is the view taken by the High Courts of Allahabad, Patna and Lahore and in a large majority of cases by the High Court of Calcutta, he may proceed by an application under O. 21, r. 95, or if he may proceed by way of suit. The period of limitation for a suit is twelve years from the date when the sale becomes absolute, so that even if the time for an application has expired, he may prosecute his remedy by way of suit.

- S. 47. (2) According to the former view, the application for delivery of possession is one under O. 21, r. 95, coupled with s. 47, and an appeal therefore lies from an order made on the application. According to the latter view, s. 47 has nothing to do with the case, and the application is purely one under O. 21, r. 95, and no appeal lies from an order made upon such an application.

6. Dispute between decree-holder and judgment-debtor as to amount of property actually attached.—Where it is alleged by the judgment-debtor that the decree-holder in collusion with the Court peon had made away with the bulk of the property which had been attached and that only a small portion of the whole had been put up for sale, the matter is one which should be enquired into by the Court executing the decrees under this section (l).

7. Second suit for redemption.—See notes to s. 11, "Finality of decrees in redemption suits," p. 61 above.

8. Questions as to factum of adjustment of decree.—A obtains a decree against B for Rs. 27,000. B applies to enter up satisfaction of the decree, alleging that the decree was adjusted by a writing in the nature of a compromise signed by A. A alleges that the writing was obtained by fraud. The question is one "relating to the discharge of the decree" within the meaning of this section, and it should be decided on B's application and not by a separate suit (m).

Separate suit will lie.—When it is said with reference to this section that a separate suit will lie, it is understood that either the question does not relate to the "execution, discharge or satisfaction" of the decree, or that it does not arise between the parties to the suit or their representatives.

First, where the question does not relate to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree.—In such a case a separate suit will lie, for the question not being one relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree it cannot be determined in execution proceedings by the Court executing the decree. The following are the leading cases on the subject:—

(1) Questions as to the validity of a decree.—If a judgment-debtor or his legal representative objects to the execution of a decree on the ground that the decree is not valid, the question as to the validity of the decree, not being one relating to the "execution, discharge or satisfaction" of the decree, cannot be tried in execution proceedings under this section. Such a question can only be tried in a regular suit brought for the purpose (n). Thus if a judgment-debtor objects to the execution of a decree on the ground that the decree was obtained by fraud, the question of the validity of the decree must be determined by a separate suit (o). The same rule applies where a reversioner objects to the attachment of his reversionary interest, on the ground that the decree obtained against the widow of the last male owner is not binding on him, there being no debt due by the last male owner (p). See notes to s. 38 under the head "The Court executing a decree cannot go behind the decree," p. 114 above.

(p) Tallapragada v. Boorugapalk (1907) 30 Mad. 402; Ala Singh v. Wasawa (1913) F.E. no. 14, p. 52.

(2) Agreement not to execute decree.—A applies for execution of a decree obtained by him against B. B objects to execution on the ground that A had agreed prior to the decree not to execute the decree against him. A denies the agreement. It has been held by the Calcutta High Court that the question whether or not there was any such agreement between A and B is not a question relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of a decree within the meaning of this section, and that B's only remedy is to bring a regular suit against A to restrain him by an injunction from executing the decree. The term "decree," according to that Court, means a decree which is susceptible and capable of execution, and not a decree which is alleged by the judgment-debtor to be a mere paper decree not to be executed (q). On the other hand, it has been held by the High Courts of Bombay (r), Madras (s) and Allahabad (t), that the question as to the existence of such an agreement ought to be determined in execution under this section, and not by a separate suit. Such an agreement is not obnoxious to O. 21, r. 2, as that rule relates to agreements after the passing of the decree (u).

(3) Uncertified payment or adjustment.—A obtains a decree against B for Rs. 2,000. It is subsequently agreed between A and B that A should accept Rs. 1,000 in full satisfaction of the decree. B accordingly pays A Rs. 1,000, but the adjustment is not certified to the Court as required by O. 21, r. 2. A then applies for execution of the decree. B objects to execution on the ground that the decree has already been satisfied. This objection cannot be entertained by the Court executing the decree, though it is a question relating to the "satisfaction" of the decree, for an uncertified adjustment cannot be recognized by a Court in execution proceedings (see O. 21, r. 2). Nor can B institute a regular suit against A for a declaration that the decree has been satisfied and for an injunction restraining A from executing the decree (v). Such a suit is barred under the present section, for the principal question in the suit will be whether the decree has been satisfied, and such a question being one relating to the "satisfaction" of the decree falls within the scope of this section. For the same reason, if B's property is sold in execution of the decree, he cannot bring a suit to set aside the sale on the ground that the decree has been adjusted and satisfied (w). But if the decree is executed, B may sue A for damages for breach of the contract. The question in such a suit is not a question relating to the "execution, satisfaction or discharge" of the decree, but whether A agreed to accept Rs. 1,000 in full satisfaction of the judgment-debt, and, if so, what are the damages sustained by B by reason of the breach of the agreement. These questions are not within the scope of the present section, and hence a suit involving these questions is not barred under this section (x). See notes to O. 21, r. 2, "Sub-rule (3)." See also notes, "No. 8. Questions as to factum of adjustment of decree" on p. 126 above.

(4) Declaratory decree.—A decree which merely declares the rights of parties and does not direct any act to be done is incapable of execution (y). Hence a separate suit will lie to enforce the rights declared by such a decree. In fact, the only mode of enforcing such rights is by a regular suit. Thus if it be declared by a decree that the plaintiff is entitled to a monthly allowance, the decree is merely declaratory. Hence if the defendant fails to pay the allowance for any one month, the plaintiff's remedy is by suit,

But if the decree, besides declaring the plaintiff's right to a monthly allowance, directs the defendant to pay the same from month to month to the plaintiff, the payment can only be enforced by proceedings in execution as often as default is made by the defendant, and a separate suit will not lie (a).

(5) Claim for contribution by one judgment-debtor against another.—A obtains a decree against B and C for Rs. 1,000. A executes the decree against B alone, and B pays the whole amount. B then sues C for contribution. The suit is not barred under this section, for the claim for contribution cannot be said to relate to the “execution, discharge or satisfaction” of the decree within the meaning of this section (b). In fact the remedy by suit is the only remedy.

(6) Mal-administration of debtor's estate.—A obtains a decree against B for Rs. 25,000. B dies leaving a will of which C is the executor. Failing in his endeavour to execute the decree, A sues C for the administration of B's estate by the Court and for an account against C on the footing of mal-administration. The suit is not barred by this section nay the remedy by way of suit is the only remedy, for the Court cannot in execution proceedings go into the question of whether or not an executor has been guilty of mal-administration of the estate (c).

Secondly, where the question, though relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree, does not arise between the parties to the suit or their representatives.—In such a case, the question cannot be determined in execution proceedings under this section, and a regular suit may be brought. A question is said to arise between “the parties to a suit or their representatives,” when it arises between the decree-holder or his representative on the one hand and the judgment-debtor or his representative on the other. Questions between decree-holders inter se (d), or between judgment-debtors inter se (e), or between a party and his own representative (f), are not questions arising between “the parties to the suit or their representatives” within the meaning of this section.

Sub-section (2).—Court may treat suit as an application.—This sub-section is new. It gives legislative recognition to the practice followed by the Courts under the repealed Code. It enables the Court to treat an application under this section as a suit or a suit as an application. Hence where a regular suit is instituted for the determination of a question which ought to be determined under this section by the Court executing the decree, the Court in which the suit is brought may either dismiss the suit as barred under this section, or it may in its discretion regard the plaint in the suit as an application under this section and dispose of it accordingly, provided the Court in which the suit is brought has jurisdiction to execute the decree (g) and the execution of the decree was not barred at the date of the suit (h). Suppose now that a suit barred under this section is heard and disposed of as a suit: is the decree liable to be set aside in appeal on the ground that the Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit? It has been held that it is not, for the case is not one of absence of jurisdiction but of error of procedure. Hence if the decree be otherwise good in law, the appellate Court may treat the plaint in the suit as an application in execution and the decree in the suit as an order under this section, and it may uphold the decree, provided the Court which passed the decree had jurisdiction to execute the original decree (i). But the suit in such a case must have been brought within the period of limitation appropriate to applications under this section, namely, the period prescribed by art. 181 of the Limitation Act, 1908 (j). It has been recently held by the High Court of Madras in a case decided under the Code of 1882 that even a written statement may in a proper case be treated as an application under this section (k). See s. 6 and the notes to s. 38 under the head "Jurisdiction of Court executing decree."

Parties to the suit—Explanation to the section.—Under the old section it was held by the High Courts of Allahabad (l) and Calcutta (m) that a plaintiff whose suit has been dismissed, and a defendant against whom a suit has been dismissed, could not be considered as "parties to the suit" within the meaning of that section. On the other hand, it was held by the High Court of Madras, that such plaintiff and such defendant must be regarded as "parties to the suit" (n). The Explanation to the section gives effect to the Madras decision.

It has been held by the High Court of Madras that a defendant against whom a suit is dismissed on the ground of misjoinder is not "a defendant against whom a suit has been dismissed" within the meaning of the Explanation, and that he is not a party to the suit (o). But where a party has been properly impleaded as a defendant in a case and the case as against him would have proceeded to judgment but for the fact that the plaintiff elected to abandon part of his case and the suit was in consequence dismissed against such defendant, he is "a defendant against whom a suit has been dismissed" within the meaning of the Explanation and therefore a party to the suit (p).

Illustrations.

(1) A sues B and C. A decree is passed against B, but as against C the suit is dismissed. In execution of the decree against B, certain property is attached as belonging to B. C contends that the property belongs to him and claims to have it released from attachment. Here C is a "party to the suit," though the suit has been dismissed against him. He must therefore proceed by an application under this section, and not by a separate suit.

(2) A and B institute a suit against C, praying that the relief claimed in the suit may be granted to A, or in the alternative to B. A decree is passed in the suit awarding the relief claimed to A, and dismissing B's claim. Here B is a "party to the suit," though his suit has been dismissed.

(3) A mortgages his property to B. He then sells his equity of redemption to C. C sues B for redemption of the mortgage, and joins D who claims to be the owner of the property as a defendant to the suit. At the hearing, the suit is dismissed as against D on the ground of misjoinder, that is, on the ground that he is not a proper party to the suit. D is not "a defendant against whom a suit has been dismissed" within the meaning of the Explanation, and he is not a party to the suit: Krishnappa v. Periaswamy (1917) 40 Mad. 964. See also Sham Lal v. Amar Prasad (1917) 2 Pat. L. J. 219.

As to whether a decree-holder ceases to be a "party to the suit" by becoming the purchaser of the property of the judgment-debtor at a sale held in execution of his decree, see notes "No. 5.—Proceedings for recovery of possession of property sold in execution," on p. 124 above. See also notes on p. 128 above, "Secondly, where the question, etc."

"Representative."—The term "representative" in this section includes not merely "legal representative" in the sense of heirs, executors or administrators, but "representative in interest," that is, any transferee of the decree-holder's interest, or any transferee of the judgment-debtor's interest, who, so far as such interest is concerned, is bound by the decree (t). We proceed to give illustrations:—

(1) A transferee of a decree, or of the interest of any decree-holder in a joint decree within the meaning of O. 21, r. 16, is a "representative" of the decree-holder (u). A transferee from such transferee is also a "representative" of the decree-holder (v).

A judgment-creditor who attaches a decree held by the judgment-debtor against another is a "representative" of the judgment-debtor. A holds a decree against B. C obtains a decree against A, and in execution attaches the decree held by A against B. C is a "representative" of A in proceedings in execution of A's decree against B (w). See O. 21, r. 53, sub-r. 3.

(2) A obtains a decree against B for Rs. 5,000. B then sells certain property belonging to him to C. C is not a "representative" of B, for the decree is a simple money decree, and does not relate to the specific property sold to C (x).

(3) A purchaser, lessee, or mortgagee, from a judgment-debtor, of property belonging to the judgment-debtor and attached in execution of a decree against him, is the "representative" of the judgment-debtor within the meaning of this section, for the property being under attachment at the date of the purchase, lease or mortgage, the purchaser, lessee or mortgagee is bound by the decree so far as the interest transferred to him is concerned (y). See section 64.

(4) Purchaser of judgment-debtor's equity of redemption under a private sale.—A obtains a decree against B for sale of certain property mortgaged to him by B. After the date of the decree, B sells his equity of redemption in the mortgaged property to C. C is a "representative" of B, the judgment-debtor, for the property having been purchased after it was affected by A's mortgage-decree, C is to that extent bound by A's decree. Hence any question relating to the execution of A's decree, and arising between A and C, must be determined by the Court executing A's decree, and not by a separate suit (z). The same procedure would apply even if B had transferred his interest in the property to C during the pendency of the suit though before the passing of the decree (a).

(5) Purchaser of judgment-debtor's equity of redemption at a judicial sale.—A obtains a decree against B for the sale of certain property mortgaged to him by B. Before the property could be sold in execution of A's decree, X, who holds a money-decree against B, brings B's equity of redemption in the mortgaged property to sale in execution of his decree, and the same is purchased by C. C is a "representative" of B, the judgment-debtor, for the property having been purchased after it was affected by A's mortgage-decree, C is to that extent bound by A's decree. Hence any question relating to the execution of A's decree, and arising between A and C, must be determined by the Court executing A's decree and not by a separate suit (b).

Note.—The only point of difference between this and ill. (4) is that in ill. (4) we have the case of a purchaser of the judgment-debtor's interest in the mortgaged property under a private sale from the judgment-debtor, while in the present illustration we have the case of a purchaser of the judgment-debtor's interest in the mortgaged property at a sale held in execution of a money-decree against the judgment-debtor. It was at one time thought that a purchaser under a private sale from a judgment-debtor was a "representative" of the judgment-debtor, but that a purchaser at a judicial sale was not his "representative" within the meaning of this section (c). But this view is no longer tenable.

(6) A purchaser of property from a party to a suit in which an injunction has been granted affecting such property is not a "representative" within the meaning of this section.—A obtains an injunction restraining B from obstructing him in the exercise of his right of way to his land over B's land. A then sells his land to C. If B obstructs C in the enjoyment of the right of way, C's proper remedy is by way of suit against B and not in execution under this section. The reason is that an injunction does not run with the land, and C cannot therefore claim the benefit of the decree against B (d). Note that C is not a transferee of the decree, but of the property only. See notes to s. 50 under the head "Decree for injunction."

(7) It has been held by the High Courts of Allahabad and Bombay that the Official Assignee is not a "representative" of an insolvent judgment-debtor within the meaning of this section (e). On the other hand, it has been recently held by the High Court of Calcutta that the Official Assignee is a "representative" of an insolvent judgment-debtor (f).

(8) It has been held by the High Court of Allahabad that a purchaser from a judgment-debtor under O. 21, r. 83 [Code of 1882, s. 305] is a "representative" of the judgment-debtor within the meaning of this section (g). A obtains a decree against B. In execution of the decree certain property belonging to B is attached, and an order is made for the sale thereof. B then obtains a certificate from the Court under O. 21, r. 83, to sell the property by private sale, and the property is sold to C in pursuance of the certificate. C is a "representative" of B within the meaning of this section.

(9) A purchaser from the judgment-debtor of an occupancy holding not transferable by custom is a "representative" of the judgment-debtor. If the holding is sold in execution of the decree against the judgment-debtor, and such purchaser is dispossessed by the auction-purchaser, the application that he may be restored to possession is to be made under this section, and not under O. 21, r. 100 (h).

(10) A purchaser from a judgment-debtor of a portion of a holding is, so far as his interest is concerned, bound by the decree for rent obtained against the judgment-debtor under s. 148 A of the Bengal Tenancy Act 8 of

- S. 47. 1885 and by the sale in execution of that decree. He is, therefore, a "representative" of the judgment-debtor; and if he is dispossessed by the auction purchaser, he may apply for possession under this section, but not under O. 21, r. 100 (i).

(11) A surety for the performance of a decree is not a "representative" of a party within the meaning of this section (ii).

Execution-purchaser.—We now turn to cases where property belonging to a judgment-debtor is sold in execution of the decree against him, and questions relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree arise subsequent to the sale. These questions may be divided into two classes according to the character of the parties between whom they arise:—

A. Questions between the decree-holder on the one hand and the judgment-debtor on the other, the execution-purchaser being only interested in the result.—These questions being essentially questions between parties to the suit fall within the scope of this section. The fact that the auction-purchaser (who was not a party to the suit) is interested in the result, does not prevent the questions being questions between parties. These questions therefore must be determined by the Court executing the decree, and not by a separate suit. It has been so held in Prosunno Kumar v. Kali Das (j), which is the leading case on the subject. In that case their Lordships of the Privy Council said: "When a question has arisen as to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of a decree between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed, the fact that the purchaser, who is no party to the suit, is interested in the result, has never been held a bar to the application of the section."

Illustrations.

(a) A obtains a decree against B. In execution of the decree certain property belonging to B is sold and purchased by C. B seeks to set aside the sale. B must proceed by an application and not by a regular suit. The mere fact that C, the auction-purchaser, who was no party to A's suit, is interested in the result of the application, is no bar to the application of this section. Now B may seek to set aside the sale—

- (1) on the ground of material irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale, resulting in substantial injury [O. 21, r. 90]; or
- (2) on the ground of fraud in publishing or conducting the sale resulting in substantial injury [O. 21, r. 90]; or
- (3) on making the deposit required by O. 21, r. 89; or
- (4) on other grounds.

(1). If the sale is sought to be set aside on the first ground, the application must be made under O. 21, r. 90.

(2). If the sale is sought to be set aside on the 2nd ground, and this is what was sought to be done in Prosunno Kumar v. Kali Das (k) and the undermentioned cases (l), the application, in cases governed by this Code, must also be made under O. 21, r. 90. Under the Code of 1882, the application would be exclusively one under s. 244 which corresponds to the present section. But the law has now been altered for reasons to be presently stated. The same procedure applies where the sale is sought to be set aside after the same has been confirmed by the Court under O. 21, r. 92; that is to say, B can only proceed by an application, and the application must be one under O. 21, r. 90, though under the Code of 1882, it would have to be made under s. 244 (m). S. 47.

(3) If the sale is sought to be set aside on making the deposit required by O. 21, r. 89, the application must be made under that rule.

(4) If the sale is sought to be set aside on any other ground [see ills. (b) and (c) below], the application must be made under this section.

There is this difference between an application under this section and one under O. 21, rr. 89 and 90, that while an order made on an application under this section has the force of a decree [s. 2, cl. (2)], and is therefore open to a second appeal, an order made under O. 21, r. 92 on an application under O. 21, r. 89 and O. 21, r. 90, is appealable only as on order [O. 49, r. 1, cl. (j)] and no second appeal lies from it [s. 104, sub-s. (2)]. The object of the Legislature in transferring applications to set aside a sale on the ground of fraud in publishing or conducting the sale from the present section to O. 21, r. 90, is to exclude a second appeal from orders made on such applications. See notes to O. 21, r. 89, "Appeal," and notes to O. 21, r. 90 "Fraud in publishing or conducting sale."

(b) A obtains a decree against B, and applies for execution of the decree by attachment and sale of certain property belonging to B. An order is made for sale and the property is sold and purchased by C. B sues A and C to set aside the sale on the ground that the property was not liable to attachment and sale (see s. 60). The suit is barred by the provisions of this section (n). The reason is that the question as to whether the property was saleable or not is really one between A and B, the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed. "It is well settled that as between the judgment-debtor and the decree-holder this is an objection which can only be taken in execution, and it is also well settled that the provisions of s. 244 [now s. 47] prohibit a suit by a party or his representatives against an auction-purchaser to raise a question which as between the judgment-debtor and the decree-holder must have been determined under that section" (o). See notes to s. 60, "Objection to attachment on the ground that the property is not saleable, when to be raised."

(c) A obtains a decree against B. In execution of the decree certain property belonging to B is attached and proclaimed for sale. The decree is subsequently adjusted, but the adjustment is not certified to the Court as required by O. 21, r. 2 [Code of 1882, s. 258]. The consequence is that the property is sold by the Court, and it is purchased by C. A and B sue C to set aside the sale, alleging that they had effected an adjustment of the decree, and that the sale was therefore illegal and unnecessary. The suit is barred under this section for the question whether the decree was adjusted as alleged is one between A, the decree-holder, and B, the judgment-debtor, that is, between the parties to the suit, though they are ranged on one side as plaintiffs (p).

B. Questions between the auction-purchaser on the one hand and a party to the suit or his representative on the other hand.—Cases under this head frequently arise between the auction-purchaser on the one hand and the judgment-debtor on the other when the former is obstructed by the latter in obtaining possession of the property purchased by him. In such cases it has been seen that if the property is purchased by a stranger, he may apply for possession under O. 21, r. 95, or he may at his option bring a regular suit for possession [see p. 124, case 5]. But if the property is purchased by the decree-holder himself, the question arises whether the provisions of the present section apply

- S. 47. so as to bar a regular suit for possession. This again depends on the questions, namely, (1) whether a decree-holder ceases to be a party to the suit within the meaning of this section by reason of his becoming the purchaser at the auction-sale, or whether he continues to be a party notwithstanding that he has become the auction-purchaser, and (2) whether the question as to delivery of possession is a question relating to "the execution, discharge or satisfaction" of the decree within the meaning of this section. If the decree-holder ceases to be a party to the suit by reason of his becoming the auction-purchaser or if the question as to delivery of possession is not a question relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree, the present section does not apply, and the decree-holder-purchaser may apply for possession under O. 21, r. 95, or he may at his option bring a regular suit for possession: this is the view held by the High Courts of Allahabad and Patna and in a large majority of cases by the High Court of Calcutta, and in recent cases by the Chief Court of the Punjab. But if he is to be treated as a party to the suit notwithstanding that he has become the auction-purchaser and the question as to delivery of possession is a question relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree, he can only proceed by way of application and a regular suit is barred under this section: this is the view held by the High Courts of Bombay and Madras and in some cases by the High Court of Calcutta. According to the latter view, a person purchasing property from a decree-holder who has himself bought it at the auction-sale is a "representative of a party to the suit" within the meaning of this section, and he too, therefore, if he is obstructed by the judgment-debtor in obtaining possession, can only proceed by way of application under O. 21, r. 95, coupled with this section, and not by a separate suit (q). See notes on p. 124 above under the head "Proceedings for recovery of possession of property sold in execution," where the subject is fully considered and the cases bearing on the subject have been cited.

Suppose now that the auction-purchaser is a stranger, that is to say, a person other than the decree-holder. Can he be said to be a "representative" of either party to the suit within the meaning of this section? That he is not the representative of the decree-holder seems now to be fairly well established (r). Is an auction-purchaser a representative of the judgment-debtor? In some cases it has been said that he is (s); in others that he is not (t).

Sub-sec. (3): Inquiry as to who is the representative of a party.

—A obtains a decree against B. B dies before the decree is fully executed, and C is brought on the record as B's legal representative under s. 50. D claims to be the legal representative of B. Under the Code of 1882 it was competent to the Court under these circumstances either to stay execution of the decree until the question as to who is the representative of B was determined by a separate suit, or itself to determine the question. The present section makes it obligatory upon the Court executing the decree itself to determine the question (u). The same procedure is to be followed when a question arises in execution proceedings as to whether a certain person is a transferee of a decree, for a transferee of a decree is, as stated above, a "representative" of a party within the meaning of this section. An order determining whether a certain person is or is not the representative of a party is a decree [see s. 2, cl. (2)] and is therefore appealable (v).

Objection by party or his representative that property attached is not liable to attachment.—All objections to attachment raised by a party to the suit in which the decree was passed or his representative come under this section. But objections to attachment raised by a third party come under O. 21, r. 58 [Code of 1882, s. 278]. The distinction is important, for an order under this section, being a “decree” (s. 2) is appealable, while an order under O. 21, r. 58, is not appealable. Moreover, if the objection falls under this section, a separate suit is barred, but if it falls under O. 21, r. 58, a separate suit is not barred. If the property in the hands of a judgment-debtor is attached, and the judgment-debtor objects to the attachment on the ground that the property is not “saleable” within the meaning of s. 60, and should not therefore be attached, as where it is service vatan or an occupancy holding, the objection is one under this section, for it is made by a party to the suit (w). But if the judgment-debtor objects to the attachment on the ground that he holds it on behalf of a third party, e.g., as a trustee, the objection comes under O. 21, r. 58 (x). Similarly where property is attached in execution of a decree passed against a shebait personally, and the defendant objects that the property does not belong to him personally but that it is held by him as shebait of an idol, the objection falls under O. 21, r. 58, and not under this section (y).

A mortgages two properties X and Y to B. He then executes a second mortgage of property X to C. B sues A and C on his mortgage, and both the properties are ordered to be sold. C objects to the sale of property Y alleging that after it was mortgaged to B he (C) purchased it at a revenue sale and that the effect of that sale was to annul the mortgage of that property to B. Here C was joined as a party to the suit in his character of puisne mortgagee, while the objection taken by him to the sale of property of Y is taken in quite a different character, namely, as one claiming by title paramount adversely both to the mortgagor (A) and the mortgagee (B). Such an objection is not one by a “party to the suit” within the meaning of this section and no appeal therefore lies from an order made on his objection (z). See notes to O. 34, r. 1, “Persons having an interest, etc.”

As regards objections to attachment by the legal representative of a deceased judgment-debtor, it has been held that if property in the hands of a legal representative is attached, and the legal representative objects to the attachment on the ground that the property attached is his own property, and does not form part of the estate of the deceased judgment-debtor, the objection is one under this section, for it is made by a representative of a party to the suit (a). But if the legal representative objects to the attachment on the ground that he holds the property on behalf of a third party, the objection is one under O. 21, r. 58 (b).

Where a decree is passed against the karnavan of a tarwad in his representative capacity, all the members of the tarwad must be held to be “parties” to the suit. Hence if a decree is passed against a karnavan in his representative capacity, and the tarwad property is attached in execution of the decree, and a member of the tarwad

See notes to s. 11 under the head "Representative suit," p. 50 ante.

In a recent case before the Judicial Committee, where the son of a deceased Hindu brought a suit for redemption against the auction-purchaser on the ground that the sale held in execution of a decree obtained by the auction-purchaser against him and his father did not pass his interest in the property, but the father's interest only, it was held that the son being a party to the suit in which the decree was passed could have raised the question before the sale was confirmed, and that the suit was barred by the provisions of this section (d).

Where a sale is sought to be set aside on the ground that the "decree" was obtained by fraud.—It has been stated above that where a sale is sought to be set aside on the ground of fraud in publishing or conducting it, the parties must proceed by an application under O. 21, r. 90, and not by a separate suit [see p. 132, ill. (a)]. A suit, however, will lie to set aside a sale if the decree which resulted in the sale was obtained by fraud. The following are the leading cases on the subject:—

1. A suit will lie to set aside a decree and a sale held in execution of the decree, where both the decree and sale are impeached on the ground of fraud (e). The reason is that the question of the validity of a decree can only be determined by a regular suit. See ill. (1) under the head "Separate suit will lie," p. 126 above.

2. A obtains an ex parte decree against B. In execution of the decree certain property belonging to B is sold and purchased by C. The decree is then set aside under O. 9, r. 13. B thereafter sues A and C to set aside the sale, challenging not only the sale, but also the decree, on the ground of fraud. Is the suit barred under this section? No, for B is entitled to show that the decree was obtained by fraud, and this can only be done in a regular suit (f).

Appeal.—On referring to the definition of "decree" given in s. 2 above, it will be seen that an order determining any question within this section is a "decree." Hence an appeal lies from all orders under this section and also a second appeal (s. 100). It is important to note that all orders in execution proceedings are not appealable. As regards appeal, orders in execution proceedings may be divided into two classes:—

- (1) Orders under this section. [An appeal lies from these orders and also a second appeal.]
- (2) Other orders in execution proceedings. These may again be sub-divided into two classes:
 - (a) those which are declared appealable under s. 104; and
 - (b) those which are non-appealable.

Where an order is made in execution proceedings, and the order is non-appealable, attempts are frequently made by the party against whom the order is made to show that the order comes under this section and is therefore appealable (g). Similarly where an order is made in execution proceedings, and the order is appealable under s. 104, attempts are frequently made by the party against whom the order in appeal is made Ss. 47, 48. to show that the order comes under this section to enable the party to prefer a second appeal (h). It will thus be seen that this section is important not only as regards the question whether a separate suit will lie, but also as regards the question of appeal.

It may here be observed that a party is not bound to prefer an appeal against every order in an execution proceeding, though the order may be appealable. It is open to the party aggrieved to challenge by an appeal against the final order which determines the rights of the parties the propriety of the interlocutory orders made in the course of the proceedings (i).

It is also to be observed that it is not every order made in execution of a decree that comes within this section; if that were so, every interlocutory order in an execution proceeding, such as an order granting or refusing process for the examination of witnesses, would be appealable. An order in execution proceedings can come under s. 47 only when it determines some question relating to the rights and liabilities of parties with reference to the relief granted by the decree; not when it determines merely an incidental question as to whether the proceedings are to be conducted in a certain way (j).

Limitation.—An application under this section by a representative of a judgment debtor to set aside a sale on the ground that the property sold belonged to him and not to the deceased judgment-debtor should be made within 30 days from the date of sale (k).

presented after the expiration of the said term of twelve years, where the judgment-debtor has, by fraud or force, prevented the execution of the decree at some time within twelve years immediately before the date of the application ; or

(b) to limit or otherwise affect the operation of article 180 of the second schedule to the Indian Limitation Act, 1877.

Changes made in the section.—This section corresponds with the third and fourth paras. of s. 230 of the Code of 1882 (of which the provisions have been set forth below) except in the following particulars :—

- (1) The provisions of s. 230 applied only to decrees “for the payment of money or delivery of other property.” The present section applies to all decrees other than decrees granting an injunction.
- (2) The provisions of s. 230 applied only where an application for execution had been made “under this section and granted.” The words “under this section” as also the words “and granted” have been omitted in the present section. The result is that the rule of limitation contained in this section applies whether the previous application for execution was made under this section or not, and whether the application was granted or not. See notes below, under the head “Orders on application for execution.”
- (3) The words “or the decree (if any) on appeal affirming the same,” which occurred in s. 230, cl. (a), after the words “the date of the decree sought to be enforced,” have been omitted in this section. On a proper construction of that section, those words were quite unnecessary. See notes below, under the head “Date of decree sought to be executed.”
- (4) The words “or at recurring periods” in sub-section (1), cl. (b), are new. They are intended to give effect to certain decisions under s. 230 of the Code of 1882. See notes below under the head “Where payment is directed to be made at recurring periods.”
- (5) Clause (b) of sub-section (2) is new. It gives effect to certain decisions under s. 230 of the Code of 1882. See notes below under the head “Successive applications for execution of decrees of Chartered High Courts.”

Civil Procedure Code, 1882, section 230, third and fourth paras — In view of the several alterations made in s. 230 of the Code of 1882, we give below the provisions of that section, indicating in italics those words that have been omitted in the present section :—

“Where an application to execute a decree for the payment of money or delivery of other property has been made under this section and granted, no subsequent application to execute the same decree shall be granted after the expiration of twelve years from any of the following dates (namely) :—

- (a) the date of the decree sought to be enforced, or of the decree (if any) on appeal affirming the same, or

- (b) where the decree or any subsequent order directs any payment of money, or the delivery of any property, to be made at a certain date—the date of the default in making the payment or delivering the property in respect of which the applicant seeks to enforce the decree.

Nothing in this section shall prevent the Court from granting an application for execution of a decree after the expiration of the said term of twelve years where the judgment-debtor has, by fraud or force, prevented the execution of the decree at some time within twelve years immediately before the date of the application."

Successive applications for execution of decrees of Courts other than Chartered High Courts.—What is stated in this paragraph is confined to applications for execution of decrees of Courts other than Chartered High Courts. A decree-holder is entitled to present in succession any number of applications for execution of the same decree (l), and the Court has no power to refuse execution, unless—

- (i) the application is barred by virtue of general principles of law analogous to those of res judicata; or
- (ii) the application is barred under art. 182 of the Limitation Act, 1908; or
- (iii) the execution of the decree is barred under sub-section (1) of the present section (m), though the application for execution may not be barred under cl. (i) or cl. (ii) above.

Clause (i).—Thus if the first application for execution is dismissed after a hearing on the merits, the Court will not, having regard to the general principles of law analogous to those of res judicata, entertain a subsequent application for execution of the same decree (n). See notes to s. 11, "Orders in execution proceedings, etc.," p. 64 above.

Clause (ii).—Though an application for execution may not be barred as res judicata, the Court will not entertain it if it is barred under art. 182 of the Limitation Act, 1908. Leaving out of consideration certain portions of that article, the rule of limitation set forth in that article may be stated thus: the first application for execution must be made within three years from the date of the decree sought to be executed, and every successive application for execution of the same decree must be made within three years from the date of the last application. By this process a decree may be kept alive for any number of years. To this a limit has been set by the rule contained in the present section which is considered in the next clause.

Clause (iii).—Though an application for execution of a decree may not be barred as res judicata or under art. 182 of the Limitation Act, 1908, no order should be made for execution of the decree, if the application is presented after the expiration of twelve years (1) from the date of the decree or (2) from the date fixed by the decree for the payment of money or for the delivery of any property under the decree (o). A obtains a decree against B for Rs. 1,000 on 1st January 1894 and applies for execution of the decree within three years from the date of the decree. Further applications are made for execution of the same decree each within a period of three years from the date of the next preceding application, and the last of these is made in December 1905. A then makes a fresh application for execution on 1st January 1908. No order should be made for execution of the decree, for though the application is not barred under the Limitation Act, it is barred under this section as it is made twelve years after the date of the decree.

[Note.—Under section 230 of the Code of 1882 the twelve years' limitation did not apply unless one at least of the applications prior to that made on 1st January 1908 had been granted by the Court. If none of the applications was granted, the rule did not apply. But the words "and granted," which occurred in that section, have now been omitted, and it is no longer material to inquire whether any one of the previous applications was granted by the Court.]

Where payment is directed to be made "at a certain date."—If in the case put above, the decree had directed payment of Rs. 1,000 to be made at a certain date, for instance, on 1st March 1894, the period of twelve years would run from that date. See sub-section (1), cl. (b).

Where payment is directed to be made at "recurring periods."—The words "at recurring periods" have been added into the section to give effect to decisions under s. 230 of the Code of 1882. In fact, these words were read into that section in the undermentioned cases (p). Thus if a decree, dated 1st January 1903, directs payments to be made annually, but no dates are specified, the first yearly payment will fall due on 1st January 1904, the second on 1st January 1905, and thenceforward on the corresponding date year after year. Hence the period of twelve years prescribed by this section will run as regards the application to enforce the first yearly payment, from 1st January 1904, as regards the application to enforce the second yearly payment, from 1st January 1905, and so forth.

Where payment is directed to be made on the happening of a contingency.—In such a case, the period of 12 years provided by this section is to be computed from the date when the contingency happens (for until then the decree is not capable of execution), and not from the date of the decree (q).

Successive applications for execution of decrees of Chartered High Courts.—The holder of a decree of a Chartered High Court passed in the exercise of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction is entitled to present in succession any number of applications for execution of the decree, and the Court is bound to entertain them, unless the application is barred—

- (i) by virtue of general principles of law analogous to those of res judicata ; or
- (ii) under art. 180 of the Limitation Act, 1877 [now art. 183 of the Limitation Act, 1908], that being the article which applies to decrees of Chartered High Courts.

It will be observed that cl. (iii) which occurs in the preceding paragraph does not occur here. The reason is that the twelve years' rule laid down in this section does not limit or otherwise affect the operation of art. 183 of the Limitation Act, 1908, as it does that of art. 182. In other words, the said rule does not apply to decrees passed by Chartered High Courts. It was so held under the Code of 1882 (r). The same is now expressly enacted by sub-section (2), clause (b). Hence a decree of a Chartered High Court may be kept alive for any number of years. The same rule applies to Orders in Council made on appeal to the Privy Council (s). [The period of limitation for an application for execution of a decree of a Chartered High Court in the exercise of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction as distinguished from appellate civil jurisdiction (t) is twelve years from the several dates specified in art. 183 of the Limitation Act, 1908.]

Orders on application for execution.—An application for execution may either be— S. 48.

- (1) granted; or
- (2) refused—
 - (a) in circumstances operating as a bar to future execution, as where it is refused on the ground that it is barred on the principle of res judicata or barred by the law of limitation, or
 - (b) in circumstances not operating as a bar to future execution, as where it is refused on the ground that it is not in accordance with law [O. 21, r. 17] (u); or
- (3) withdrawn by the applicant—
 - (a) in circumstances operating as a bar to future execution, as where the withdrawal was with the object of abandoning execution, or
 - (b) in circumstances not operating as a bar to future execution (v).

Under s. 230 of the Code of 1882, the twelve years' limitation imposed by that section applied only if one at least of the previous applications was granted by the Court but not otherwise. Under the present section the twelve years' limitation applies though none of the previous applications may have been granted, in other words, though all the previous applications may have been refused or withdrawn. All that the section now provides is that where an application to execute a decree has been made, whether it be granted or not, no order for the execution of the same decree shall be made upon any fresh application presented after the expiration of twelve years from the date specified in the section.

“Fresh application” to execute the same decree.—The expression “fresh application” has been substituted as being a better expression for the expression “subsequent application.” Hence the decisions bearing on the words “subsequent application” apply equally to the words “fresh application.” We proceed to state the effect of those decisions substituting the word “fresh” for the word “subsequent.” The “fresh application” referred to in this section means a substantive application for execution and not merely an ancillary application made with the object of moving the Court to proceed in the matter of a substantive application already on the file (w). Thus where property has been attached on an application for execution, an application for sale of the attached property is not a fresh application to execute the decree within the meaning of this section (x). Similarly where a warrant is issued for the arrest of a judgment-debtor on an application for execution, but the warrant is returned by the peon sent to arrest the judgment-debtor with the remark that the judgment-debtor could not be found, a subsequent application for the arrest of the judgment-debtor is not a fresh application to execute the decree within the meaning of this section but is merely an incidental application to carry on proceedings already commenced (y). On the same principle it has been held that an application to revive an application for execution is not a fresh application within the meaning of this section (z).

An application to transfer a decree to another Court for execution is not an application for execution within the meaning of this section. Such an application, though

- S. 48. made within twelve years from the date of the decree, will not entitle the decree holder to execution if the application for execution to the Court to which the decree is transferred is made after the expiration of twelve years (a).

“Date of decree sought to be executed.”—The rule of law is that it is only the final decree that can be executed (b). Hence if the decree sought to be executed is a decree of a Court of first instance, the period of twelve years prescribed by this section runs from the date of that decree. And if the decree sought to be executed is an appellate decree, that period runs from the date of the appellate decree, whether the original decree is affirmed, or whether it is set aside or modified, on appeal (c). The words “or of the decree (if any) on appeal affirming the same” which occurred in cl. (a) of s. 230 of the Code of 1882 have been omitted as being unnecessary and calculated to give rise to the contention, by reason of the word “affirmed,” that where the original decree was modified or set aside on appeal, the period of twelve years was to run from date of the original decree. On the same principle, where a portion of a decree is appealed from and the rest is not, the period of 12 years prescribed by this section runs from the date of the appellate decree both as regards the application to execute the portion appealed from and the portion not appealed from. The reason is that there is only one decree that can be executed, and that is the decree of the Appellate Court (d). Similarly where a second appeal is preferred to the High Court from a decree passed in first appeal, and an order is made by the High Court declaring the appeal before it to have abated, the period of twelve years under this section runs from the date of that order, and not from the date on which the decree was passed in first appeal (e). See notes to s. 36, p. 109.

By a decree dated 17th November 1897 the defendant is directed inter alia to pay Rs. 6,000 forthwith to the plaintiff. On 28th January 1899 the decree is amended in some other respects. Several applications for execution are made and the decree is thus kept alive. On 2nd December 1909, that is, more than 12 years after the date of the original decree, but within 12 years from the date of the amended decree, the plaintiff applies for execution. The sum of Rs. 6,000 being directed by the original decree to be paid forthwith, the period of 12 years is to be computed from the date of the original decree, and the application is barred so far as it relates to the sum of Rs. 6,000 (f).

The expression “decree” in this section means a decree capable of execution. Thus where a decree entitles the plaintiff to recover the amount thereof from the defendant personally in the event of the happening of a certain contingency, the period of twelve years provided by this section is to be computed from the date when the contingency happens, and not the date of the decree (g).

As to the operation of this section on applications for an order absolute under s. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882 [now O. 34, r. 5], see the undermentioned case (h).

“Fresh application presented after the expiration of twelve years.”

—These words make it quite clear that all that the section requires is the presenting of the fresh application within twelve years from the date of the decree. The order on the fresh application may be made after the expiration of twelve years. The section does not preclude the Court from making an order for execution after the expiration of twelve years, if the application was presented within that period. In fact, it was so held by the High Court of Madras under the corresponding section of the Code of 1882 (i).

“Decree not being a decree granting an injunction.”—The operation of the twelve years' rule laid down in this section is now extended to all decrees except decrees granting an injunction. Under s. 230 of the Code of 1882, the rule was confined to decrees “for the payment of money and decrees for the delivery of other property.” Under that section the question was raised whether a mortgage-decree was a decree for the payment of money, and the decisions were not uniform. The present section applies to money-decrees as well as mortgage-decrees, in fact to all decrees except decrees granting an injunction (j).

“Subsequent order.”—The expression “subsequent order” in sub-sec. (1), cl. (b), means a subsequent order made by the Court which passed the decree and acting as such Court, and not an order of a Court executing a decree. Thus an order under O. 20, r. 11 (2), is a “subsequent order” within the meaning of cl. (b), but not an order made by a Court executing a decree allowing time to the judgment-debtor for payment of the decretal amount (k).

“Payment to be made at a certain date or at recurring periods.”

—See notes above under the head “Successive applications for execution of decrees of Courts other than Chartered High Courts.”

Whether the section is retrospective.—A obtains a mortgage-decree against B in 1900, that is, before the present Code came into force. A applies for execution of the decree from time to time, and the last of such applications is made in 1914, that is, more than 12 years after the date of the decree. Is execution of the decree barred under this section, regard being had to the fact that the old section did not apply to mortgage decrees and that the present section does apply to such decrees? No; according to the Allahabad High Court, the reason given being that this section is not retrospective (l). Yes, according to the Calcutta High Court, the reason given being that the present section applies to mortgage-decrees, and an application made in 1914 must be deemed to have been made under the present Code (m). The High Court of Patna has followed the Calcutta decision (n).

Fraud —“Fraud” or “force” on the part of a judgment-debtor at any stage of the execution gives a new starting point for the period of limitation (o). The word “fraud” in this section is to be interpreted in a wider sense than that in which it is generally used in English law (p). Locking up the house so as to prevent attachment of moveable property (q), or evading arrest by any contrivance, or dishonestly evading payment by eluding service of warrant (r), is “fraud” within the meaning of this section. Similarly a fictitious transfer of his property made by a judgment-debtor to defeat or delay the execution of decrees that may be passed against him amounts to “fraud” within the meaning of this section (s). The presentation by a judgment-debtor of an application to set aside a decree passed ex parte against him, the sole object of the application being to delay the proceedings in execution of the decree, is “fraud”

But though the Court has the power to grant execution after the expiration of twelve years from the date of the decree on the ground of fraud or force on the part of the judgment-debtor, the Court should not use that power unless it is satisfied that the decree-holder on his part had been diligent in proceeding with the execution from the date of the decree (u). It is doubtful whether the fraud of one of several judgment-debtors keeps the decree alive against all of them (v).

Minority.—A decree is passed in August 1897 on behalf of a minor in a suit brought by his guardian for partition and mesne profits. Various applications for execution are made by the minor through his guardian within 3 years of each other. The period of 12 years prescribed by this section expires in August 1909. The minor attains majority in November 1909, and in November 1910 he applies for execution of the decree, alleging that he is entitled to an extension of the period on the ground of minority. Is he entitled to any extension either under sec. 6 of the Limitation Act, 1908, or under any other law? It has been held by the High Court of Madras that he is not entitled to any extension under sec. 6, on the ground that that section is expressly limited to cases where the limitation is provided in the Limitation Act itself; and, further, that there is no law apart from the said sec. 6 under which minority is a ground of exemption from the operation of the law of limitation (w). The High Court of Bombay agrees with the Madras High Court in holding that sec. 6 of the Limitation Act applies only to cases dealt with by the Act itself, but differs from that Court in that it holds that the minor is entitled to an extension of the period under the general principle of law which is that time does not run against a minor (x). But it has been held by the same Court that where the decree has been obtained in the first instance by an adult, the fact that the decree on his death passes to an heir who is a minor does not extend the period of 12 years prescribed by the present section (y). In the last-mentioned case it was assumed that the provisions of the Limitation Act applied to the case, but it was held that time having once begun to run, the decree having been obtained by an adult, no subsequent disability, that is, minority, can arrest it, having regard to the provisions of sec. 9 of the Limitation Act. The High Court of Allahabad has followed the Madras decision (z).

Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act 17 of 1879, ss. 47-48.—In computing the period of 12 years provided by this section, the time taken up in procuring a conciliator's certificate as required by the abovementioned Act, is to be excluded (a).

50. [s. 234.] (1) Where a judgment-debtor dies before the decree has been fully satisfied the holder of the decree may apply to the Court which passed it to execute the same against the legal representatives of the deceased.

Legal representative.

(2) Where the decree is executed against such legal representative, he shall be liable only to the extent of the property of the deceased which has come to his hands and has not been duly disposed of; and, for the purpose of ascertaining such liability, the Court executing the decree may of its own motion or on the application of the decree-holder, compel such legal representative to produce such accounts as it thinks fit.

Changes introduced by the section.—The present section differs from the corresponding section 234, C. P. C., 1882, in one respect, viz., that the words “fully satisfied” have been substituted for the words “fully executed.” See notes below under the head “Before the decree has been fully satisfied.”

Extent of liability of legal representative.—This section enables a decree-holder to execute his decree against the legal representative of a deceased judgment-debtor. The liability of a legal representative in execution proceedings is confined to the property of the deceased which has actually come to his hands. If the decree-holder seeks to make the legal representative answerable also for the property of the deceased, which with due diligence on his part would have come to his hands, his proper remedy is by way of suit against the legal representative, and not by proceedings in execution under this section (b).

A decree-holder is entitled under this section to have the amount of the decree paid out of the assets of the deceased in the hands of the legal representative which have not yet been duly disposed of. Hence the legal representative is bound to pay to the decree-holder the full amount of the decree, though there may be other creditors of the deceased, and the assets may not be sufficient to pay them all in full (c).

Legal representative.—“Legal representative” means a person who in law represents the estate of a deceased person, and includes any person who intermeddles with the estate of the deceased [see s. 2, cl. (11)]. Thus where a judgment-debtor dies and a stranger takes possession of his property, the decree may be executed against the stranger, for he is a "legal representative" within the meaning of this section (d). Similarly where upon the death of a judgment-debtor possession of his property is taken by a residuary legatee under his will, and such legatee applies for letters of administration with the will annexed, the decree may be executed against him, though letters of administration may not have been granted to him on the date of the order for execution. The reason is that a residuary legatee in possession of the estate of the deceased, who has applied for letters of administration with the will annexed, is a "legal representative" within the meaning of this section (e). The purchaser of the business of a firm against which a decree has been passed is not the "legal representative" of the firm within the meaning of this section. The decree against the firm cannot therefore be executed against the purchaser (f).

"Before the decree has been fully satisfied."—The corresponding section of the Code of 1882 (s. 234) provided in effect that if a judgment-debtor died before the decree had been "fully executed," his legal representative should be brought on the record before the proceedings in execution were carried any further. This gave rise to the question, when can a decree be said to be 'fully executed'? It was held by the High Court of Madras that a decree could not be said to be "fully executed" until the property attached was sold, and that if the judgment-debtor died before sale his legal representative ought to be brought on the record; and if the property was sold without the legal representative being brought on the record, the sale should be set aside (g). On the other hand, it was held by the High Court of Allahabad that once the property was attached the decree was said to be "fully executed" and the property could be sold without the legal representative being brought on the record. The latter decision was based on the ground that once a property was attached, it was in the hands of the law, and the attachment did not abate on the death of the judgment-debtor (h).

It was to remove this conflict of decisions that the word "satisfied" has been substituted in the present section for the word "executed." The section provides in effect that if a judgment-debtor dies before the decree has been "fully satisfied", his legal representative ought to be brought on the record before the proceedings in execution are carried further. It is clear that mere attachment of the property of a judgment-debtor does not amount to satisfaction of the decree. Therefore, if the judgment-debtor died during the pendency of the attachment, the property cannot be sold unless his legal representative is brought on the record. The Allahabad decisions, therefore, are no longer law. If the property is sold without bringing the legal representative of the judgment-debtor on the record, the sale is illegal, and it must be set aside conformably with the Madras decisions.

"May apply to execute the decree against the legal representative."—This does not mean that when a judgment-debtor dies after execution proceedings have been commenced against him the decree-holder must present a fresh application for execution against his legal representative under the provisions of O. 21, r. 11. All that is necessary is to apply to the Court which passed the decree for liberty to continue the execution proceedings against the legal representative by substituting the name of the legal representative for that of the judgment-debtor in the application for execution Ss. 50, 51. already on the files of the Court (i). See O. 21, r. 22.

The application for execution against a legal representative must be made to the Court which passed the decree.—If a judgment-debtor dies after the decree is sent for execution by the Court which passed it to another Court, should the application for execution against the legal representative be made to the Court which passed the decree, or can it be made to the Court to which the decree has been sent for execution? It has been held by the High Court of Bombay (j), Allahabad (k) and Madras (l), that the application for execution in such a case must be made to the Court which passed the decree, and that the Court to which the decree is sent for execution is not competent to entertain the application and make an order of execution against the legal representative. If such an order is made by that Court, the same will be set aside. On the other hand, it has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that an application for execution may be made in such a case to the Court to which the decree is sent for execution (m).

Successive deaths of judgment-debtor and his legal representative.—If the legal representative of a judgment-debtor against whom execution has been taken out under this section dies before the decree has been fully executed, the decree-holder may execute the decree against his legal representative to the extent of the assets of the original judgment-debtor that may have come into the hands of such legal representative (n).

Orders passed in the lifetime of the deceased.—A obtains a decree against B. A then transfers the decree to C. C applies for execution against B, and an order is made for execution after notice to A and B as provided by O. 21, r. 16 [Code of 1882, s. 232]. A then dies, and his legal representative D is brought on the record under this section. The order for execution having been passed in A's lifetime, D cannot object to execution on the ground that the transfer to C was fraudulent (o).

Decree for injunction.—An injunction obtained against a defendant restraining the latter from obstructing the access of light and air to certain windows may, on the death of the defendant, be enforced under this section against his son as his legal representative by procedure under O. 21, r. 32 [Code of 1882, s. 260] (p). But such an injunction cannot be enforced under this section against a purchaser of the property from the defendant, for an injunction does not run with the land. The remedy of the decree-holder is to bring a fresh suit for an injunction against the purchaser (q). See notes to s. 11, "Decree for injunction and res judicata," on p. 36 above, and notes to s. 47 "No. 6—Purchaser of property, etc.," on p. 131 above.

- (c) by arrest and detention in prison;
- (d) by appointing a receiver; or
- (e) in such other manner as the nature of the relief granted may require.

Receiver in execution proceedings.—A receiver may be appointed to realize a decree attached in execution proceedings. A obtains a decree against B. In execution of the decree A attaches a decree held by B against C (O. 21, r. 53). The Court may appoint a receiver to realize the decree attached, if this course is likely to benefit the parties more than the sale of the attached decree (r). Similarly a receiver may be appointed to realize a debt attached in execution of a decree (s). See notes to O. 21, r. 46, "Procedure where garnishee denies debt." But the Court has no jurisdiction to appoint a receiver of the future earnings of a judgment-debtor (t) nor of future allowance of maintenance payable to a judgment-debtor (u).

A obtains a decree against B. By consent of parties C is appointed receiver to take charge of certain properties for the execution of the decree. A then applies to the Court for the discharge of C as receiver, but the application is refused. The order is relating to "execution" within the meaning of s. 47, and is therefore appealable (v).

Enforcement of decree against legal representative.

(2) Where no such property remains in the possession of the judgment-debtor, and he fails to satisfy the Court that he has duly applied such property of the deceased as is proved to have come into his possession, the decree may be executed against the judgment-debtor to the extent of the property in respect of which he has failed so to satisfy the Court in the same manner as if the decree had been against him personally.

Scope of the section.—Section 50 provides for the case where a decree has been passed against a party and the party dies before the decree is fully satisfied, and the decree is sought to be executed against his legal representative. The present section provides for the case where a decree is passed against the legal representative of a deceased person. As to the latter case it is provided by this section that if the decree is for the payment of money out of the property of the deceased, the decree may be executed against the property of the deceased in the hands of the legal representative. But in so far as the property of the deceased come into the hands of the legal representative has not been duly applied by him, the decree may be executed against the legal representative as if the decree was to that extent passed against him personally. In other words, the legal representative can be proceeded against personally to the extent only to which he has failed to apply the assets duly. An executor or administrator under the Indian Succession Act (s. 282) and Probate and Administration Act (s. 104) is bound to pay the creditors of the deceased "equally and rateably." If an executor or administrator under those Acts fails to pay the debts rateably, a creditor of a deceased person, who has obtained a decree against his executor or administrator, is entitled to proceed against him personally on the ground that the property of the deceased has not been "duly" applied within the meaning of this section. But the case is different where a decree has been obtained against an heir of a deceased Hindu or Mahomedan as his legal representative. In such a case, every payment by the heir on account of debts due by the deceased would be a due application of the assets, whether the debts were paid rateably or not. There is no analogy between the case of an executor or administrator governed by the provisions of the above-mentioned Acts and of an heir as a legal representative under the Hindu or Mahomedan law (w).

Legal representative.—"Legal representative" means a person who in law represents the estate of a deceased person, and includes any person who intermeddles with the estate of the deceased, and, where a party sues or is sued in a representative character, the person on whom the estate devolves on the death of the party so suing or sued. See s. 2, c. (11).

As to how far a decree passed against one of several Mahomedan heirs binds the other heirs, see Sir Roland Wilson's digest of Anglo-Muhammadian Law, 4th ed., p. 226, and Mulla's Principles of Mahommadan Law, 6th ed., p. 20.

Where on the death of a Hindu father, his sons are brought on the record as his legal representatives in a suit pending against him at the time of his death, the decree should be against them in their representative capacity, and not against them personally. It is clear that where the decree is against the sons in their representative character, it can only be executed against the estate of the father in the hands of the sons as provided by this section (x).

Decree against a wrong person as heir and legal representative.—A decree obtained against an executor or administrator of the estate of a deceased person is a decree against the estate of the deceased. But a decree obtained against the heir of a deceased Hindu or Mahomedan as his legal representative is not a decree against the estate of the deceased even if the decree provides for the payment of the decretal amount out of the property of the deceased in the hands of such heir. Therefore, a decree obtained by a creditor of a deceased Hindu against a wrong person as his heir cannot be executed against the rightful heir who is in possession of the property. The creditor must obtain a fresh decree against the rightful heir (y).

Decree against executor who has not proved.—A creditor of a deceased debtor cannot sue a person named as executor in the will of the deceased unless he has either administered, that is, intermeddled with the estate, or proved the will. Where a decree is obtained against such person, and property belonging to the deceased is sold under such a decree, the sale is ineffectual to bind the testator's estate (z).

- S. 33. 53. [New.] For the purposes of section 50 and section 52 property in the hands of a son or other descendant which is liable under Hindu law for the payment of the debt of a deceased ancestor, in respect of which a decree has been passed, shall be deemed to be property of the deceased which has come to the hands of the son or other descendant as his legal representative.

Liability of ancestral property.

Scope of the section.—This section has been enacted to enforce the recognized rule of the Hindu law namely, that members of a joint Hindu family may not escape the payment out of the joint family property of any debt incurred and decreed against their father before his death, provided that such debt is not tainted by immorality. A decree, therefore, for an injunction obtained against the father alone (restraining him from obstructing the plaintiff from using a water-tank), cannot, after the father's death, be enforced in execution against the sons. This section does not apply to such a decree (a).

Liability of ancestral property in execution proceedings.—This section is new. It settles a question of procedure on which there was a conflict of judicial decisions. To understand the precise scope of the section it is necessary to bear in mind the rule of Hindu law that where a son or grandson takes any ancestral property by survivorship, he is bound to pay out of such property all debts of his ancestor not incurred for immoral or illegal purposes including judgment-debts. The question we are now concerned with is—by what procedure is this liability to be enforced? We proceed to consider the subject under the following four heads:—

1. Where a money-decree has been passed against the father, and the father dies before issue of execution.—A and his sons B and C constitute a joint Hindu family owning ancestral property. D obtains a decree against A for Rs. 5,000. A dies, and on his death B and C take the ancestral property by survivorship. A does not leave any self-acquired property. D applies for execution of the decree against B and C to the extent of the ancestral property that has come into their hands. Is this the right procedure or should D institute a fresh suit against B and C to recover the debt? According to the procedure prescribed by this Code, D should first proceed to bring B and C on the record as the legal representatives of A under s. 50, and then apply under that section to the Court which passed the decree to execute the same against B and C to the extent of the ancestral property come to their hands. The words in s. 50 are, “to the extent of the property of the deceased which has come to his [legal representative's] hands.” According to the present section, the ancestral property in the hands of B and C being liable under Hindu law for the payment of A's debts, is to be deemed, for the purposes of s. 50, to be the property of the deceased which has come to the hands of B and C as the legal representatives of A. If B and C object that the debt in respect of which the decree was passed was tainted with immorality, the question is one “relating to the execution of the decree” within the meaning of s. 47, and it should be determined by the Court executing the decree. This coincides with the view taken by the High Courts of Bombay and Calcutta under the Code of 1882 (b). According to the Madras and Allahabad decisions under that Code, a decree against a Hindu father could not be executed against ancestral property in the hands of the sons not even to the extent of the father's interest in the property, and the only remedy of the decree-holder was to institute a regular suit against the sons. This view proceeded on the ground that the question whether the debts were tainted with immorality was not one that could be gone into in execution proceedings (c). These decisions are no longer law. Ss. 53, 54.

2. Where a money-decree has been passed against the father, and the father dies after attachment of the ancestral property.—All the High Courts are agreed that where the father dies after attachment of the ancestral property, the proceedings in execution can be continued against the sons (d). In fact, having regard to the provisions of the present section, a separate suit against the sons would be barred by s. 47. As to whether the sons should in such a case be brought on the record, see notes to s. 50 under the head "Before the decree has been fully satisfied," on p. 146 above.

3. Where a mortgage-decree has been passed against the father, and the father dies before sale of the mortgaged property.—Where a decree is obtained against the father for sale of ancestral property mortgaged by him, and he dies before sale, the proceedings in execution may be continued against the sons. But the sons, not being parties to the suit, are entitled to raise in execution proceedings such questions as they could have raised if they had been made parties (e). They can dispute the factum of the debt, or they can show that the debt was incurred for immoral purposes and is not therefore binding on the property (f). See notes to O. 34, r. 1, "Mortgage of joint family property."

4. Where a decree has been passed against the sons in respect of their father's debt for payment of the debt out of the ancestral property.—In such a case, the decree-holder may proceed to execute the decree by attachment and sale of the ancestral property come to the hands of the sons. The proceedings would be under s. 52. The expression "property of the deceased" in that section would be construed in the light of the present section. In fact, s. 53 is an Explanation to ss. 50 and 52, explaining the meaning of the expression "property of the deceased."

It will be seen from what has been stated above that a creditor can now follow the property in the hands of the sons or grandsons in execution not only in cases (2), (3) and (4), but also in case (1).

"Debt of a deceased ancestor."—As to debts for which a Hindu son or grandson is liable, see Mulla's Hindu Law, 3rd ed., sec. 243, p. 264.

54. [s. 265.] Where the decree is for the partition of an undivided estate assessed to the payment of revenue to the Government, or for the separate possession of a share of such an estate, the partition of the estate or the separation of the share shall be made by the Collector or any gazetted subordinate of the Collector deputed by him in this behalf, in accordance with the law (if any) for the time being in force relating to the partition, or the separate possession of shares, of such estates.

S. 54. Partition by Collector.—This section is a reproduction of s. 265 of the Code of 1882 with a few verbal alterations. Where a decree has been passed for partition or for separate possession of a share of an estate of the kind mentioned in this section, the proper authority to effect the partition or to deliver possession of the share is the Collector; the Court has no power to do so (g).

Application of the section.—This section does not apply to a suit for partition of a revenue-paying estate where no separate allotment of revenue is asked for. It has been so held by a Full Bench of the High Court of Calcutta in Jogodishuri v. Kailash Chandra (h), a case under s. 265 of the Code of 1882. Commenting on that section Maclean, C.J., said: “The suit is one for the partition, not of the whole estate, but of a part only of the estate, and it does not seek to affect any division or payment of the revenue. I do not think that the section intended to make it compulsory that the Collector should make the partition, save in cases where as the result of partition the revenue would or might be affected.”

Partition.—The term “partition” in this section is not confined to a mere division of the lands in question into the requisite parts, but includes the delivery of the shares to their respective allottees (i).

Court's jurisdiction to control Collector's action.—Where the decree relates to an estate of the kind mentioned in this section, it should declare the rights of the several parties interested in the property, but as regards partition or separation it should direct the same to be made by the Collector or any gazetted subordinate of the Collector deputed by him in that behalf (j) [see O. 20, r. 18]. This section places the execution of the decree entirely in the Collector's hands. But if the Collector contravenes the decretal command of the Court, or transgresses the law for the time being in force relating to partition, his action is subject to the control and correction of the Court which passed the decree and sent it to him for execution (k). In such a case, the aggrieved party should proceed by an application under s. 47, and not by a separate suit (l). Where a Collector has once made a partition there is nothing to prevent him from reversing the partition for mistake or other cause before he has passed final orders and returned the proceedings to the Court (m).

It has been held by the High Court of Bombay that an objection that the Collector has made an unequal partition is no ground for interference by the Court with the order passed by the Collector (n). But in a Madras case, where all the parties objected to a partition effected by the Collector on the ground that it was unequal, it was held that the Court had the power to entertain the objection (o).

Estate.—The word “estate” is here used in its ordinary signification (p), Sheri lands, that is lands held under a lease from Government for a fixed period, come within the terms of this section as revenue-paying lands (q). But isolated plots of land which fall short of being the share of a co-sharer of a mahal do not (r). A raiyyatwari holding has been held not to be an “estate” within the meaning of this section (s).

ARREST AND DETENTION.

55. [s. 336.] (1) A judgment-debtor may be arrested

Arrest and detention. in execution of a decree at any hour and on any day, and shall, as soon as practicable, be brought before the Court, and his detention may be in the civil prison of the district in which the Court ordering the detention is situate, or, where such civil prison does not afford suitable accommodation, in any other place which the Local Government may appoint for the detention of persons ordered by the Courts of such district to be detained :

Provided, firstly, that, for the purpose of making an arrest under this section, no dwelling-house shall be entered after sunset and before sunrise :

Provided, secondly, that no outer door of a dwelling-house shall be broken open unless such dwelling-house is in the occupancy of the judgment-debtor and he refuses or in any way prevents access thereto, but when the officer authorised to make the arrest has duly gained access to any dwelling house, he may break open the door of any room in which he has reason to believe the judgment-debtor is to be found :

Provided, thirdly, that, if the room is in the actual occupancy of a woman who is not the judgment-debtor and who according to the customs of the country does not appear in public, the officers authorized to make the arrest shall give notice to her that she is at liberty to withdraw, and after allowing a reasonable time for her to withdraw and giving her reasonable facility for withdrawing, may enter the room for the purpose of making the arrest :

Provided, fourthly, that, where the decree in execution of which a judgment-debtor is arrested, is a decree for the payment of money and the judgment-debtor pays the amount of the decree and the costs of the arrest to the officer arresting him, such officer shall at once release him.

(2) The Local Government may, by notification in the local official Gazette, declare that any person or class of persons whose arrest might be attended with danger or inconvenience to the public shall not be liable to arrest in execution of a decree otherwise than in accordance with such procedure as may be prescribed by the Local Government in this behalf.

(3) Where a judgment-debtor is arrested in execution of a decree for the payment of money and brought before the Court, the Court shall inform him that he may apply to be declared an insolvent, and that he will be discharged if he has not committed any act of bad faith regarding the subject of the application and if he complies with the provisions of the law of insolvency for the time being in force.

(4) Where a judgment-debtor expresses his intention to apply to be declared an insolvent and furnishes security, to the satisfaction of the Court, that he will within one month so apply and that he will appear, when called upon, in any proceeding upon the application or upon the decree in execution of which he was arrested, the Court shall release him from arrest, and, if he fails so to apply and to appear, the Court may either direct the security to be realized or commit him to civil prison in execution of the decree.

Changes introduced by the section.—This section corresponds with s. 336 of the Code of 1882, except in the following particulars:—

1. Any outer door of a dwelling-house may now be broken open to effect the arrest of a judgment-debtor in execution of a decree. But the dwelling house must be in the occupancy of the judgment-debtor. See sub-section (1), proviso (2).
2. A surety under this section is no longer entitled to be released from his liability by the mere filing by the judgment-debtor of a petition in insolvency. Note the words "and that he will appear, when called upon, in any proceeding upon the application or upon the decree in execution of which he was arrested," in sub-section (4).
3. A power has been conferred on the Local Government to exempt certain persons from arrest. See sub-section (2).

Breaking open of outer door.—Under the Code of 1882, the breaking open of any outer door of a dwelling-house was strictly prohibited. This prohibition has now been removed to this extent that where a dwelling-house is in the occupancy of the judgment-debtor, and he refuses or prevents access thereto, the officer authorized to make the arrest may break open any outer door of such dwelling-house. But this does not authorize him to break open the outer door of a dwelling-house merely because the judgment-debtor is to be found in that house. The prohibition above referred to as well as the prohibition against entering a dwelling-house after sunset for effecting an arrest are to be traced to the maxim of English law that "a man's house is his castle." Referring to this maxim, Bentham wrote more than a century ago: "This poetical expression is certainly no reason: for if a man's house be his castle by night, why not by day? The course of justice is sometimes interrupted in England by this puerile notion of liberty" (1).

(1) Bentham's Theory of Legislation, 2nd Edn., p. 70.

Sub-section (2).—This sub-section is new. It is intended to cover the cases Ss. 55-57. of certain persons or classes of persons whose summary arrest might, as in the case of railway servants, be attended with danger or inconvenience to the public.

Discharge of surety.—A surety under sub-section (4) is discharged by the death of the judgment-debtor (u). Similarly he is discharged, if the execution proceedings are struck off (v).

Under the Code of 1882, the security required was "that the judgment-debtor will appear when called upon, and that he will, within one month, apply under section 336 to be declared an insolvent." It was held upon the construction of these words that where a security bond provided that the surety would produce the judgment-debtor when the Court should direct him to do so, the surety was released from his obligation under the bond by the mere filing by the judgment-debtor of a petition to be declared an insolvent. Neither the withdrawal of the petition, nor failure to proceed with the petition, nor even failure on the part of the judgment-debtor to appear in Court when the direction to appear was made subsequent to the filing of the petition, was held to affect the surety's discharge (w). And the same was held where a surety undertook that the judgment-debtor would appear before the Court when called upon, and would within one month file a petition to be declared an insolvent (x). These decisions are no longer law. Sub section (4) now makes it clear that where a security bond is passed in the terms of that sub-section, that is, where a surety undertakes that the judgment-debtor will undertake within one month to apply to be declared an insolvent and will appear, when called upon, in any proceeding upon the application or upon the decree in execution of which he was arrested, the surety will not be released by the mere filing by the judgment-debtor of the petition in insolvency.

Realization of security.—See s. 145.

56. [s. 245A.] Notwithstanding anything in this Part, the Court shall not order the arrest or detention in the civil prison of a woman in execution of a decree for the payment of money.

Prohibition of arrest or detention of women in execution of decree for money.

Security for costs.—This section provides that a woman shall not be arrested in execution of a decree for the payment of money. With this immunity from arrest, however, there is coupled a burden, namely, that she may be required to give security for the defendant's costs where her suit is for the payment of money. See O. 25, r. 1.

57. [s. 338.] The Local Government may fix scales, graduated according to rank, race and nationality, of monthly allowances payable for the subsistence of judgment-debtors.

58. [Ss. 341, 342.] (1) Every person detained in the civil prison in execution of a decree shall be so detained,— Detention and release.

(a) where the decree is for the payment of a sum of money exceeding fifty rupees, for a period of six months, and,

(b) in any other case, for a period of six weeks :

Provided that he shall be released from such detention before the expiration of the said period of six months or six weeks, as the case may be,—

- (i) on the amount mentioned in the warrant for his detention being paid to the officer in charge of the civil prison, or
- (ii) on the decree against him being otherwise fully satisfied, or
- (iii) on the request of the person on whose application he has been so detained, or
- (iv) on the omission by the person, on whose application he has been so detained, to pay subsistence allowance :

Provided, also, that he shall not be released from such detention, under clause (ii) or clause (iii) without the order of the Court.

(2) A judgment-debtor released from detention under this section shall not merely by reason of his release be discharged from his debt, but he shall not be liable to be re-arrested under the decree in execution of which he was detained in the civil prison.

Period of detention in jail.—The first part of sub-section (1) up to the words “six weeks” corresponds with s. 342 of the Code of 1882. The phraseology of that section, however, has now been altered to make it quite clear that the period of detention shall be (1) six months where the amount of the decree exceeds Rs. 50, and (2) six weeks in any other case, and that the Court has no power to fix shorter periods than those prescribed in the section (y).

Re-arrest.—The immunity of a judgment-debtor from a second arrest depends not only upon his having been arrested, but upon his having been detained in jail under the arrest. Thus where a judgment-debtor, while acting as a pleader in Court, was arrested and discharged on the ground that he was exempt from arrest under s. 642 of the Code of 1882 (now s. 135), it was held that he was liable to be re-arrested in execution of Ss. 58, 59. the same decree against him (z). Similarly where a judgment-debtor was arrested, but was liberated owing to non-payment of subsistence money, it was held that he was liable to be re-arrested in execution of the same decree (a). To use the language of sub-section (2), the judgment-debtor was not in either case released from detention so as to prevent his re-arrest.

Interim protection order.—A is arrested and committed to jail in execution of a decree against him. While in jail he files his petition in insolvency, and obtains an interim protection order for one week, and is thereupon released from jail. He then applies for a further protection order, but his application is refused. Is A liable to be re-arrested in execution of the same decree? The Calcutta High Court has held that he is not liable to be re-arrested, on the ground that a judgment-debtor once discharged from jail cannot be arrested a second time in execution of the same decree (b). On the other hand, it has been held by the High Court of Bombay that A is liable to be re-arrested, the decision proceeding on the ground that the only cases in which a judgment-debtor is exempt from re-arrest are those specified in this section, and that release under an interim protection order is not one of them (c). The Calcutta decision is obviously wrong.

Contempt of Court.—This section does not apply to cases of imprisonment for contempt of Court (d).

59. [s. 653.] (1) At any time after a warrant for the arrest of a judgment-debtor has been issued the Court may cancel it on the ground of his serious illness.

(2) Where a judgment-debtor has been arrested, the Court may release him if, in its opinion, he is not in a fit state of health to be detained in the civil prison.

(3) Where a judgment-debtor has been committed to the civil prison, he may be released therefrom—

(a) by the Local Government, on the ground of the existence of any infectious or contagious disease, or

(b) by the committing Court, or any Court to which that Court is subordinate, on the ground of his suffering from any serious illness.

(4) A judgment-debtor released under this section may be re-arrested but the period of his detention in the civil prison shall not in the aggregate exceed that prescribed by section 58.

ATTACHMENT.

60. [S. 266.] (1) The following property is liable to attachment and sale in execution of a decree, namely, lands, houses or other buildings, goods, money, banknotes, cheques, bills of exchange, hundis, promissory notes, Government securities, bonds or other securities for money, debts, shares in a corporation and, save as hereinafter mentioned, all other saleable property, moveable or immoveable, belonging to the judgment-debtor, or over which, or the profits of which, he has a disposing power which he may exercise for his own benefit, whether the same be held in the name of the judgment-debtor or by another person in trust for him or on his behalf :

Property liable to attachment and sale in execution of decrees.

Provided that the following particulars shall not be liable to such attachment or sale, namely :—

- (a) the necessary wearing-apparel, cooking vessels, beds and bedding of the judgment-debtor, his wife and children, and such personal ornaments as, in accordance with religious usage, cannot be parted with by any woman ;
- (b) tools of artisans, and where the judgment-debtor is an agriculturist, his implements of husbandry and such cattle and seed-grain as may, in the opinion of the Court, be necessary to enable him to earn his livelihood as such, and such portion of agricultural produce or of any class of agricultural produce as may have been declared to be free from liability under the provisions of the next following section ;
- (c) houses and other buildings (with the materials and the sites thereof and the land immediately appurtenant thereto and necessary for their enjoyment) belonging to an agriculturist and occupied by him ;
- (d) books of account ;
- (e) a mere right to sue for damages ;
- (f) any right of personal service ;

S. 60.

- (g) stipends and gratuities allowed to pensioners of the Government, or payable out of any service family pension fund notified in the Gazette of India by the Governor-General in Council in this behalf, and political pensions ;
- (h) allowances (being less than salary) of any public officer or of any servant of a railway company or local authority while absent from duty ;
- (i) the salary or allowances equal to salary of any such public officer or servant as is referred to in clause (h), while on duty, to the extent of—
 - (i) the whole of the salary, where the salary does not exceed twenty rupees monthly ;
 - (ii) twenty rupees monthly, where the salary exceeds twenty rupees and does not exceed forty rupees monthly ; and
 - (iii) one moiety of the salary in any other case ;
- (j) the pay and allowances of persons to whom the Indian Articles of War apply ;
- (k) all compulsory deposits and other sums in or derived from any fund to which the Provident Funds Act, 1897, for the time being applies in so far as they are declared by the said Act not to be liable to attachment ;
- (l) the wages of labourers and domestic servants whether payable in money or in kind ;
- (m) an expectancy of succession by survivorship or other merely contingent or possible right or interest ;
- (n) a right to future maintenance ;
- (o) any allowance declared by any law passed under the Indian Councils Acts, 1861, and 1892, to be exempt from liability to attachment or sale in execution of a decree ; and
- (p) where the judgment-debtor is a person liable for the payment of land-revenue, any moveable property which, under any law for the time being applicable to him, is exempt from sale for the recovery of an arrear of such revenue.

Explanation.—The particulars mentioned in clauses (g), (h), (i), (j), (l), and (o) are exempt from attachment or sale whether before or after they are actually payable.

(2) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to exempt houses and other buildings (with the materials and the sites thereof and the lands immediately appurtenant thereto and necessary for their enjoyment) from attachment or sale in execution of decrees for rent of any such house, building, site or land.

Changes introduced by the section.—This section corresponds with s. 266 of the Code of 1882 except in the following particulars :—

1. In cl. (a), the words “cooking vessels,” “beds,” and “and such personal ornaments as, in accordance with religious usage, cannot be parted with by any woman,” have been added. See notes below.
2. The latter portion of cl. (b) relating to agricultural produce is new.
3. Cl. (c) stood as follows in s. 266 of the Code of 1882 :—“The materials of houses and other buildings belonging to agriculturists.”
4. In cl. (g), the words “or payable out of any service family pension fund notified in the Gazette of India by the Governor-General in Council in this behalf” have been added.
5. Cl. (h) is new. See notes below.
6. In cl. (i), the words “or allowances equal to salary” and “while on duty” have been added. See notes below.
7. Cl. (k) is new. See notes below.
8. In cl. (l), the words “whether payable in money or in kind” are new.
9. The alterations in sub-section (2), cl. (a), correspond with the alterations in sub-section (1), cl. (c).

Amendment of the section.—The section as it originally stood contained a clause at its very end, being cl. (b) of sub-sec. (2), which ran as follows :—

“(b) to affect the provisions of the Army Act or of any similar law for the time being in force.”

The above clause has been repealed by the Repealing and Amending Act 10 of 1914, Sch. II. See notes below under the head “Salary of Army officers.”

Saleable property.—Subject to the proviso to sub-section (1), all saleable property which belongs to the judgment-debtor may be attached and sold in execution of a decree against him. The equity of redemption of a mortgagor in mortgaged property is “saleable property” within the meaning of this section, and is therefore liable to be attached and sold in execution of a decree against him (e). The share of a partner in a partnership business is "saleable property," and can be attached and sold in execution of a decree obtained against him by his creditor (f). The right to claim specific performance of a contract to sell land is also attachable and saleable (g). A life-interest in trust funds is attachable and saleable in execution of a decree against the life-tenant (h). Similarly a vested remainder can be attached and sold in execution of a decree against the remainderman (i).

The word "saleable" in this section means saleable by auction at a compulsory sale under the order of the Court and not transferable by act of parties. It has accordingly been held that a condition in a permanent lease that the landlord would re-enter if the tenant made any transfer of the land demised, does not make the land unsaleable in execution. The lease forbids a sale by the tenant, but does not prevent a sale by the Court (j). Country liquor is "saleable" property within the meaning of this section, though the permission of the Collector may be necessary to the sale thereof under the Abkari Act (k).

Money or other valuable security deposited as security for the due performance of duty by a servant with his master may be attached in execution of a decree against the servant, but the attachment will be subject to the lien which the master has upon the deposit, and the deposit cannot be sold until the same is at the disposal of the servant free from the lien of the master at the expiration of the period of employment (l).

Where land was assigned to a Hindu widow for her maintenance with a proviso against alienation, it was held that she had no saleable interest in the usufruct (m).

A religious office is not saleable property (n). Similarly the right of managing a temple, of officiating at the worship conducted in it, and of receiving the offerings at the shrine, is not saleable (o). The right to officiate at funeral ceremonies is also not saleable (p). The property of a temple cannot be sold away from the temple. But there is no objection to the sale of the right, title and interest of the servant of a temple in land belonging to the temple which he holds as remuneration for his service, the interest sold being subject in the hands of the alienee to determination by the death of the original holder, or by his removal from office for failure to perform the service (q).

The income of property subject to a restraint upon anticipation accruing due after the date of the judgment cannot be attached in execution of a decree against the separate property of a married woman passed under s. 8 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1874 (r).

The right of a widow under the Hindu law to reside in her husband's family house is a purely personal right and cannot be transferred. Such right cannot be attached in execution as it is not "saleable" property (s). For other kinds of property which cannot be alienated, see Transfer of Property Act, 1882, s. 6.

"Property".—A sues B for partnership accounts. The accounts are then referred to arbitration with the consent of the parties. While the award is not yet made, X, a creditor of A, applies for attachment of the "rights and interest" of A in the award. The attachment cannot be allowed, for the expectant claim under an inchoate award is not "property" within the meaning of this section (t). Money paid into Court as a fine in a criminal case against a judgment-debtor is, after the order imposing the fine is set aside, attachable under this section as money belonging to the judgment-debtor even before the issue of a refund certificate (u).

The doors and windows of a building cannot be separately attached, for they have no separate existence as property (v). An uncertain right in unascertained property could not be the subject of attachment (w).

Disposing power—A property may not belong to a judgment-debtor, and yet he may have a disposing power over it exercisable for his own benefit. In such a case also the property is liable to attachment and sale subject to the proviso to this section.

A trustee of a religious endowment has no disposing power over the corpus of the trust estate exercisable for his own benefit; hence the corpus cannot be attached (x).

A bonus sanctioned by a Railway Company to its servant is virtually a gift which must be completed either by a registered document or by actual payment as required by s. 123 of the Transfer of Property Act. A Railway Company sanctioned a bonus to A, and the amount was forwarded to the District Paymaster of the Company for payment to A. Before the amount was paid to A, it was attached by a creditor of A in the hands of the Paymaster. Held that the amount could not be attached, for the gift was not complete, and A had therefore no disposing power over the money (y).

A sends a cover containing currency notes to the Post Office for delivery to B, the addressee. Can the cover be attached while it is yet in the Post Office by a creditor of B? It has been held that it can be attached, on the ground that the cover is in the disposing power of B. "When once the letter has been posted, the property in it becomes vested in the addressee" (z).

An auctioneer has no disposing power over the whole of the sale proceeds of goods sold by him, but only over that portion of it which represents his commission. Hence the whole of the sale proceeds in the hands of an auctioneer cannot be attached in execution of a decree against him, but only so much of it which represents his commission (a).

Where a married man effects a policy on his own life, and the policy is expressed on the face of it to be for the benefit of his wife, or of his wife and children, or any of them, then, in cases to which the Married Women's Property Act, 1874, applies, the simple declaration on the face of the policy that the policy is for the benefit of his wife or children amounts to a trust for them, and the policy cannot be attached by his creditors; but in cases to which the said Act does not apply, such a declaration is not sufficient to create a trust, and the insured has a disposing power over the policy for his own benefit, and the policy may be attached by his creditors, unless it has been assigned as provided by s. 130 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, or a trust has been declared in respect thereof as provided by s. 5 of the Indian Trusts Act, 1882. In this connection it may be observed that there is a conflict of decisions as to whether s. 6 of the Married Women's Property Act, which provides for insurance by a married man for the benefit of his wife and children, applies to Hindus. It has been held by the High Court of Madras that it does (b); by the High Court of Bombay, that it does not (c).

S. 60.

"Debts."—Debts are expressly mentioned in the section, and they are liable to attachment and sale. A debt is an obligation to pay a liquidated (or specified) sum of money (d). Money that has not yet become due does not constitute a debt, for there is no obligation to pay that which has not yet become due. The word "debt" in this section means an actually existing debt, that is, a perfected and absolute debt. A sum of money which might or might not become due or the payment of which depends upon contingencies which may or may not happen is not a "debt" (e). A money-claim that has already become due is a debt, and it may be attached as such, though it may be payable at a future day; but a money-claim accruing due is not a debt and cannot be attached. The attachment must operate at the time of the attachment and not be anticipatory so as to fasten on a claim that may ripen into a debt at some future time (f).

A debt that is enforceable by a foreign Court only is not liable to attachment under this section (g).

Illustrations.

1. A delivers goods to his agent, B, for sale. B sells the goods, and receives the sale proceeds. The sale proceeds in the hands of B constitute a "debt" due to A, and they may therefore be attached while in B's hands in execution of a decree against A. Madho Das v. Ramji (1894) 16 All. 286.

2. A is bound under a deed to pay a monthly allowance to B for B's maintenance. C, who holds a decree against B, attaches in August the allowance for September. The attachment is not valid, for the allowance can only be attached as a "debt" and the allowance for September was not a debt due to B at the time of attachment in August: Haridas v. Baroda Kishore (1900) 27 Cal. 38; Nilkunto v. Hurro (1878) 3 Cal. 414.

3. A agrees to sell his property to B for Rs. 2,000 to be paid to A on the execution of the conveyance. The price payable to A is not a "debt" owing to him by B until the conveyance is executed. Hence it cannot be attached before the execution of the conveyance in execution of a decree against A: Ahmaduddin v. Majlis Rai (1881) 3 All. 12. But once the sale is completed, the amount representing the price may be attached in the hands of B, and it does not make any difference that the whole is payable in one sum or by instalments or in the shape of periodical payments: Harshankar v. Baijnath (1901) 23 All. 164.

4. Maintenance allowance that has already become due, private pensions that have already become due, and the wages of private servants that have already become due are "debts" within the meaning of this section: Kasheeshuree v. Greesch Chunder (1866) 6 W. R., Mis. 64 (maintenance); Bhoyrub v. Madhub Chunder (1880) 6 C. L. R. 19 (private pensions); Ayyavayyar v. Virasami (1898) 21 Mad. 393; Devi Prasad v. Lewis (1908) 31 All. 304 (wages of private servants).

5. A agrees to advance Rs. 5,000 to B on a mortgage of B's property. B advances Rs. 3,000 only. C, who holds a decree against B, seeks to attach the balance of Rs. 2,000,

It is clear that if A fails to pay the balance, B cannot sue A to recover the balance and his only remedy against A is by way of damages for non-payment of the balance : Phul Chund v. Chand Mal (1908) 30 All. 252.

As to the mode in which a debt may be attached, see O. 21, r. 46. See also O. 21, r. 79.

Clause (a): Ornaments.—Ornaments on the person of a Hindu wife, forming part of her stridhan, cannot be attached in execution of a decree against the husband, even though the Hindu law concedes him a personal right of user (h). The mangalsutra, a neck ornament which is worn by a Hindu married woman during the lifetime of her husband without ever removing it, is also exempted from attachment (i).

Clause (c): houses occupied by agriculturists.—The term “agriculturist” includes persons engaged in cultivating the soil for remuneration although they may have no interest in the soil either as proprietor or tenant (j). The Code of 1882 (s. 266) exempted from attachment only the materials of houses occupied by agriculturists. But it was held that even a house occupied by an agriculturist could not be attached, provided it was occupied by an agriculturist as such (k), that is to say, it was occupied by him bonâ fide for the purposes of agriculture (l). The burden of proving this lies on the agriculturist debtor, and it must be proved by him in execution proceedings (m). The exemption extends, after the death of the agriculturist, to his representative occupying the house in good faith as an agriculturist (n).

If a house occupied by an agriculturist is specifically mortgaged, it is not protected from sale in execution of a decree upon the mortgage. Clause (c) does not prohibit the sale of property specifically mortgaged, though it may be occupied by an agriculturist as such, unless he is prohibited by law from mortgaging or selling it (o).

Clause (e): right to sue for damages.—“Mesne-profits” are in the nature of damages, and the right to sue for mesne-profits is a right to sue for “damages.” Such a right cannot therefore be attached and sold in execution of a decree against the person entitled to the right. Thus if A is entitled to claim mesne-profits from B for wrongful dispossession of his lands, A’s right to sue B for mesne-profits cannot be attached and sold in execution of a decree against A. If the right is attached and sold and purchased by X, X has no right to sue B for the mesne-profits, the sale to him being void (p).

Clause (f): right of personal service.—A vritti is a right to receive certain emoluments as a reward for personal service, and is therefore exempt from attachment and sale (q). The birt Maha brahmuni or right to officiate as a priest at the funeral ceremonies of Hindus dying within a particular district is a right of personal service and cannot therefore be attached (r).

Clause (g): gratuities allowed by Government.—The gratuity referred to in this section is a bonus allowed by Government to its servants in consideration of past services. It may be allowed to one who is not a “pensioner,” or it may be allowed to a pensioner in addition to his pension. In either case it is exempt from attachment (s). S. 60.

Stipends payable out of service family pension fund notified in the Gazette of India.—For notifications issued under this clause [i. e., cl. (g)], see General Statutory Rules and Orders, vol. IV., p. 685.

Political pensions.—All pensions of a political nature payable directly by the Government of India are political pensions. A pension which the Government of India has given a guarantee that it will pay by a treaty obligation contracted with another sovereign power is a political pension (t). Arrears of political pension due to a pensioner and lying in the hands of the Government at the time of his death do not lose their character of political pension by reason merely of the pensioner's death. The character of the funds remains unchanged so long as it remains unpaid in the hands of the Government and it is not liable to attachment in the hands of the Government in execution of a decree against the deceased. But once the fund has passed out of the hands of the Government into the hands of the legal representative of the deceased, it may be attached like any other portion of the deceased's estate (u).

A grant of a Zamindari by Government to A. B., as a reward for past services rendered by him to Government is not a pension, but a gift, and may therefore be attached in execution of a decree against the grantee. The word "pension" in this section implies periodical payments of money by Government (v). Allowances granted to the "Candyan" "pensioners" of Ceylon (w), to the members of the family of the King of Oudh (x), to the members of the Mysore family (y), and to the descendants of the Nawab of Carnatic (z), are instances of political pensions.

Private pensions.—Private pensions, as distinguished from Government pensions, are not exempt from attachment, and they may be attached either as "debts" or as "property belonging to the judgment-debtor" within the meaning of this section. But they neither constitute "debts" nor "property belonging to the judgment-debtor" until they have become due and payable. Hence they cannot be attached before they have become due and payable. Pensions granted by Railway Companies to their servants are private pensions (a).

Clause (h): allowances, being less than salary, of a public officer while absent from duty.—This clause is new. The allowances (being less than salary) of a public officer [s. 2 (17)] while absent from duty, are now wholly exempt from attachment. Under the Code of 1882 it was held, in the absence of any specific provision as to these allowances, that they stood on the same footing as the salary of a public officer while on duty and were exempt from attachment only to the extent to which such salary was exempt, and no more (see cl. (i)]. Thus where an officer was on sick leave on half pay which was Rs. 150, it was held that the decree-holder could attach Rs. 75 (b). Under this clause the whole of Rs. 150 is exempt from attachment.

Clause (i): salary of public officer while on duty.—The salary of a public officer [s. 2 (17)] can be attached only partially, except where it does not exceed Rs. 20 monthly in which case the whole of it is exempt from attachment. The object

S. 60. of the exemption appears to be to enable a public officer to maintain himself and his family in a position suitable to his rank. This exemption did not occur in the Code of 1859; hence the salary of a public officer and of the other persons mentioned in this clause was attachable to the extent of the whole as a "debt." And since it could only be attached as a "debt," it was not attachable until it had become due (c). Under the Codes of 1877 and 1882, and under the present Code, the salary, to the extent to which it is attachable, may be attached in advance (d). It is no valid reason for refusing the attachment that the attachment, if allowed, would not leave the officer enough to live on (e). As to the salary of Army officers, see notes below under the head "Salary of Army officers."

Salary of a private servant.—The salary of a private servant can be attached as a "debt;" hence it cannot be attached before it has become due (f).

Clause (j): Indian Articles of War.—The Indian Articles of War apply only to soldiers and followers of the Native Army: see Act V of 1869, amended by Act XII of 1894. Hence the pay and allowances of soldiers and followers of the Native Army are exempt from attachment.

Clause (k): compulsory deposits.—The expression "compulsory deposit" is defined in s. 2 of the Provident Funds Act IX of 1897 as a subscription or deposit which is not repayable on the demand or at the option of the subscriber or depositor, and includes any contribution which may have been credited in respect of any interest or increment which may have accrued on such subscription or deposit under the rule of the Funds.

Compulsory deposits made by railway servants towards the Provident Fund under the Provident Funds Act are not liable to attachment so long as they retain the character of compulsory deposit. A deposit which, when it was made, was a "compulsory deposit," continues to retain that character so long as it remains in the hands of the Railway Company. It does not lose that character, though the employee may have ceased to be in the service of the Company by retirement, resignation or dismissal, and may have become entitled in that event to be paid the amount due to his credit in the Provident Fund. But once it is paid out by the Company on the happening of any of the above events, it loses the character of "compulsory deposit," and it may be attached in the hands of the party to whom it has been paid (g).

Clause (l): wages of labourers.—A "labourer" is a person who earns his daily bread by personal manual labour, or in occupations which require little or no art, skill or previous education. Thus persons who agree to spin cotton and to receive a certain amount of money for a certain quantity of cotton spun by them are labourers, and their wages cannot be attached (h).

Clause (m): expectancy of succession, etc.—The interest which a Hindu reversioner has in the immoveable property of a deceased Hindu on the death of the deceased's widow, is "an expectancy of succession by survivorship"; in other words it is an interest expectant on the widow's death to which the reversioner could only succeed if he survived the widow (i). The interest in the pre-empted property of a success-

Clause (n): right to future maintenance.—If A is entitled to a monthly maintenance allowance under an agreement, the allowance could only be attached after it has become due (k). It cannot be attached prospectively, that is, before it has become due (l). In other words arrears of maintenance may be attached, but not the right to future maintenance. A hereditary grant of an allowance of paddy out of the melwaram of certain land is not a right to future maintenance so as to be exempt from attachment under this section (m). Quære whether villages assigned to a Hindu widow in lieu of her maintenance could be attached in execution of a decree against the widow (n). Salary of Army officers—Sub-sec. (2) of the present section as it stood originally ran as follows:—

(2) Nothing in this section shall be deemed—

- (a) to exempt houses and other buildings (with the materials and the sites thereof and the lands immediately appurtenant thereto and necessary for this enjoyment) from attachment or sale in execution of decrees for rent of any such house, building, site or land, or
- (b) to affect the provisions of the Army Act or of any similar law for the time being in force.

The italicized words and letters were repealed by the Repealing and Amending Act 10 of 1914, sch. II.

It is provided by s. 136 of the Army Act, 1881 [stat. 44 and 45 Vict.], amended by the Army (Annual) Act of 1895, that the pay of an officer or soldier of His Majesty's Regular Forces serving in India shall be paid to him without deduction unless the Legislature in India has directed to the contrary in that behalf. Under section 60 of the Code as it stood before the amendment above referred to, questions arose as regards the extent of application of the Army Act. As regards officers in the British Army, it was held that they were officers of His Majesty's Regular Forces within the meaning of s. 136 of the Army Act, and that their salary therefore could not be attached at all (o). As regards officers in the Indian Army, there was a conflict of decisions; the High Courts of Calcutta and Madras (p) held that an officer in the Indian Army was not an officer of His Majesty's Regular Forces within the meaning of s. 136 of the Army Act, and that his salary therefore was liable to be attached to the extent mentioned in s. 60 (1) (i). On the other hand, it was held by the High Court of Bombay (q), relying on s. 190, sub-s. (8), of the said Act, that an officer in the Indian Army was an officer of His Majesty's Regular Forces and that his salary therefore could not be attached at all.

Cl. (b) of sub-s. (2) having been repealed, the question arises whether the salary of an officer of His Majesty's Regular Forces can be attached under this section as salary of a public officer to the extent mentioned in cl. (i) of sub-sec. (1).

It has been held by the High Courts of Allahabad (r) and Bombay (s), that it can be so attached. These cases must be distinguished from a Bombay case in which the question was whether the salary of a First Class Warrant Officer can be attached under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure in execution of a decree for maintenance obtained against him by his wife. It was held that it could not be attached under the Code. The ground of the decision was that a First Class Warrant Officer was a "soldier" as defined by s. 190 of the Army Act, that under s. 145 of the Act no execution can issue against his pay in respect of the maintenance of his wife but that a specified sum may be deducted for such maintenance from his pay, and that an order had already been made for such deduction by the Commander-in-Chief (t).

Objection to attachment on the ground that the property is not saleable when to be raised.—A obtains a decree against B, and applies for execution of the decree by attachment and sale of certain property belonging to B. The property is attached and sold, and purchased by C. B then applies to the Court to set aside the sale on the ground that the property was not liable to attachment and sale. Can the application be entertained? It has been held that if B was a party to the order for sale, or was aware of it and did not appeal against it, he would be precluded from questioning the propriety of the order after the sale, and he cannot therefore impeach the sale that has taken place under that order. "A judgment debtor who might have raised objections prior to the sale, but who has refrained from doing so, and who might have appealed against the order for sale, has no right after the sale has been carried out to prefer an objection that the property sold was not legally saleable" (u). But if B was not aware of the proceedings in attachment of the property, or of the proceedings in connection with the sale thereof, the application to set aside the sale would be entertained (v). The same procedure and principles apply where a sale effected by the Collector is sought to be set aside on the ground that the property was not ancestral, and therefore could not legally be sold by the Collector (w). See notes to s. 47, "Execution purchaser," ill. (b) on p. 133 above, also notes to that section under the head "Objection by party or his representative that property attached is not liable to attachment," on p. 135 above.

62. [s. 271.] (1) No person executing any process under this Code directing or authorizing seizure of moveable property shall enter any dwelling-house after sunset and before sunrise.

Seizure of property in dwelling-house.

(2) No outer door of a dwelling house shall be broken open unless such dwelling-house is in the occupancy of the judgment-debtor and he refuses or in any way prevents access thereto, but when the person executing any such process has duly gained access to any dwelling-house, he may break open the door of any room in which he has reason to believe any such property to be.

(3) Where a room in a dwelling-house is in the actual occupancy of a woman who, according to the customs of the country, does not appear in public, the person executing the process shall give notice to such woman that she is at liberty to withdraw ; and, after allowing reasonable time for her to withdraw and giving her reasonable facility for withdrawing, he may enter such room for the purpose of seizing the property, using at the same time every precaution consistent with these provisions to prevent its clandestine removal.

Changes introduced by the section.—This section corresponds with s. 271 of the Code of 1882, except that the prohibition against breaking open any outer door of a dwelling-house has been relaxed where the dwelling-house is in the occupancy of the judgment-debtor. See notes to s. 55 under the head "Breaking open of outer door" on p. 154 above.

"Dwelling-house."—A shop or a godown is not a "dwelling-house" within the meaning of this section (x).

63. [s. 285.] (1) Where property not in the custody of any Court is under attachment in execution of decrees of more Courts than one, the Court which shall receive or realize such property and shall determine any claim thereto and any objection to the attachment thereof,

Property attached in execution of decrees of several Courts.

- s. 63. shall be the Court of highest grade, or, where there is no difference in grade between such Courts, the Court under whose decree the property was first attached.

(2) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to invalidate any proceeding taken by a Court executing one of such decrees.

Changes introduced by the section.—This section corresponds with s. 285 of the Code of 1882 except in the following particulars :—

- (1) The words “is under attachment” have been substituted for the words “has been attached.” See notes below, under the head “Is under attachment.”

- (2) Sub-section (2) is new. See notes below.

Object of the section.—The object of this section is to prevent different claims arising out of the attachment and sale of the same property by different Courts, in other words, it is to prevent confusion in the execution of decrees (y).

Application of the section.—A attaches certain property in execution of a decree obtained by him against B in the Small Causes Court at Surat. The same property is subsequently attached by C in execution of a decree obtained against B in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Surat. The Court of the Subordinate Judge is a Court of higher grade than the Small Causes Court, and it is therefore the proper Court under this section for deciding objections to the attachment, for determining claims made to the property, and for ordering the sale thereof and receiving the sale-proceeds (z).

Sub-section (2).—This sub-section is new. It declares in effect that a proceeding in execution shall not be deemed to be invalid, merely because it was taken by a Court which ought not to have taken it, having regard to the provisions of sub-section (1). Under the Code of 1882 there was a conflict of decisions on the question whether the rule contained in s. 285 of that Code [now sub-sec. (1)] was a rule of procedure only or whether it affected jurisdiction. It was held by the High Courts of Calcutta (a), Bombay (b), and Madras (c), that the rule was merely a rule of procedure, and that it did not oust the jurisdiction of the inferior Court in proceedings in execution of its own decree. On the other hand, it was held by the High Court of Allahabad, that the section affected jurisdiction, that is to say, it took away the jurisdiction of the inferior Court in the several matters specified in the section (d). The result was that where a sale was effected by a Court of lower grade in a case where it ought to have been effected by a Court of higher grade, the sale, according to the Calcutta, Bombay and Madras decisions, was not for that reason invalid; but, according to the Allahabad decisions, it was absolutely void as one made without jurisdiction. Sub-section (2) gives effect to the Calcutta, Bombay and Madras decisions.

There yet remains another point to consider, and it may thus be considered in the form of an illustration. A obtains a decree against B in the Court of a Subordinate

Judge. In execution of the decree certain property belonging to B is attached by the Subordinate Judge's Court. C obtains a decree against B in a District Court. The same property is then attached by the District Court in execution of C's decree. [Here the proper Court to sell the property is the District Court.] The property is sold by the Subordinate Judge in execution of A's decree, and it is purchased by X. Subsequently the same property is sold by the District Court in execution of C's decree, and it is purchased by Y. Which of the two purchasers has the better title? According to the decision of the Calcutta High Court in Bykant Nath v. Rajendro Narain (e), X, the first purchaser, would take an indefeasible title (1) if the sale was held by the Subordinate Judge's Court and (2) the purchase was made by X, without notice of the attachment by the District Court; but if either the sale was held or the purchase was made with notice of the attachment, the purchase of X would be liable to be defeated by the purchase of Y. According to the decision of the Bombay High Court in Abdul Karim v. Thakordas (f), it is quite enough to give an indefeasible title to X if he purchased without notice of the attachment by the District Court. The Bombay Court does not regard any notice which the inferior Court may have of the attachment by the superior Court as of any consequence, for the simple reason that the jurisdiction of a Court cannot depend upon notice. Much the same view has been taken by the Madras High Court (g). Under the present section, it seems, X would take an indefeasible title to the property, whether or not he or the Subordinate Judge's Court had notice of the attachment by the District Court.

The result therefore is, that where property is under attachment by two Courts one of which is of a higher grade than the other, and the property is sold by the Court of lower grade in contravention of the provisions of sub-section (1), the sale is not thereby rendered invalid, though the Court selling the property and the purchaser at the Court sale may be aware of the irregularity. The course to be adopted by the Court of higher grade in such a case is to accept the sale made by the lower Court, and send for the sale-proceeds for distribution amongst the decree-holders (h).

"Is under attachment."—These words have been substituted for the words "has been attached" to make it clear that the provisions of this section do not apply unless there are two or more attachments existing at the same time (i).

Rateable distribution.—See notes to s. 73, "Court to which application for execution should be made."

64. [S. 276.] Where an attachment has been made, any private transfer or delivery of the property attached or of any interest therein and any payment to the judgment-debtor of any debt, dividend or other monies contrary to such attachment, shall be void as against all claims enforceable under the attachment.

Explanation.—For the purposes of this section, claims enforceable under an attachment include claims for the rateable distribution of assets.

S. 64. S. 276 of the Code of 1882 ran as follows :—

“When an attachment has been made by actual seizure or by written order duly intimated and made known in manner aforesaid, any private alienation of the property attached, whether by sale, gift, mortgage or otherwise, and any payment of the debt or dividend, or a delivery of the share, to the judgment-debtor during the continuance of the attachment, shall be void as against all claims enforceable under the attachment.”

Changes introduced by the present section—The present section differs from the corresponding s. 276, C. P. C., 1882, in the following respects :—

- (1) The words “by actual seizure or by written order duly intimated and made known in manner aforesaid” after the words “where an attachment has been made” in s. 276 have been omitted as being mere surplusage (j). See notes below “Where an attachment has been made.”
- (2) The words “during the continuance of the attachment,” which occurred in s. 276, have been omitted, and the words “contrary to such attachment” have been substituted for them. See notes below under the head “Contrary to such attachment.”
- (3) The Explanation to the section is new. See notes below under the head “Explanation to the section, etc.”

Object of the section.—A sues B for Rs. 5,000. B owns a house worth Rs. 5,000 ; he has no other property, B may sell or mortgage the house notwithstanding the institution of the suit against him, and he may sell or mortgage it even after a decree has been passed against him in the suit, and the sale or mortgage in either case will be perfectly valid and pass a good title to the transferee (k). But if the property is attached in execution of the decree, any private transfer of the property by B contrary to such attachment shall be void as against all claims enforceable under the attachment. The object of the section is to prevent fraud on decree-holders (l), and to secure intact the rights of the attaching creditor against the attached property by prohibiting private alienations pending attachment (m).

“Where an attachment has been made”—An attachment operates as a valid prohibition against alienation of the attached property not from the date of the order of attachment, but from the date on which the necessary proclamation is made and copy of the order affixed as provided by O. 21, r. 54. The omission in the present section of the words “by actual seizure or by written order duly intimated and made known in manner aforesaid” which occurred in s. 276 of the old Code has not the effect of making the attachment effective from the date of the order of attachment (n).

Attachment before judgment.—An alienation made after an order for attachment before judgment is void under this section even though the property is not actually attached until after the passing of the decree. There is nothing in O. 38 requiring that the actual attachment in pursuance of the order directing attachment should be made before the passing of the decree (o).

"Private transfer."—The words "private transfer" mean a voluntary sale, gift, or mortgage in contravention of the attachment order, and not the enforced execution of a conveyance or assignment in obedience to a decree of a Court qualified to pass it (p). See notes, "Transfer," on p. 176 below.

A private transfer under this section is not absolutely void, but void only as against claims enforceable under the attachment :—

(1) In execution of a decree obtained by A against B, certain property belonging to B is attached. During the pendency of the attachment, B mortgages the property to C. The property is then sold in execution of the decree and purchased by D. Here the mortgage having been made contrary to the attachment is void as against A's claim, and D is entitled to take the property free from the mortgage created by B. This illustration shows the operation of the section.

(2) B's property is attached in execution of a decree obtained by A against him. While the attachment is pending, B sells the property to C, and pays out of the sale-proceeds the amount of the decree into Court, and the attachment thereupon ceases [see O. 21, r. 55]. The sale to C is valid, the decree having been satisfied by payment into Court, and there being no claim outstanding which is enforceable under the attachment (q). Moreover, an alienation by means of which the decree in execution of which the attachment was made is satisfied can scarcely be regarded as an alienation contrary to the attachment (r).

(3) On the same principle, where A attaches B's property in execution of a decree obtained by him against B, and applications are thereafter made by other decree-holders, C, D and E for rateable distribution without attaching the property in execution of their decrees, and subsequently B sells the property to F and pays off A (the attaching creditor), the other decree-holders, namely, C, D and E are not entitled to question the alienation to F. In the first place, the alienation can hardly be said to be an alienation contrary to the attachment within the meaning of this section, for the alienation was the means by which the decree in execution of which the attachment was made was satisfied. In the next place, it cannot be said that the claims of C, D and E are "claims for the rateable distribution of assets" within the meaning of the Explanation to the section, for to bring s. 73 [which provides for rateable distribution] into play certain conditions are necessary, and one of them is that there should be assets held by the Court. In the case now under consideration no assets came into the hands of the Court at all. Therefore, C, D and E, are not entitled to question the alienation by B to F, and the alienation is perfectly valid (s).

(4) A decree-holder, though entitled to rateable distribution as contemplated by the Explanation to the section is not entitled to question a private alienation under this section unless his claim be one "enforceable under the attachment" within the meaning of this section. The "attachment" referred to in this section is the attachment under which the execution sale is made. Therefore, a "claim enforceable under the attachment" means a claim enforceable under the attachment under which the execution sale is made (s). A claim under any other attachment is not a "claim enforceable under the attachment" within the meaning of this section. The result is that—

- S. 64. if A obtains a decree against B, and B's property is attached in execution of the decree, and B subsequently alienates the property to C, and the property is thereafter attached and sold in execution of a decree obtained by D against B, and it is purchased by F, and C sues F for possession,

C's title is to be preferred to F's title, and C is entitled to possession of the property. D cannot object to the alienation to C, for the alienation to C was prior to his attachment. Nor is A entitled to question the alienation, for the sale in execution was not made under his attachment, but under D's attachment. The sale having been made under D's attachment, A's claim cannot be said to be a "claim enforceable under the attachment" within the meaning of this section. The result is the same even if A be substituted for D, that is, even if the same person is the decree-holder in both cases (t). It was so held by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Mina Kumari v. Bijoy Singh (tt). That was a case under old s. 276 which did not contain the Explanation which now occurs at the end of the present section, but the decision proceeded on the assumption that Sorabji v. Govind (uu) cited in the notes below was good law, an assumption which involved that what now stands as the Explanation to the present section formed part also of the old section. Mina Kumari's case therefore would also govern cases under the present section.

If in the case put above the property was sold by the court under A's attachment instead of D's, and D had applied for execution before the Court received the proceeds of the sale, the alienation to C would be void, it being contrary to A's attachment, and, further, D would be entitled to rateable distribution under s. 73.

"Contrary to such attachment."—These words have been substituted for the words "during the continuance of the attachment" which occurred in s. 276 of the Code of 1882. The words "during the continuance of the attachment" were too wide, in that they comprised alienations that could not possibly prejudice the rights of an attaching creditor, as where property is mortgaged by A to B, and the equity of redemption is subsequently attached at the instance of C in execution of a decree obtained by C against A, and pending the attachment the mortgage is transferred by B and A to D. In such case the transfer of mortgage, though made during the continuance of the attachment, cannot prejudice C, the attaching creditor, for the effect of the transfer is merely to substitute D for B. But the transfer having been made "during the continuance of the attachment," it came literally within the old section 276, though it was not contrary to the attachment, and it was accordingly contended in a case before the Judicial Committee under s. 276 that the transfer was void as against C. This contention, however, was not upheld, the Judicial Committee holding that the object of s. 276 was merely to prohibit alienations contrary to the attachment, and that an alienation such as the above by B and A to D cannot in any sense be said to be contrary to the attachment (uu). The words "contrary to the attachment" have now been substituted for the words "during the continuance of the attachment" to give effect to the Privy Council ruling noted above. See ills. (1) and (2) on p. 173 above.

Explanation to the section : Claims for rateable distribution of assets under s. 73 are claims enforceable under an attachment within the meaning of this section.—The Explanation to the section is new. A obtains a decree against B, and in execution of the decree attaches Rs. 7,000 belonging to B in the hands of a Railway Company. B then assigns the said sum in the hands of the Railway Company to his attorneys for costs due to them subject to A's attachment. After the assignment, C, another creditor of B, obtains a decree against B, and in execution of his decree attaches the said sum in the hands of the Railway Company. Thereafter the Company pays the said sum to the Sheriff of Bombay. The assignment by B to his attorneys, though made prior to C's attachment, is void as against C's claim, for C's claim is a claim for rateable distribution of assets [Rs. 7,000] within the meaning of s. 73, and therefore a claim enforceable under the attachment of A by virtue of the Explanation to this section. C is therefore entitled to be paid in priority to B's attorneys. This is the law under the present Code, and it is in accordance with the view taken by the Bombay High Court in Sorabji v. Govind (v), decided under s. 276 of the Code of 1882. The view taken by the other High Courts was that C's claim being a claim merely for rateable distribution could not be said to be a claim enforceable under the attachment, but this view is no longer law (w). The Explanation gives effect to the Bombay decision. But the Explanation does not apply unless the claim of the subsequent decree-holders can be said to be a claim for rateable distribution within the meaning of s. 73. Now the essential condition of enforcement of claims for rateable distribution is that there should be assets held by the Court [see s. 73 below], and that condition was satisfied in the case cited above. But if there be no assets received by the Court, as would be the case if no payment was made by the Railway Company to the Sheriff, and A's attachment came to an end [O. 21, r. 55] by B satisfying A's decree out of Court and then certifying it to the Court under O. 21, r. 2, C's claim could not be enforced as a claim for rateable distribution, and the assignment to the attorneys would prevail over any claim that may be made by C under his subsequent attachment (x). The Explanation to the section protects only those decree-holders who are entitled to rateable distribution under s. 73, and no decree-holder can be entitled to rateable distribution under that section unless there are assets held by the Court (y). At the same time it must be noted that it is not enough that a decree-holder is entitled to rateable distribution under s. 73; to bring the Explanation into play it is further necessary that his claim must be one enforceable under the attachment within the meaning of the present section (z): see ill. (4) on p. 173 above. The result is that a decree-holder is not entitled to the benefit of the Explanation and is not entitled to question a private alienation unless—

- (1) he is entitled to rateable distribution under s. 73, for which it is absolutely necessary that there should be assets held by the Court, and
- (2) where there has been a sale in execution, his claim is one enforceable under the attachment under which the sale was made as explained in ill. (4) on p. 173 above.

As regards the first condition it is obvious that it cannot be present if the judgment-debtor satisfies the claim of the decree-holder out of Court, and that is what happened in the under-mentioned cases (a). In the Privy Council case of Mina Kumari v. Bijoy Singh (b), the first condition was present [rather it was assumed to be so], but the second condition was absent.

S. 64. Private transfer under O. 21, r. 83.—A private transfer of his property by a judgment-debtor made pursuant to the provisions of O. 21, r. 83, is absolute, notwithstanding the provisions of this section, even against claims enforceable under the attachment (c).

"Transfer."—The renewal of an existing obligation is not a "transfer." Thus a mere renewal, though it be pending the attachment, of a mortgage already existing on the property prior to the attachment, is not a "transfer" within the meaning of this section (d). Similarly a mere assignment, pending the attachment, of a mortgage existing prior to the attachment, is not a "transfer." Such a transaction is perfectly valid; it does not in any way prejudice the rights of the attaching creditor. But if the amount secured by the renewed mortgage or by the assignment exceeds the amount due on the mortgage at the date of the attachment, the new security will to that extent be void (e).

The transfer of an easement is a transfer of an interest in immovable property within the meaning of this section. (f). See notes "Private transfer," on p. 173 above.

Effect of striking off execution proceedings or of removing them from the file.—An attachment is not necessarily at an end because the execution case is struck off or removed from the file. The effect of such a proceeding depends on the circumstances of each case. Where after an attachment has been made, the proceedings in execution are struck off or removed from the file under circumstances which render a fresh attachment necessary to bring the judgment-debtor's property to sale, a private transfer of the property by the judgment-debtor made after the proceedings are struck off is valid, though the same property may subsequently be re-attached in execution of the same decree on a fresh application for execution. But if the execution proceedings are struck off or removed from the file under circumstances which do not render a fresh attachment necessary, the transfer is void as against all claims enforceable under the attachment, and the mere fact that a fresh application for attachment is subsequently made in execution of the same decree will not render the transfer valid. The reason is that in the former case the proceedings in execution are deemed to have terminated on the same being struck off or removed from the file, and the attachment is deemed to be at an end, and the transfer having been made after the termination of the attachment, it cannot be affected by the subsequent attachment. In the latter case, however, the proceedings in execution are merely suspended, and the first attachment is therefore deemed to subsist, and the second application for attachment is a superfluity (g). Whether the execution proceedings have been struck off or removed from the file under these or those circumstances is a question of fact in each case (h). But where a fresh application for attachment is made, the presumption is that the first attachment has ceased, and the burden of proof is on the party alleging that the first attachment was still subsisting when the second application was made and that the second application was superfluous (i). B's property is attached in execution of a decree obtained against him by A. The execution proceedings are then "struck off." B then sells the property to C. The property is again attached on a fresh application by A. Is the sale valid? There being a fresh application for attachment, the presumption is that the first attachment ceased from the moment the proceedings were struck off. The sale would therefore be valid, and the second attachment would be inoperative, unless A showed that the first attachment was still subsisting and that the second application was superfluous.

The above cases would not have arisen if the Courts, instead of making an order for "striking off proceedings" or "removing proceedings from the file," had made an order either dismissing the application or adjourning the proceedings where the Court was, by reason of default on the part of the decree-holder, unable to proceed further with the proceedings in execution. The practice of "striking off proceedings" or "removing proceedings from the file" had no justification under any of the previous Codes. To put a stop to this practice it is now expressly provided by O. 21, r. 57, that where any property has been attached in execution of a decree, but by reason of the decree-holder's default the Court is unable to proceed further with the application for execution, it shall either dismiss the application or for any sufficient reason adjourn the proceedings to a further date; upon the dismissal of such application the attachment shall cease. Cases like the above are not likely to arise under this Code, if the procedure prescribed by O. 21, r. 57, is strictly followed by the Courts.

Effect of attachment.—Attachment creates no charge or lien upon the attached property (j). It merely prevents and avoids any private alienation; it does not confer any title on the attaching creditors (k). There is nothing in any of the provisions of the Code which in terms makes the attaching creditor a secured creditor or creates any charge or lien in his favour over the property attached (l). But an attaching creditor acquires, by virtue of the attachment, a right to have the attached property kept in custodia legis for the satisfaction of his debt, and an unlawful interference with that right constitutes an actionable wrong. Thus it is an actionable wrong if A cuts and carries away crops attached by B in execution of a decree against C, and a suit will lie at B's instance against A to recover from A damages which should not, however, exceed the value of the attached property (m).

Effect of vesting order on attachment.—A vesting order is an order made by the Insolvent Debtor's Court whereby the whole property of the insolvent vests in the Official Assignee. What is the effect of a vesting order on an attachment levied prior to the date of the vesting order? Has the attaching creditor, by reason of his prior attachment, priority over the Official Assignee in respect of property attached by him previous to the passing of the vesting order, or is the Official Assignee entitled to claim the attached property by virtue of the vesting order as part of the property of the insolvent? It has been held that whether the attachment is one before judgment (n) or in execution of a decree (o), the attaching creditor has no priority over the Official Assignee, and the latter is entitled to claim the attached property for the benefit of the attaching and other creditors of the insolvent. These decisions are based on the ground that an attaching creditor does not obtain a charge or lien on the attached property, and that it is not therefore open to him to contend that the property vests in the Official Assignee subject to his claim under the decree. Once the vesting order is made, the attaching creditor and other creditors of the insolvent stand on the same footing, and they are entitled to a rateable distribution out of the property of the insolvent in the hands of the Official Assignee. In execution of a decree obtained by A against B certain property belonging to B is attached. B is subsequently declared an insolvent, and a vesting order is made. The attachment will be set aside, and the property will vest in the Official Assignee for the benefit of B's creditors. This subject is now dealt with in s. 53 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, 1909, the provisions whereof are in perfect accordance with the decisions cited above. See also Provincial Insolvency Act, 1907, s. 34.

Effect of winding up order on attachment.—The position of the liquidator of a registered company differs from that of the Official Assignee in this that the property of the company does not vest in him. An attachment, therefore, made on the property of the company at the instance of a decree-holder before the winding up of the company cannot be released at the instance of the liquidator (p).

SALE.

65. [s. 316.] Where immoveable property is sold in execution of a decree and such sale has become absolute, the property shall be deemed to have vested in the purchaser from the time when the property is sold and not from the time when the sale becomes absolute.

Purchaser's title.

Corresponding section of the Code of 1882.—Section 316 of the Code of 1882 ran as follows :—

“ When a sale of immoveable property has become absolute in manner aforesaid the Court shall grant a certificate stating the property sold and the name of the person who at the time of sale is declared to be the purchaser. Such certificate shall bear the date of the confirmation of the sale ; and so far as regards the parties to the suit and persons claiming through or under them, the title to the property sold shall vest in the purchaser from the date of such certificate and not before :

Provided that the decree under which the sale took place was still subsisting at that date.”

The first part of section 316 now stands as O. 21, r. 94, with slight verbal alterations. The second part, with certain substantial alterations to be presently noted, stands as s. 65. The proviso to s. 316 has been omitted altogether.

Changes introduced by the section.—Under s. 316 of the Code of 1882 the title to immoveable property sold at an execution-sale vested in the purchaser from the date of the certificate of sale, that is, the date on which the sale became absolute. Under the present section, the title to such property, where the sale has become absolute, vests in the purchaser from the time of sale and not from the time when the sale becomes absolute.

The proviso to s. 316 has been omitted. It is therefore no longer necessary that the decree should be subsisting at the time of the confirmation of sale.

Vesting of property in auction-purchaser.—In the case of a private sale of immoveable property, the property vests in the purchaser from the time when the deed of sale is executed. The reason is that a voluntary sale becomes absolute on execution and delivery of the deed by the vendor. In the case, however, of a Court sale, the property does not vest in the purchaser immediately on the sale thereof. The reason is that a compulsory sale does not become absolute until some time after the sale. A period at least of thirty days must expire from the date of sale before the sale can become absolute. During that period the sale is liable to be set aside at the instance of the judgment-debtor on the ground of irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale, or on deposit by him in Court of the amount specified in the sale proclamation together with a percentage on the purchase-money by way of compensation to the purchaser [O. 21, rr. 89-90]. The application by the judgment-debtor to set aside the sale in either of these two cases must be made within 30 days from the date of sale. Where no such application is made the Court must make an order confirming the sale, and it is upon such confirmation that the sale becomes absolute [O. 21, r. 92]. After the sale has become absolute, a certificate is granted by the Court to the purchaser which is called certificate of sale [O. 21, r. 94]. Such certificate bears date the day on which the sale became absolute. It is only when the sale becomes absolute, that the property sold vests in the purchaser. But though the property does not vest in the purchaser until the sale has become absolute, when it does vest, it will be deemed to have vested from the time when it was sold. The vesting of the property is thus made to relate back to the date of sale.

Successive purchasers at sales in execution of money decrees.—Under the Code of 1882, s. 316, the property sold vested in the purchaser from the date of the certificate of sale, and not before. This gave rise to some difficulty when the question to be decided was, which of two successive auction-purchasers should have priority, when the later purchaser had the certificate of sale issued to him first. Had the question been determined with exclusive reference to the terms of that section, the priority would have rested with the purchaser who first procured the certificate of sale. But this inequitable result was avoided, and the difficulty was got over by holding that the first purchaser had by his prior purchase obtained an equitable interest in the property, and that the subsequent purchaser must be deemed to have purchased subject to such interest (q). No such difficulty can arise under this Code, for it is provided by the present section that the property is to be deemed to have vested in the purchaser from the date of sale, and not from the date of the certificate of sale.

Illustration.

In execution of a money-decree obtained by A against B, certain immoveable property belonging to B is sold and purchased by P1. The same property is subsequently purchased by P2 at a sale in execution of a money-decree obtained by C against B. P2 obtains a certificate of sale first, and is placed in possession of the property. Subsequently P1 obtains a certificate of sale, and sues P2 for possession. Under the present section P1 is entitled to possession, for the property is to be deemed to have vested in him from the date of sale, and the sale to him was prior to the sale to P2. The same result was arrived at under the Code of 1882 by holding that P2 bought subject to P1's equitable interest and he could not therefore retain possession against P1 after P1's title was perfected by the issue of a certificate to him.

But where property is sold in execution of a decree to P1, and the sale is set aside on the ground of irregularity, and the property is then re-sold and purchased by P2

(q) Yeshwant v. Govind (1886) 10 Bom 453; Chintamanrav v. Vithabai (1887) 11 Bom. 89.

- S. 65. P2 is entitled to priority as against P1, even though the sale to P1 may subsequently be confirmed on appeal. The sale to P1 not having been confirmed until after the sale to P2, P1 is not entitled to priority over P2. Even under the Code of 1882, P1 would not be entitled to priority over P2, for the sale to him (P1) having been set aside, it could not be said that P2 purchased subject to P1's interest in the property. P1 had no interest in the property when it was sold to P2 (r).

Successive purchasers at sales in execution of mortgage decrees.—Priority between successive purchasers of the same mortgaged property in execution of mortgage decrees against the same mortgagor is determined by the dates of the several purchases, and not by the dates of the several mortgages (s).

Suit for possession by auction-purchaser.—It was held under the Code of 1859 that a purchaser of immoveable property at a Court-sale could not maintain a suit for possession thereof against a third person, unless he had a certificate of sale issued to him before suit, although the sale had become absolute. The reason given was that the transfer of property to a purchaser at a Court-sale was not complete until a certificate of sale was issued to him. The decisions turned upon the language of s. 259 which provided that "the certificate shall be taken and deemed to be a valid transfer of such right, title and interest" as had passed from the judgment-debtor to the purchaser. The line of reasoning adopted was that if a certificate was to be taken as a transfer, the transaction must be necessarily incomplete until the certificate was issued. In short a certificate of sale was regarded as essential to the completeness of the sale. The said words were construed as controlling the operation of s. 256 which provided that a sale became absolute when it was confirmed by the Court (t). But as against the judgment-debtor and his representatives, it was held that the purchaser's title became complete on the confirmation of the sale (u). Under the present section, it seems, that an auction-purchaser can maintain a suit for possession even against a person not a party to the suit after the sale has been confirmed by the Court, though no certificate has been issued to him before the institution of the suit. The reason is that property under the present section vests in the purchaser immediately the sale is confirmed by the Court and the vesting does not remain in suspense until the grant of a certificate. For the same reason a purchaser at a Court-sale of an equity of redemption may sue the mortgagee for redemption, though no certificate has been issued to him before the institution of the suit (v). But the certificate must be produced at or before the passing of the decree.

Mesne-profits.—Under the Code of 1882, the property sold vested in the purchaser from the date of the sale certificate and not before. Hence it was held that the purchaser was entitled to mesne-profits from the date of the certificate, and not from the date of sale (w). Under the present section the property is to be deemed to vest in the purchaser from the date of sale. The purchaser, therefore, is entitled to mesne-profits from the date of sale.

Title of auction purchaser.—Under the Code of 1882, property sold in execution of a decree vested in the purchaser so far as regards the parties to the suit and persons claiming through or under them. That is to say, a purchaser at a Court-sale was entitled to hold the property only against the judgment-debtor and his representative but not against third parties. of the Code of 1882, have been omitted in the present section. The omission, however, has not the effect of enlarging the purchaser's rights, and a purchaser at a judicial sale will now as before get a good title only against persons bound by the decree, but not against strangers (x).

Sale when void, and when voidable.—A sale in execution of a decree is void, if the Court had no jurisdiction to sell the property. Thus a Court has no jurisdiction to sell property in execution of a decree, if the notice required by O. 21, r. 22, is not served (y). Similarly a Court has no jurisdiction to sell the property of a person who was not a party to the suit in which the property was sold or properly represented on the record (z). Nor has a Court jurisdiction to sell property without attachment (a). The lower Court has no jurisdiction to sell property after an order made by the appellate Court for stay of execution (b). In each of these cases the sale is a nullity, and might be disregarded without any proceeding to set it aside (c).

But where a Court has jurisdiction to sell the property, and the property is sold, the sale cannot in any case be treated as void. At the most it may be voidable, as where the notice required by O. 21, r. 22, is served upon a person who was not in fact the legal representative of the deceased judgment-debtor, but whom the Court wrongly held to be his legal representative (d). It would also be voidable on the ground of material irregularity or fraud in publishing or conducting the sale, provided substantial injury has resulted therefrom [O. 21, r. 90]. But what is most important to bear in mind is that sales in execution of decrees should not be avoided on the ground of mere irregularities of procedure in obtaining decrees or in the execution of them. This subject is dealt with in the next paragraph.

Irregularities of procedure in obtaining decrees or in execution proceedings.—Provided that the Court has jurisdiction to sell, a purchaser at a Court-sale is not bound to inquire into the correctness of the decree or of the order for sale. "To hold that a purchaser at a sale in execution is bound to inquire into such matters would throw a great impediment in the way of purchasers under executions. If the Court has jurisdiction, a purchaser is no more bound to inquire into the correctness of an order for execution than he is as to the correctness of the judgment upon which the execution issues" (e). "Strangers to a suit are justified in believing that the Court has done that which, by the direction of the Code, it ought to do" (f). Therefore, where property sold in execution of a decree under the order of a competent Court is purchased by a stranger bona fide and for value, the sale cannot be set aside on the ground that the judgment-debtor had a cross-decree of a higher amount and the Court therefore ought not to have directed the sale (g), or that the decree had already been satisfied out of Court at the time the sale was held (h), or that the Court wrongly held that the defendant was served with the summons and on that passed an ex parte decree against him (i), or that though the attachment was subsisting at the date of the sale, the decree-holder's application for an order of sale

- S. 65. had been dismissed for want of prosecution before sale (j), or that the property was not liable to attachment and sale within the meaning of s. 80 (k), or that the execution of the decree was barred by limitation (l), or that the decree proceeded upon an erroneous view of the law (m), or that the decree was one which the Court ought not to have passed (n). See notes to O. 21, r. 22, "Consequence of omission to give notice," and "Notice to wrong person," and notes to O. 21, r. 90, "Material irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale."

The above principles which apply in favour of a third party purchasing at a Court-sale do not apply where the decree-holder is himself the purchaser. The reason is that where the decree-holder himself is the purchaser, he "must be held to have had notice of all the facts" and proceedings relating to the suit and execution proceedings (o).

Effect of reversal of decree upon sale, where the decree is reversed after confirmation of sale.—There is a great distinction between decree-holders who come in and purchase under their own decree, which is afterwards reversed or modified, and bona fide purchasers who come in and buy at a sale in execution of the decree to which they are no parties, and at a time when that decree is a valid decree and when the order for sale is a valid order. The distinction above referred to is that a bona fide purchaser, who is a stranger to the decree, does not lose his title to the property by the subsequent reversal or modification of the decree, but where the decree-holder himself is the purchaser, the sale may be set aside if the decree is subsequently reversed or modified. Where the purchaser is a stranger, the judgment-debtor whose property is sold is entitled only to the sale-proceeds of the property if the decree is subsequently reversed. But where the purchaser is the decree-holder, he is bound to restore the property back to the judgment-debtor (p). "A sale in execution of a decree at which a third party becomes the purchaser is upheld, notwithstanding the subsequent reversal of the decree, because otherwise there will be less inducement to intending purchasers to buy at an execution-sale and consequently less chance of property fetching proper value at such sales (q)." But if the Court has no jurisdiction to sell, the sale is a nullity, and even a bona fide purchaser acquires no title under such a sale: see notes above, "Sale when void and when voidable."

Where property sold in execution of a decree is bought by the decree-holder, and re-sold by him to a bona fide purchaser for value, such purchaser will get a good title, though the decree may be subsequently reversed (r).

Effect of reversal of decree upon sale where the decree is reversed before confirmation of sale.—On referring to s. 316 of the Code of 1882, it will be observed that it contained a proviso of which the effect was stated to be that a sale could not be confirmed if, at the time of application for confirmation, the decree under which the sale was effected had ceased to be a subsisting decree (s). That proviso has not been reproduced in the present section. Under the present section, therefore a sale held in execution of a decree may be confirmed, at any rate where the purchaser is a third party, though the decree may be reversed before confirmation of the sale. See O. 21, r. 92 (1), and note the words "the Court shall make an order confirming the sale."

What passes at a Court-sale.—See notes to O. 21, r. 94.

66. [S. 317.] (1) No suit shall be maintained against any person claiming title under a purchase certified by the Court in such manner as may be prescribed, on the ground that the purchase was made on behalf of the plaintiff or on behalf of some one through whom the plaintiff claims.

Suit against purchaser not maintainable on ground of purchase being on behalf of plaintiff.

(2) Nothing in this section shall bar a suit to obtain a declaration that the name of any purchaser certified as aforesaid was inserted in the certificate fraudulently or without the consent of the real purchaser, or interfere with the right of a third person to proceed against that property, though ostensibly sold to the certified purchaser, on the ground that it is liable to satisfy a claim of such third person against the real owner.

Changes introduced by the section :—

1. The words "on behalf of the plaintiff or on behalf of some one through whom the plaintiff claims" have been substituted for the words "on behalf of any other person or on behalf of some one through whom such other person claims." See notes below under the head "Scope of the section."
2. The latter part of sub-section (2) is new. See notes below under the head "Suit by a third person for a declaration that the certified purchaser is merely a benamidar."

Of these two changes the first is merely a verbal one, and the second is intended to supersede the Madras and Allahabad decisions on the point, and to give effect to the Calcutta decisions.

Benami purchases.—The object of the section is to put a stop to benami purchases at execution-sales (t). Where A under a secret understanding with B purchases property with his own moneys but in B's name the purchase is said to be benami. In such a case B is merely a benamidar or ostensible owner and holds the property in trust for A, so that A may compel B to transfer the property to him (A). If, however, A's object in purchasing the property in B's name was to defraud his creditors and the object of the fraud is carried out, the Court will not help A in recovering possession of the property from B. But if the object of the fraud is not carried out,

- S. 66. the Court will help A in recovering possession of the property from B notwithstanding A's primary intention to effect a fraud. This is the law as applicable to benami purchasers at a private sale (u). The law is more stringent in the case of benami purchases at a court-sale so that if A purchases property in B's name at a court-sale, and a certificate of sale is issued to B (O. 21, r. 94), B will be conclusively deemed to be the real purchaser and no suit will lie under this section by A against B for possession of the property, unless A can prove that B's name was inserted in the certificate fraudulently or without his consent [see sub-section (2)]. The same rule applies even if the claim made by the beneficial owner may not be for the whole of the property of which the defendant is the certified purchaser. Thus if B is the certified purchaser of certain property, part of which was purchased by him on his own account, and part benami for A, A is not entitled to maintain a suit under this section for recovery of the part purchased by B benami for him (v). At the same time it should be noted that the mere fact that the plaintiff has described the defendant as a benamidar does not make the transaction benami if it was not benami in fact; it is a mere misdescription and it is no ground for refusing the plaintiff a relief to which he is otherwise entitled (w).

This section must be construed strictly.—Where a transaction is once made out to be benami, the Courts of India, which are bound to decide according to equity and good conscience, will deal with it in the same manner as it would be treated by an English Court of equity (x). That is to say, effect will be given to the real and not to the nominal title, unless the result of doing so would be to work a fraud upon innocent persons (y). The present section provides that when property is sold at a court-sale, no suit shall be maintained against the certified purchaser on the ground that the purchase was made benami. It provides in effect that the certified purchaser shall be conclusively deemed to be the real purchaser, and shall not be liable to be ousted on the ground that his purchase was really made on behalf of another. In other words, the provisions of the present section bar the equitable jurisdiction of the Courts. The section, therefore, must be construed strictly and not extended beyond its express terms. But though the section prohibits suits against the certified purchaser to assert a benami title against him, it does not make benami purchases illegal. The object of the stringent provisions of this section is to discourage benami purchases at a court-sale, but not to render such purchases illegal (z).

Scope of the section.—This section provides that no suit shall lie against the certified purchaser on the ground that the purchase was made on behalf of the plaintiff (a). In other words, it is only in suits against the certified purchaser as defendant that such purchaser shall be conclusively deemed to be the real purchaser. Hence if the real owner is actually and honestly in possession, and a suit is brought by the certified purchaser as plaintiff against the real owner for possession or for rents and profits of the property of which he is the certified purchaser, the real owner may resist the suit on the ground that the certified purchaser was only a benamidar (b). And since the section bars suits brought against the certified purchaser as defendant, a suit by such purchaser as plaintiff for a declaration that he purchased the property on his own behalf and not benami for another, is not barred under this section (c). In fact, the present section applies only when a suit is instituted by a person claiming to be the real purchaser as plaintiff against the certified purchaser as defendant, alleging that the purchase was made on behalf of the plaintiff or on behalf of some one through whom the plaintiff claims. This point is now made quite clear by the substitution of the word "plaintiff" for the words "any other person" in sub-section (1).

S. 66.

Suit by "a third person" for a declaration that the certified purchaser is merely a benamidar.—Under the corresponding s. 317 of the Code of 1882, it was held by the High Court of Calcutta that the only suits barred under that section were suits brought by the beneficial owner as plaintiff against the certified purchaser as defendant, and that suits brought by a third party as plaintiff against the certified purchaser as defendant for a declaration that the property, though ostensibly sold to the certified purchaser, is liable to satisfy a claim of such third party against the beneficial owner, were not barred under that section (d). On the other hand, it was held by the High Courts of Madras (e) and Allahabad (f) that suits even of the latter description, that is, suits brought by a third person as plaintiff were barred under that section. The present section gives effect to the Calcutta decisions by providing in sub-section (2) that "nothing in this section shall interfere with the right of a third person to proceed against that (sic) property, though ostensibly sold to the certified purchaser, on the ground that it is liable to satisfy a claim of such third person against the real owner."

Illustration.

A obtains a decree against B, and attaches certain property alleged to belong to B. C objects to the attachment, alleging that he is the certified purchaser of the property, having purchased the same at a court-sale held in execution of a decree obtained against B by D. A alleges that the property was purchased by C benami for B, and sues C for a declaration that C was merely the benamidar for B. The suit is not barred under this section, for it is a suit not by the beneficial owner, but by a third person.

Suit by beneficial owner in possession for a declaration of title.—It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that a suit by a beneficial owner in possession for a declaration of his right to the property against the certified purchaser is not barred under this section (g). On the other hand, it has been held by the High Court of Allahabad that such a suit is barred under this section (h). A obtains a decree against B. In execution of the decree certain property belonging to B is sold. B himself purchases the property, but the purchase is made in C's name. The certificate of sale is granted to C, but B continues in possession of the property. After a few years C gives notice to the tenants not to pay rent to B. B thereupon sues C for a declaration that he is the real purchaser and for an injunction restraining C from interfering with his tenants. The suit is not barred according to the Calcutta decision. It is barred according to the Allahabad decision. In the Calcutta case, the Court said: "It is not a case in which the plaintiff seeks to obtain a decree for possession against the ostensible purchaser. Resting as it does on an existing possession, we do not think that it is a suit

- S. 66. of the nature prohibited by s. 317." As to this it was observed by Strachey, C.J., in the Allahabad case cited above: "If the learned Judges in that case meant to lay down that s. 317 applies only where the plaintiff, being out of possession, seeks to recover possession from a certified purchaser, and can never apply to a suit by a plaintiff in possession for a declaration that the certified purchaser out of possession was not the real purchaser, I cannot agree with them." Banerji, J., said: "The first paragraph [of the section] is not confined to a suit for recovery of possession only." The Allahabad decision is certainly more convincing. It is settled law, however, that where the beneficial owner has been in possession for twelve years or more, a suit will lie at his instance against the benamidar for a declaration of his title to the property. The basis of such a suit is the plaintiff's title by possession. The suit is based, not on the ground that the defendant is a benamidar, but on the title by possession only. Such a suit does not come within the purview of this section (i).

Person claiming through beneficial owner.—This section precludes a suit by the beneficial owner or one claiming through him. It does not preclude a suit by a person who does not claim through the beneficial owner, but claims through another person (j).

Joint purchase.—The provisions of this section are designed "to create some check on the practice of making what are called benami purchases at execution sales for the benefit of judgment-debtors, and in no way affect the title of persons otherwise beneficially interested in the purchase" (k). It has accordingly been held that where one of several holders of a joint mortgage decree applies for execution of the decree under O. 21, r. 15, subject to the rights of the other decree-holders, and purchases the mortgaged property at the execution sale, the other decree-holders are entitled to a declaration that the purchase was made on behalf of all the decree-holders (l). And this is a fortiori the case when the purchase money is set off against the entire amount of the debt, in other words, the purchase is made with the use of joint funds (m).

Where property is purchased at a court-sale by a member of a joint Hindu family in his name, but with family funds, the other members are entitled to sue him for a declaration that the purchase was made on behalf of the family, though the certificate of sale stands also in his name. The provisions of the section do not apply to such a case. It was so held by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Bodh Singh v. Gunesh Chunder (n), a case under the Code of 1859. Their Lordships said: "[The provisions of the section] cannot be taken to affect the rights of members of a joint Hindu family who, by the operation of law and not by virtue of any private agreement or undertaking [such as exists between a benamidar and the beneficial owner], are entitled to treat as part of their common property an acquisition, however made, by a member of the family in his sole name, if made by the use of the family funds." Following this principle, it has been held that when a joint Hindu family consists of two members A and B, and A purchases property at an execution sale with joint funds in the name of C, B is entitled to his share of the property (o). The same principle applies where the parties stand in the relation of partners, and the purchase is made by one of the partners by the use of partnership funds (p).

Waiver by certified purchaser of right of possession.—It has been held by the High Court of Madras, that if after obtaining a certificate of sale, the purchaser acknowledges that his purchase is benami, and allows the beneficial owner to continue in possession, such act may, by reason of the antecedent relation between the parties, operate as a valid transfer of the property. Thus if A is the manager of B's estate [and this is the antecedent relation between the parties], and the estate is sold in execution of a decree against B, and is purchased by B in A's name, a suit will lie at the instance of B against A for possession, if, after obtaining the certificate of sale, A allows B to continue in possession, and then disturbs B in his possession. The reason given is that the permission to hold possession amounts to a transfer of title from the benamidar to the beneficial owner and the suit is thus based not on the ground that the purchase was benami but on a fresh title created by the transfer (q). This view has been dissented from by the High Court of Allahabad, and it has been held by that Court, relying on the Privy Council case of Lokhee v. Kallypuddo (r), that the mere permission to hold possession cannot alone give or transfer a title from the benamidar to the real owner, and that a suit like the above would be barred under this section (s).

Certified purchaser.—Where a purchaser, who had not obtained a certificate, was sued, and afterwards applied for and obtained a certificate, it was held that he was a certified purchaser within the meaning of this section (t).

Successor in title of certified purchaser.—This section bars a suit not only against a certified purchaser, but also against persons claiming title from him (u). Under the Code of 1882 there was a conflict of decisions as to whether s. 317 of that Code was a bar to suits against persons claiming title from the certified purchaser. On the one hand it was held by the High Courts of Madras, Allahabad and Calcutta, that the expression "certified purchaser" in s. 317 of that Code did not include a person claiming through or under the certified purchaser, such as an heir or an assignee (v), and that that section therefore was no bar to a suit against such person. On the other hand, it was held by the Bombay High Court that the expression "certified purchaser" did include his successor in title (w). The present section contains a legislative recognition of the correctness of the view taken by the High Court of Bombay (x).

DELEGATION TO COLLECTOR OF POWER TO EXECUTE DECREES AGAINST IMMOVEABLE PROPERTY.

68. [S. 320, 1st para.] The Local Government may, with the previous sanction of the Governor-General in Council, declare, by notification in the local official Gazette, that in any local area the execution of decrees in cases in which a Court has ordered any immoveable property to be sold, or the execution of any particular kind of such decrees, or the execution of decrees ordering the sale of any particular kind of, or interest in, immoveable property, shall be transferred to the Collector.

Power to prescribe rules for transferring to Collector execution of certain decrees.

Object of the section.—"The object of these provisions [i.e., provisions relating to the execution of decrees by Collectors] is well-known. In different parts of India, the effect of sales in execution of decrees was to transfer landed estates from the old families to modern speculators. A strong opinion was entertained by certain members of the Government of India, that these results of the administration of civil justice were impolitic and inexpedient; and it was suggested that some procedure might be devised by which the Chief Executive Officer of the district would be enabled to liquidate the debts of encumbered land-holders without the immediate sale of their estates, and so to preserve the old landed gentry of the country. The provisions of ss. 320 to 325C [now ss. 68, 70, 71, and 72 and schedule III] were inserted in the Code of Civil Procedure, in order to give effect to these suggestions" (z).

69. [New.] The provisions set forth in the Third Schedule shall apply to all cases in which the execution of a decree has been transferred under the last preceding section.

Rules of procedure.

Government may make rules consistent with the aforesaid provisions—

- (a) for the transmission of the decree from the Court to the Collector, and for regulating the procedure of the Collector and his subordinates in executing the same, and for retransmitting the decree from the Collector to the Court ;
- (b) conferring upon the Collector or any gazetted subordinate of the Collector all or any of the powers which the Court might exercise in the execution of the decree if the execution thereof had not been transferred to the Collector ;
- (c) providing for orders made by the Collector or any gazetted subordinate of the Collector, or orders made on appeal with respect to such orders, being subject to appeal to, and revision by, superior revenue-authorities as nearly as may be as the orders made by the Court, or orders, made on appeal with respect to such orders, would be subject to appeal to and revision by, appellate or revisional Courts under this Code or other law for the time being in force if the decree had not been transferred to the Collector.

(2) A power conferred by rules made under sub-section

Jurisdiction of Civil Courts barred.

(1) upon the Collector or any gazetted subordinate of the Collector or upon any appellate or revisional authority, shall not be exercisable by the Court or by any Court in exercise of any appellate or revisional jurisdiction which it has with respect to decrees or orders of the Court.

Civil Courts are precluded from interfering in any matter declared by notification to be within the Collector's jurisdiction.—Thus if it is declared by notification that a decree for the sale of a particular kind of property, e.g., “ancestral” property, should be transferred to the Collector for execution, a sale of the property by a Civil Court would be void. Such a notification ousts the jurisdiction of the Court so far as regards the execution of the decree (a). For the same reason, if the execution of a decree is transferred to the Collector, the Court transferring the decree has no power to postpone the sale (b), or to give leave to the decree-holder to bid under

- S. 70. O. 21, r. 72 (c): the Collector alone has that power. Similarly where a decree is transferred for execution to the Collector, and the decree is subsequently adjusted, the application under O. 21, r. 2 [Code of 1882, s. 258] for recording the adjustment should be made to the Collector (d). But where a decree has been sent to the Collector for execution under this section, he holds the money which may be realized in execution of such decree at the disposal of the Court by which the decree has been sent to him for execution, and he is not competent to distribute such money in contravention of an order of the Court indicating the mode of distribution (e).

It is to be noted that sub-section (2) does not take away the jurisdiction of any Court other than the Court referred to in it. The Court there referred to is the Court alluded to in the previous portion of the section, namely, the Court to which application was made for the execution of decree and which as such Court transmitted the decree for execution (f).

Where a suit would lie to set aside an order made by a Court executing a decree, the fact that such order has been made by the Collector could not deprive the Civil Courts of the jurisdiction to entertain a suit from such order (g).

Civil suit to set aside order of Collector.—A suit will lie to set aside an order made by the Collector, if the order is ultrâ vires. Thus there is no rule made by the Government of Bombay under this section empowering the Collector to set aside a sale under O. 21, r. 89 [Code of 1882, s. 310A] on a deposit by the judgment-debtor of the amount specified in that rule, nor is there any rule empowering him to set aside a sale under O. 21, r. 90 [Code of 1882, s. 311] on the ground of material irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale (h). Nor is there any rule made by the Local Government of the N. W. P., under this section empowering the Collector to set aside a sale under O. 21, r. 89 [Code of 1882, s. 310A] (i), though there is a rule empowering him to set aside a sale under O. 21, r. 90 [Code of 1882, s. 311]. Again, there is no rule made by any of the local Governments empowering the Collector to set aside a sale on the ground of fraud (j). If in any of these cases the Collector arrogates to himself the power which he has not, and sets aside the sale, the order will be ultrâ vires, and it will be open to the auction-purchaser to bring a regular suit in a Civil Court for a declaration that the sale was a valid one, and that the order of the Collector setting aside the sale was invalid (k).

Appeal.—No appeal lies to the High Court from an order passed by the Collector in an execution proceeding transferred to him under this section. The reason is that this section specially provides that an appeal shall lie from the order of the Collector to such authorities as the local Government may by rules prescribe (l).

Revision.—An order made by the Collector in the course of execution proceedings under this section sanctioning the prosecution of a party to the suit under s. 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is an order made by him as a Revenue Court, and is not therefore subject to revision by the High Court (m).

Collector deemed to be acting judicially.

“Shall be deemed to be acting judicially.”—The result is that the Collector and his subordinates will be entitled to the benefit of the provisions of the Judicial Officers Protection Act XVIII of 1850, which are as follows :—

“No Judge, Magistrate, Justice of the Peace, Collector, or other person acting judicially shall be liable to be sued in any Civil Court for any act done or ordered to be done by him in the discharge of his judicial duty, whether or not within the limits of his jurisdiction; provided that he at the time, in good faith, believed himself to have jurisdiction to do or order the act complained of; and no officer of any Court or other person bound to execute the lawful warrants or orders of any such Judge, Magistrate, Justice of the Peace, Collector or other person acting judicially, shall be liable to be sued in any Civil Court, for the execution of any warrant or order, which he would be bound to execute if within the jurisdiction of the person issuing the same”

72. [S. 326.] (1) Where in any local area in which no declaration under section 68 is in force the property attached consists of land or of a share in land, and the Collector represents to the Court that the public sale of the land or share is objectionable and that satisfaction of the decree may be made within a reasonable period by a temporary alienation of the land or share, the Court may authorize the Collector to provide for such satisfaction in the manner recommended by him instead of proceeding to a sale of the land or share.

(2) In every such case the provisions of sections 69 to 71 and of any rules made in pursuance thereof shall apply so far as they are applicable.

“The Court may authorize the Collector.”—These words are not imperative, but leave a discretion to the Civil Court. That discretion can only be exercised upon materials placed before the Court. It is therefore open to the decree-holder to place those materials in the shape of evidence before the Civil Court, and to satisfy the Court as well by evidence as by argument that the proposal of the Collector is not feasible or practicable. The Court should not decline to receive the evidence offered by the decree-holder (n).

Temporary alienation.—This section admits only of a temporary alienation of land, and not of an arrangement by which possession is left with the judgment-debtor subject to a payment of the judgment-debt by instalments (o).

Provisions of sections 69 to 71 to apply.—Reading this section with para. 2 of schedule III [Code of 1882 s. 322] referred to in s. 69, it is clear that the provisions of this section cannot be applied to a decree which directs the sale of land in pursuance of a contract specifically affecting the same (p). Similarly reading this section with para. 11, sub-para. (1) of schedule III [Code of 1882, s. 352 A], it follows that where a judgment-debtor executes a mortgage of his property, while the property is in the management of a Collector under this section, with an undertaking to put the mortgagee in possession, the mortgagee is not entitled to claim possession (q). Likewise, reading this section with the same paragraph, no Court could issue any process of execution against any immoveable property in the management of a Collector under this section. Therefore, the period during which the property is in the management of the Collector under this section should be excluded from the period of limitation applicable to the decree of which execution is refused by the Court by reason of the property having been in the Collector's management (r): see sch. III, para. 11, sub-para. (3).

DISTRIBUTION OF ASSETS.

73. [S. 295.] (1) Where assets are held by a Court and more persons than one have, before the receipt of such assets, made application to the Court for the execution of decrees for the payment of money passed against the same judgment-debtor and have not obtained satisfaction thereof, the assets, after deducting the costs of realization, shall be rateably distributed among all such persons :

Proceeds of execution-sale to be rateably distributed among decree-holders.

Provided as follows :—

- (a) where any property is sold subject to a mortgage or charge, the mortgagee or incumbrancer shall not be entitled to share in any surplus arising from such sale ;
- (b) where any property liable to be sold in execution of a decree is subject to mortgage or charge, the Court may, with the consent of the mortgagee or incumbrancer, order that the property be sold free from the mortgage or charge, giving to the mortgagee or incumbrancer the same interest in the proceeds of the sale as he had in the property sold ;
- (c) where any immoveable property is sold in execution of a decree ordering its sale for the first, in defraying the expenses of the sale ;

secondly, in discharging the amount due under the decree ;

thirdly, in discharging the interest and principal moneys due on subsequent incumbrances (if any) ; and,

fourthly, rateably among the holders of decrees for the payment of money against the judgment-debtor, who have, prior to the sale of the property, applied to the Court which passed the decree ordering such sale for execution of such decrees, and have not obtained satisfaction thereof.

(2) Where all or any of the assets liable to be rateably distributed under this section are paid to a person not entitled to receive the same, any person so entitled may sue such person to compel him to refund the assets.

(3) Nothing in this section affects any right of the Government.

Changes introduced by the section.—The present section differs from the corresponding s. 295, C. P. C., 1882, in the following respects :—

1. The words “ where assets are held by a Court ” have been substituted for the words “ whenever assets are realized by sale or otherwise in execution of a decree. ” This, it is submitted, introduces an important alteration, though the High Court of Bombay has held otherwise. See notes below under the head “ Assets held by a Court.”
2. The words “ before the receipt of such assets ” have been substituted for the words “ prior to the realization.” See notes below, under the head “ Before the receipt of the assets.”
3. The word “ passed ” has been added after the word “ money.” See notes below under the head “ same judgment-debtor.”
4. The words “ interest in ” in cl. (b) have been substituted for the words “ right against,” to bring the wording of that clause into line with the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, s. 96. This is a mere verbal alteration.

Rateable distribution.—The object of this section is to provide a cheap and expeditious remedy for the execution of money-decrees held against the same judgment-debtor by adjusting the claims of rival decree-holders without the

S. 73. necessity for separate proceedings (s). Under the Code of 1859 (s. 270), the creditor who first attached property had a prior claim to have his decree satisfied out of the sale-proceeds to the exclusion of other creditors, but now all judgment-creditors who apply to the Court, prior to the receipt of the sale-proceeds by the Court, are entitled to share rateably (t). In Bithal Das v. Nand Kishore (u), Strachey, C.J., said: "The object of the section is two-fold. The first object is to prevent unnecessary multiplicity of execution proceedings, to obviate, in a case where there are many decree-holders, each competent to execute his decree by attachment and sale of a particular property, the necessity of each and every one separately attaching and separately selling that property. The other object is to secure an equitable administration of the property by placing all the decree-holders in the position I have described upon the same footing, and making the property rateably divisible among them, instead of allowing one to exclude all the others merely because he happened to be the first who had attached and sold the property." A obtains a decree against B in Court X for Rs. 4,000, and applies to that Court for execution of his decree by attachment and sale of certain property belonging to B, and the property is thereupon attached. C then obtains a decree also against B in Court X for Rs. 2,000, and applies to that Court for execution of his decree by attachment and sale of the same property attached in execution of A's decree. The property is then sold by the Court for Rs. 3,000. C is entitled to share rateably in the net sale-proceeds, that is to say, if the net sale-proceeds amount to Rs. 3,000, A will be paid Rs. 2,000 and C will be paid Rs. 1,000. It is not necessary to entitle C to participate in the assets that he should have given notice to A of the application made by him for execution of his decree (v).

To entitle a decree-holder to participate in the assets of a judgment-debtor, the following conditions must be present:—

1. The decree-holder claiming to share in the rateable distribution should have applied for execution of his decree to the Court by which the assets are held.
2. Such application should have been made prior to the receipt of the assets by the Court.
3. The assets of which a rateable distribution is claimed must be assets held by the Court.
4. The attaching creditor as well as the decree-holder claiming to participate in the assets should be holders of decrees for the payment of money.
5. Such decrees should have been obtained against the same judgment-debtor.

No rateable distribution can be claimed under the section unless all the conditions enumerated above are present. We proceed to examine these conditions.

1. Court to which application for execution should be made.—

Those decree-holders only could share in the rateable distribution who have actually applied for execution of their decree in the form prescribed by O. 21, r. 11 [Code of 1882, s. 235] to the Court by which the assets are held (w). In execution of a decree obtained by A against B in the Court of a Subordinate Judge of the First Class, certain property belonging to B is attached by that Court. C then obtains a decree against B in the Court of a Subordinate Judge of the Second Class and applies to that Court for execution of his decree by attachment and sale of the same property attached by the First Class subordinate Judge in execution of A's decree. The property is then sold by the First Class Subordinate Judge in execution of A's decree, and the sale-proceeds are received by that Court. Here the Court of the Subordinate Judge of the First Class is the Court by which the assets are held; and, further, it is the Court competent under s. 63 to determine claims to the attached property. The application for execution should therefore have been made by C to that Court. The application not having been made to that Court, C is not entitled to share the sale-proceeds rateably with A (x). The result is that the sale-proceeds will be applied towards the satisfaction of A's decree to the exclusion of C.

Suppose now that in the case put above C had applied to the Subordinate Judge of the First Class for execution of his decree. Would he have been then entitled to share in the rateable distribution? According to the Bombay decisions he would not have been so entitled unless he had previously caused the decree to be transferred for execution to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of the First Class (y). According to the Calcutta and Madras decisions it is not necessary to have the decree transferred for execution to entitle C to share in the rateable distribution (z).

2. Before the receipt of the assets.—The application for execution must be made before the receipt of the assets by the Court. The corresponding s. 295 of the Code of 1882 commenced as follows:—

“Whenever assets are realised by sale or otherwise in execution of a decree, and more persons than one have, prior to the realization, applied to the Court by which such assets are held.”

The present section begins as follows:—

“Where assets are held by a Court, and more persons than one have, before the receipt of such assets, made application to the Court.”

The word “realization” was rather obscure. Indeed it called for several decisions in which the Courts had to define its precise meaning. The word “receipt” which is now substituted for “realization” is not likely to require any judicial interpretation. Cases of the character noted below which turned upon the word “realization” are not likely to arise under the present section, so clear is the meaning of the word “receipt.”

A, B and C held money-decrees against the same judgment-debtor. In December 1892, A attached by a prohibitory order funds of the judgment-debtor in the hands of D [O. 21, r. 46, Code of 1882, s. 268]. In January 1893, B attached the same funds in execution of his decree. In February 1893, D paid the funds into Court. On the same day, but after payment was made into Court, C applied to attach the funds as property in the custody of the Court [O. 21, r. 52, Code of 1882, s. 272]. It was held under s. 295 of the Code of 1882 that the funds should be rateably distributed between A and B, and that C was not entitled to participate therein, as his application was made subsequent to the realization of the assets by the Court (a). The decision

- S. 73. would be the same under the present section, for it is quite clear that C's application was made after the receipt of the assets by the Court.

It was held under s. 295 of the Code of 1882 that where property is sold in execution of a decree, the sale-proceeds are deemed to be realized not when the 25 per cent. is deposited by the purchaser into Court under s. 306 [now O. 21, r. 84], but when the balance of the purchase-money is paid (b). Hence a decree-holder who applied for execution before the entire amount due from the purchaser had been paid into Court was held entitled to share in the rateable distribution, though the application was made after deposit of the 25 per cent. But it was held that a decree-holder who applied for execution after the entire amount of the purchase-money had been paid into Court was not entitled to share in the rateable distribution though his application was made before the sale was confirmed by the Court under s. 312 [now O. 21, r. 92]; and the decision was put on the ground that the point of time when assets are realized is when the sale-proceeds are paid into Court, and not when the sale becomes absolute (c). The decisions would be the same under the present section, and how very obviously so would be seen by substituting the word "received" for the word "realized" (d).

It was held under the Code of 1882, that where immoveable property is sold in execution of a decree in separate parcels, the sale-proceeds are not deemed to be realized until the entire amount of the purchase-money in respect of all the parcels is paid into Court (e). The decision would obviously be the same under the present section. As regards moveables it has been held that if the property consists exclusively of moveables and they are sold in separate lots on different dates, the sale-proceeds are deemed to be realized on the several dates on which they are received by the Officer of the Court and not on the date on which the last payment is received. Thus if part of the moveables attached is sold and the price thereof is received on January 5 and the rest is sold and the price thereof is received on January 10, a decree-holder who applies for rateable distribution on January 7 is entitled to rateable distribution of the sale-proceeds realized on January 10 only and not those realized on January 15 (f).

Where property is sold in execution by a person appointed by the Court under O. 21, r. 65, the receipt of purchase-money by such person is for the purposes of this section equivalent to receipt of assets by the Court. The material date, therefore, is not the date on which the Court receives the amount of the purchase-money from such person, but the date on which such person receives the purchase-money from the purchaser (g).

3. Assets held by a Court.—Far more important than the change effected by the word "receipt" is the change introduced by the omission of the words "whenever assets are realized by sale or otherwise in execution of a decree," and the substitution therefor of the words "where assets are held by a Court." The latter words, coupled with the word "realization" which occurs later on in the section, include, it is submitted, several kinds of assets which were held not liable to rateable distribution under s. 295 of the Code of 1882.

Assets available for rateable distribution.—The only kinds of assets that were held to be available for rateable distribution under s. 295 were:— S. 73.

- (a) assets realized by “sale in execution of a decree,” that is, sale-proceeds of property sold in execution of a decree (h); and
- (b) assets realized “otherwise in execution of a decree.” These words were held to mean assets realized from the property of the judgment-debtor by such modes as those prescribed by s. 291 [O. 21, r. 69], s. 305 [O. 21, r. 83], and s. 322 [Sch. III, paras. 2 and 7] (i). This was explained in later decisions as meaning assets realized in one of the modes expressly prescribed by the sections of the Code (j). The following were held to be assets of this class:—
 - (i) debts attached under s. 268 [now O. 21, r. 46] and paid into Court by the garnishee (k);
 - (ii) rents of property under attachment realized by a receiver appointed under s. 503 [now s. 51. cl. (d) and O. 40, r. 1] at the instance of the decree-holder (l). [The appointment of receiver by the Court in such a case is a “process of execution”];
 - (iii) money in the custody of a public officer attached under s. 272 [now O. 21, r. 52] and paid into Court by that officer (m);
 - (iv) money realized in execution of a decree held by the judgment-debtor against another, where such decree is attached and realized under O. 21, r. 53 [Code of 1882, s. 273] (n);
 - (v) money paid under O. 21, r. 69, to the officer conducting the sale to stop the sale (o);
 - (vi) money raised by the judgment-debtor by private alienation under O. 21, r. 83, and paid into Court (p).

Assets not available for rateable distribution.—Assets not realized “by sale or otherwise in execution of a decree” were not liable to rateable distribution under s. 295. The following are instances of assets held not to be “realized by sale or otherwise in execution of a decree” within the meaning of s. 295, and therefore not subject to rateable distribution under that section:—

Cases under s. 295 of the Code of 1882.

A.—Purshotamdass v. Surajbharthi (1882) 6 Bom. 588—Money paid by a judgment-debtor under arrest under s. 236 of the old Code [now s. 55, proviso 4] to the officer arresting him in order to secure his release was held to be assets not subject to rateable distribution. Sir Charles Sargent, C.J., said “Section 295. . . must be read as if the words ‘from the property of the judgment-debtor’ were inserted after the word ‘realized.’ The provisions contained in sections 291 [O. XXI, r. 83], 305 [O. XXI, r. 69] and 322 [now Sch. III, paras. 2 and 7; the latter para. corresponding with s. 323 of the old Code] are all modes of realizing assets from such property 'otherwise' than by sale, and are sufficient to account for the introduction of that expression into section 295." The effect of the above decision is that to constitute a realization within the meaning of s. 295, it must be either a realization by a sale in execution under the process of the Court, or it must be a realization in one of the other modes expressly prescribed by the sections of the Code.

This was the leading case under the old section, and it was followed in cases B, C, D and E below.

The correctness of the reasoning in Purshotamdass' case seems to have been doubted in Manilal v. Nanabhai (q) where Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C.J., said: "Primâ facie the word 'realized' implies that property has been converted into or obtained in cash or some other form available for immediate distribution, and there is nothing in the word itself which requires that that process should take place as the result of any ulterior proceeding in the course of execution."

B.—Gopal Dei v. Chunni (1886) 8 All. 67, following case A—Money paid into Court by the judgment-debtor under s. 275 of the old Code [now O. XXI, r. 55 (a)] for payment of the amount due to the decree-holder at whose instance the property was attached was held to be an asset not available for rateable distribution, the reason given being that the money was not realized "from the property of the judgment-debtor."

C.—Sew Bux v. Shib Chunder (1886) 13 Cal. 225, following case A—A obtained a decree for money against B. B's property was attached in execution of the decree. C then obtained a decree for money against B, and applied for attachment of B's said property; a warrant of attachment was issued, but the property was not actually attached. B then filed his petition in insolvency, and a vesting order was made. The Official Assignee then paid into Court the amount of A's decree, and the property was released from attachment. C then applied for rateable distribution under s. 295 of the amount paid into court. Held that C was not entitled to rateable distribution. Trevelyan, J., said "I do not think that in this case the money was realized out of the property of the judgment-debtor. . . I think that, by 'sale or otherwise' means by 'sale or other process of execution provided for in the Civil Procedure Code.'"

D.—Prosonnomoji v. Sreenauth (1894) 21 Cal. 809.—In this case, Sale, J., said that the rule deducible from cases A and C was that "to constitute a realization within the meaning of section 295, it must be either a realization by a sale in execution under the process of the Court, or it must be a realization in one of the other modes expressly prescribed by the sections of the Code."

E.—Vibudhapriya v. Yusuf (1905) 28 Mad. 380, following cases A, B, C and D—Money realized by a judgment-debtor by a private sale of his property attached in execution of the decree against him and paid by him into Court under s. 275 of the old Code [now O. XXI, r. 55 (a)] for payment of the amount due to the decree-holder at whose instance the property was attached was held to be an asset not available for rateable distribution, the reason given being that though there was a realization of assets, the realization was not in one of the modes expressly prescribed by the sections of the Code.

Note.—The only distinction between cases B and E is that in case E the judgment-debtor obtained the money by sale of the attached property, while in case B he obtained it without any sale.

It is submitted that the assets in cases A, B, C and E should under the present section be treated as assets available for rateable distribution. The test under the present section is—

- (1) whether the money of which rateable distribution is claimed is an asset held by the Court; and
- (2) whether it has been realized or obtained in execution. The scope of the new section is wider than that of the old one (r). See below notes under case F.

Cases under the present section.

In the following cases which were all decided under the present section it was held that the moneys held by the Court were not assets available for rateable distribution within the meaning of the section:—

F.—Sorabji v. Kala (1911) 36 Bom. 156—Money paid into Court by a judgment-debtor under O. XXI, r. 55 (a) [Code of 1882, s. 275] for payment of the amount due to the decree-holder at whose instance the property was attached has been held not subject to rateable distribution under this section (This is the same as case B above.) Sir Basil Scott, C. J., said: “In the reference to the costs of realization we have an indication that the legislature contemplated that the assets referred to should be assets held in the process of execution. If we were to hold that money paid into Court under Order XXI, Rule 55, was assets held by the Court within the meaning of section 73, we should be only nullifying the provisions of Rule 55; for there will be no inducement to any judgment-debtor to procure a payment into Court of the amount claimed by his attaching creditor, if his money could at once be absorbed by rateable distribution amongst a number of other creditors.” This assumes that the word ‘realized’ means realized by sale or other process of execution expressly prescribed by the sections of the Code as was held in cases A, C, D and E. It is submitted, with respect, that the words “sale or otherwise” which occurred in s. 295 of the Code of 1882 having been omitted in the present section, the interpretation put upon those words in cases A, C, D and E can no longer govern cases arising under the present Code. All that is necessary under the present Code is that (1) there should be assets held by the Court and (2) that such assets should have been realized or obtained in execution proceedings [see the observations of Sir Lawrence Jenkins cited in case A above]. It cannot but be said that money paid into Court by a judgment-debtor under O. 21, r. 55 (a), is money or asset obtained in execution proceedings, and is therefore subject to rateable distribution. It is indeed difficult to see how this view of the section nullifies the provisions of O. 21, r. 55; for money paid into Court under r. 55 may be held to be assets subject to rateable distribution, and yet full effect may be given to r. 55. There is no reason why because a particular payment may operate to release the person [see case G] or property of a judgment-debtor from attachment, that payment should be applied for the benefit exclusively of the decree-holder at whose instance the person or property of the judgment-debtor was attached. Moreover, the object of O. 21, r. 55, is not to afford any inducement to a judgment-debtor as supposed by the Court in Sorabji v. Kala. All that O. 21, r. 55, says is that the circumstances mentioned in cls. (a), (b) and (c) of that rule shall have the effect indicated in the rule. The decision in Sorabji v. Kala has been disapproved by the High Court of Madras (s). It has also been disapproved by Pratt, J., in a later Bombay case—Nathmal v. Maniram (t). As to the first of the two grounds on which the decision in Sorabji v. Kala was based, namely that the money was not realized in process of execution, Pratt, J., said that it followed the cases decided on the words “sale or otherwise,” which were held to mean sale or other process of execution expressly provided for in the Code, but that it was too restrictive a construction under the amended section (u). As to the second ground, namely, that to allow rateable distribution of money paid into Court under O. 21, r. 55, would be to nullify the provisions of r. 55, the learned Judge said: “I also venture to doubt the correctness of the second reason. Order XXI, rule 55, operates effectively where there is one decree-holder. If there are a number of decree-holders there is no scope for the rule, for the judgment-debtor has no motive for paying off one judgment-creditor when the same property is liable to be re-attached by the others. To allow one decree-holder to be paid off in full when the property is insufficient to discharge other judgment-debts might possibly be a undue preference and defeat the object of the section which is equal distribution of all the monies received in execution. Again why should a judgment-creditor, whose attachment has been removed under Order XXI, r. 55, be in a better position than a judgment-creditor who has taken the trouble of bringing the property to sale. Lastly, if the money paid under Order XXI, rule 55, to remove an attachment is not available for rateable distribution, then a fortiori money paid to stop a sale under Order XXI, rule 69, would also not be so available. But even under the old section it was assumed by Sir Charles Sargent in Purshottamdas' case [case A, p. 197.] that money paid to stop a sale is available for rateable distribution. So that the interpretation put upon the section in Sorabji Coovarji v. Kala Raghunath (v) makes the new section more restrictive than the old one, and this is not what the Legislature intended.”

In the Madras case above referred to (w), the Court expressed the opinion that the assets referred to in the present section need not be assets obtained in execution proceedings. This indeed is an extreme view and it was dissented from by Pratt, J., the learned Judge holding that the reference to the costs of realization and the position of the section in the Code at the end of Part II on Execution led irresistibly to the conclusion that the assets to be available for rateable distribution must have been obtained in execution (x). The view taken by Pratt, J., is, it is submitted, the correct view (y).

G.—Ebji Umersy v. W. & A. Graham & Co. (1917) 19 Bom. L. R. 274.—Money paid by a judgment-debtor under arrest under section 55, proviso 4, to the officer arresting him in order to secure his release is not an asset subject to rateable distribution. [This case is the same as case A]. Macleod, J., said: "It appears that the section was only intended to apply to assets realized by the sale of property attached." This view of the section, it is submitted, is not correct. If this view were correct, money paid to stop a sale under O. 21, r. 69, and money raised by private alienation under O. 21, r. 83, would not be assets subject to rateable distribution. But even under the old section it was assumed by Sir Charles Sargent in case A that such monies were available for rateable distribution. It could not possibly be said that the present section is more restricted in its scope than the old section.

H.—Nathmal v. Maniram (1919) 21 Bom. L. R. 975.—A obtained a decree for money against B and in execution of the decree took out a warrant for attachment of the moveable property of B under O. 21, r. 43. The bailiff entered B's shop and showed the warrant to B and pointed out that if the money were not paid he would seize and keep in his custody the moveable property in his shop. B then paid the decretal amount and costs of execution and sheriff's poundage. Upon these facts Pratt, J., expressed the opinion that the money having been paid under stress of the warrant (z), and the warrant being a process of execution, the money was an asset available for rateable distribution within the meaning of the present section. The learned Judge, however, felt bound by the decision of the Appellate Court in Sorabji v. Kala [case F], and held that the money was not subject to rateable distribution.

For other cases see—

O. 21, r. 83, notes "Rateable distribution."

O. 21, r. 89, notes "For payment to the decree-holder—rateable distribution."

4. Decrees for the payment of money.—It is only holders of decrees for the payment of money that are entitled to a rateable distribution under this section. What is a decree for the payment of money within the meaning of this section? We proceed to note the decisions:—

- (i) A decree for the payment of mesne-profits is a "decree for the payment of money" within the meaning of this section, notwithstanding that the amount of mesne-profits has not yet been ascertained. The holder of such a decree, who has applied for attachment under O. 21, r. 42 [Code of 1882, s. 255], is entitled to a rateable distribution with other decree-holders under this section (a).
- (ii) A decree upon a mortgage, which enables the mortgagee to realize the amount of the mortgage-debt "from the mortgaged properties and from the defendants personally" was held to be a "decree for the payment of money" within the meaning of the old section by the High Court of Calcutta in Hart v. Tara Prasanna Mukherji (b). In that case the Court said: "every decree, by virtue of which money is payable is to that extent a 'decree for money' within the meaning of the section, even though other relief may be granted by the decree [e. g., sale of mortgaged property]; and the holder of such a decree is entitled to claim rateable distribution with holders of decrees for money simpliciter" (c). Following these observations, the High Court of Madras held that "where a decree upon a mortgage directs the mortgagor to pay the mortgage-debt to the mortgagee within a period fixed by the Court, and provides that in default the mortgaged property should be sold, and the balance, if any, should be recovered from the mortgagor," the decree was one "for the payment of money" within the meaning of the old section (d). In subsequent cases, however, which turned upon the meaning of the expression "decree for the payment of money" which occurred in s. 230 of the Code of 1882 [now s. 48], the High Court of Calcutta dissented from the Madras decision, on the ground that the decree in that case was not similar to the decree in Hart v. Tara Prasanna Mukherji, the decree in the latter case containing a distinct order upon the mortgagor personally to pay the amount of the mortgage-debt (e). The decree in those cases was similar to the decree in the Madras case, and it was held that the decree was not a "decree for the payment of money" within the meaning of s. 230 of the Code of 1882. The decision, it seems, would have been the same if the Court had been called upon to interpret the same expression in s. 295 of the Code of 1882, and the observations in Hart's case set out above would have been regarded as more obiter dicta. The Allahabad decisions, bearing on the expression "decree for the payment of money" in s. 230 of the Code of 1882 are also to the same effect (f). There is little doubt that if these High Courts were called upon to decide whether a decree of the character in the Madras case was a "decree for the payment of money" within the meaning of this section, they would hold that it was not. In any event the Madras decision cannot be sustained under this Code: see O. 21, r. 20.

- (iii) A decree directing the payment under s. 90 of the Transfer of Property Act [now O. 34, r. 6] of the balance of the mortgage-debt remaining due after payment to the mortgagee of the nett proceeds of the sale of the mortgaged property is a "decree for the payment of money" within the meaning of this section (g).
- (iv) A decree directing the payment of money by a person does not cease to be a decree for the payment of money, in so far as that person is concerned merely because it directs, as against another person, the realization of the money claim from mortgaged property. Thus a decree against A, B and C, which, so far A and B are concerned, is a decree for the enforcement of a mortgage by sale of their property, but which does not direct the sale of any specific property belonging to C, is as regards C, a decree for the payment of money (h).

S. 73.

- (v) A judgment entered up under s. 86 of the Insolvent Debtors Act is a money decree (i).

5. Same judgment-debtor.—The provisions of this section do not apply unless the judgment-debtor is the same. Where the holder of a decree against two or more persons applies for a rateable distribution of the assets realized from property belonging to one of such persons, the application is one for the execution of the decree against the same judgment-debtor.

Illustration.

X obtains a decree against A, and attaches A's property in execution of the decree. Y, who holds a decree against A and B, applies for execution of his decree by attachment and sale of A's property attached in execution of X's decree. Y is entitled under this section to share in the proceeds of the sale of A's property; it is immaterial that Y's decree is against B also and that the decree might have been separately executed against B; Shumbhoo Nath v. Luckynath (1883) 9 Cal. 920; Grant v. Subramanian (1899) 22 Mad. 241; Delhi Bank v. Uncovenanted Service Bank (1888) 10 All. 35.

Similarly, where the holder of a decree against one person applies for a rateable distribution of the assets of that person realised from property belonging to that person and another, such application is an application for the execution of a decree against the same judgment-debtor.

Illustrations.

X obtains a decree against A, B and C, and attaches in execution of the decree certain property belonging to A, B and C jointly. Y holds a decree against A alone. Y is entitled under the provisions of this section to a proportionate distribution of the assets realized by the sale of the joint property, so far as they represent the share of A in that property. Similarly, if Y held a decree against A and B, he would be entitled to a rateable distribution of the assets so far as they represented the share of A and B in the property: Gonesh v. Shiva (1913) 30 Cal. 583; Gatti Lal v. Bir Bahadur (1905) 27 All. 158; Ramanathan v. Subramania (1903) 26 Mad. 179; Chhotatal v. Nabibhai (1905) 7 Bom. L. R. 567. These were decisions under s. 295 of the Code of 1852. Quære whether these decisions have been affected by the introduction in the present section of the word "passed" which did not find a place in the Code of 1882: Balmer Lawrie & Co. v. Jadunath (1914) 42 Cal. 1.

Decree against legal representative of judgment-debtor.—It has been held by the High Courts of Bombay and Madras that if a decree is obtained by X against B, and by Y after B's death against B's legal representative, the judgment-debtor is not the same and the present section does not apply (j). A different opinion has been expressed by the High Court of Calcutta (k).

Clauses (a), (b) and (c).—The first paragraph of this section and clauses (a) and (b) have reference to sales in execution of simple money-decrees. The provisos contained in clauses (a) and (b) declare the incompetence of a mortgagee or incumbrancer as such to share in any surplus proceeds, when property is sold subject to his mortgage or charge. But the alternative is afforded to him of consenting to the property being sold free of his mortgage or charge, in which case the Court may give him the same right against the sale-proceeds as he had against the property. Clause (c) has reference to a sale in execution enforcing an incumbrance; but in distributing the sale proceeds, the discharge of subsequent (and not prior) incumbrances is alone taken into account (l). Compare O. 34, r. 13.

Claims for the rateable distribution of assets.—These claims are claims enforceable under an attachment within the meaning of s. 64. See notes to s. 64 under the head "Explanation to the section," p. 174.

Attachment before judgment.—A decree-holder who has caused property to be attached before judgment, is not entitled to share in a rateable distribution of the sale-proceeds of that property, unless he makes, after judgment, a fresh application for execution under O. 21, r. 11 [Code of 1882, s. 235]. O. 38, r. 11 [Code of 1882, s. 490] does not touch the point (m).

Sub-sec. (2): Suit for refund.—The scheme of this section is to enable the Court as matter of administration to distribute the assets according to what seem at the time to be the rights of parties without this distribution importing a conclusive adjudication as to those rights, which may be subsequently re-adjusted in a suit brought under the penultimate paragraph of the section (n). Such a suit is virtually a suit for money had and received, and the period of limitation is three years from the date of the receipt of the assets by the defendant (o). The suit being one for money had and received it is clear that it should be dismissed as premature, if it is brought before the moneys have been actually paid to the defendant. A mere order for the payment of money under this section is not sufficient to found the action (p).

Suit by subsequent mortgagee to recover balance of money realised by sale under a prior mortgage.—X mortgages his property to A. He then mortgages the same property to B. Subsequently he further mortgages the property to A. A sues X on the first mortgage, joining B as a defendant, and obtains a decree on the mortgage. The property is sold in execution of the decree, and a balance of Rs. 12,000 which remains after satisfying A's decree is deposited in Court. A then obtains a decree for sale on the further charge, and in execution of the decree draws out the balance deposited in Court. B is not joined as a party to this suit, nor is any notice given to him that A was drawing out of Court the balance of Rs. 12,000. B then sues A to recover the amount drawn out by A, that is Rs. 12,000. Such a suit is not one under sub-sec. (2), and the period of limitation applicable to the suit is 12 years under art. 132 of the Limitation Act. The suit is really one to enforce payment of money charged upon immoveable property within the meaning of that article (q).

Inquiry as to validity of decree.—There is a conflict of decisions as to whether, where it is alleged by a claimant that a decree obtained by another claimant is collusive, that is, obtained by the latter in collusion with the judgment-debtor, the Court has power to enquire into the bona fides of the decree. The High Court of Calcutta (r), and, following it, the High Court of Bombay (s), have held that it has. On the other hand, it has been held by the High Court of Madras that it has not (t). The latter view, it is submitted, is correct. If a Court executing a decree has no power to go behind the decree [see notes to s. 38], much less has a Court acting under the provisions of this section (u).

Rights of Government not affected.—A judgment-debt due to the Crown is entitled to precedence in execution (v).

Rights created by this section not affected by insolvency.—An order made under this section for rateable distribution is not affected by the insolvency of the judgment-debtor subsequent to the making of the order. But the order will be confined in its operation to the assets of the judgment-debtor realized up to the date of the vesting order; assets realized after the date of the vesting order will vest in the Official Assignee (w).

Appeal.—An order made under this section is no doubt an order in execution, but it is not a decree, and is not therefore appealable, unless all the conditions enumerated in s. 47 are present. One of those conditions is that the question decided by the Court should be one which arose between the parties to the suit, that is, between the judgment-debtor on the one hand and the decree-holder on the other (x). It is clear from what has been stated above that an order made under this section cannot be one under s. 47, and no appeal will lie from it, if the question determined by the order arose between two rival decree-holders in which the judgment-debtor had no interest (y). But if the question determined by the order arose not only between rival decree-holders, but also between the judgment-debtor on the one hand and the decree-holders on the other, the order would be within s. 47, and would therefore be appealable (z).

RESISTANCE TO EXECUTION.

74. [s. 330.] Where the Court is satisfied that the holder of a decree for the possession of immoveable property or that the purchaser of immoveable property sold in execution of a decree has been resisted or obstructed in obtaining possession of the property by the judgment-debtor or some person on his behalf and that such resistance or obstruction was without any just cause, the Court may, at the instance of the decree-holder or purchaser, order the judgment-debtor or such other person to be detained in the civil prison for a term which may extend to thirty days and may further direct that the decree-holder or purchaser be put into possession of the property.

PART III.

Incidental Proceedings.

COMMISSIONS.

Power of Court to issue commissions.

75. [New.] Subject to such conditions and limitations as may be prescribed, the Court may issue a commission—

- (a) to examine any person ;
- (b) to make a local investigation ;

PART IV.

Suits in Particular Cases.

SUITS BY OR AGAINST THE GOVERNMENT OR PUBLIC OFFICERS IN THEIR OFFICIAL CAPACITY.

79. [S. 416.] (1) Suits by or against the Government shall be instituted by or against the Secretary of State for India in Council.

Suits by or against Government.

(2) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to limit or otherwise affect any information exhibited by the Advocate General in exercise of the power declared by Section 111 of the East India Company Act, 1813.

Sub-section (2) is new.

As to procedure in suits by or against Government, see O. 27.

Scope of the section.—This section does not enlarge or in any way affect the extent of the claims or liabilities enforceable by or against the Secretary of State for India in Council which must always depend on the provisions of the Government of India Act, 1858, s. 65 [now Government of India Act, 1915, s. 32]. It gives no cause of action, but only declares the mode of procedure when a cause of action has arisen (a). The material words of the said s. 65 enact that “the Secretary of State in Council shall and may sue and be sued as well in India as in England by the name of the Secretary of State in Council as a body corporate; and all persons and bodies politic shall and may have and take the same suits remedies and proceedings, legal and equitable, against the Secretary of State in Council of India as they could have done against the said Company,” that is, the East India Company (b).

The Secretary of State is not a proper party to a suit by an owner of land under s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act 1 of 1877 against a member of the public who claims to use such land as a public road and thereby endangers the title of the owner (c).

Act of State.—The Secretary of State can only be sued in respect of those matters for which the East India Company could have been sued, viz., matters for which private individuals or trading corporations could have been sued, or in regard to those matters for which there is express statutory provision. No suit would lie against the East India Company in respect of acts of State or acts of Sovereignty, and therefore no suit in respect of such acts lies against the Secretary of State in Council (d). See notes above.

State (1904) 28 Bom. 314; Ross v. Secretary of State (1915) 39 Mad. 781; McInerney v. Secretary of State (1911) 38 Cal. 797; Secretary of State v. Cockcroft (1914) 39 Mad. 351 [damages for injury to person]. See also Dhakjee v. The East India Co. (1843) 2 Morley's Digest, 307; Secretary of State v. Hari (1882) 5 Mad. 273; Vijaya v. Secretary of State (1884) 7 Mad. 466; Shivabhanjan v. Secretary of State (1904) 28 Bom. 314.

Jurisdiction.—A suit against the Secretary of State for India can only be brought in the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the cause of action has arisen. The words “dwell” or “reside” or “carry on business” or “personally work for gain” which occur in ss. 16, 19 and 20 of the Code and cl. 12 of the Letters Patent do not apply to the Secretary of State in Council (e).

79, 80.

Information exhibited by Advocate General.—The power of the Advocate General to exhibit informations in the nature of actions at law or bills in equity was expressly declared by s. 111 of the East India Company Act, 1813 [53 Geo. 3, c. 155], and kept alive by s. 2 of the Government of India Act, 1833 [3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 85], and again by s. 1 of the Government of India Act, 1853 [16 & 17 Vict., c. 95], and by s. 29 of the Government of India Act, 1858 [21 & 22 Vict., c. 106], and now merged in s. 114 of the Government of India Act, 1915 [5 and 6 Geo. 5, c. 61]. As the Governor General in Council was precluded by s. 22 of the Indian Councils Act, 1861 [24 & 25 Vict., c. 67] from legislative interference with the provisions of any of the enactments above quoted, it was thought that s. 416 of the Code of 1882 [now sub-section (1) of the present section] in so far as it excluded informations exhibited by the Advocate General, did not comprehend a full and accurate statement of the law on the subject. Accordingly sub-section (2) was added into the present section, so that the existence of the Statute therein referred to may not be overlooked. As to the definition of “information,” see Wharton’s Law Lexicon, p. 437.

80. [S. 424.] No suit shall be instituted against the Secretary of State for India in Council, Notice.
or against a public officer in respect of any act purporting to be done by such public officer in his official capacity, until the expiration of two months next after notice in writing has been, in the case of the Secretary of State in Council, delivered to, or left at the office of, a Secretary to the Local Government or the Collector of the district, and, in the case of a public officer, delivered to him or left at his office, stating the cause of action, the name, description and place of residence of the plaintiff and the relief which he claims; and the plaint shall contain a statement that such notice has been so delivered or left.

Changes in the section.—This section corresponds with s. 424 of the Code of 1882. The words “any act” have been substituted for the words “an act,” and the words “by such public officer” for the words “by him.” Both these alterations are verbal.

Provisions of this section imperative.—The language of this section is imperative and absolutely debars a Court from entertaining a suit instituted without compliance with its provisions. If the provisions of the section are not complied with, the only course open to the Court is to reject the plaint under O. 7, r. 11, cl. (d) [Code of 1882, s. 54, (c)] (f).

S. 30.

Object of notice.—The object of the notice required by this section is to give the Secretary of State or the public officer an opportunity to reconsider his legal position and to make amends or settle the claim, if so advised, without litigation (g).

Sufficiency of notice.—A notice under this section is sufficient, if it substantially fulfils its object in informing the parties concerned generally of the nature of the suit intended to be filed (h). Hence a notice is not invalid merely because it is given by only two out of three plaintiffs (i). It is essential, however, that the notice should state the names, descriptions, and places of residence of all the plaintiffs. Therefore, when a suit was brought by sixty-three plaintiffs, but the notice contained the names, descriptions and places of residence of only two of them, it was held that the notice was insufficient (j).

Waiver of notice.—It is competent to the Secretary of State to waive notice and he may be estopped by his conduct from pleading the want of notice at a late stage of the trial. Thus where objection was taken by the Secretary of State to the sufficiency of notice in his written statement, but there was no issue raised upon the point, nor was any objection taken by him at any stage of the trial in the Court of first instance, and it was another defendant who applied just before the trial began that an additional issue might be raised on that point, it was held that so far as the Secretary of State was concerned the notice was waived, and that it was not competent to the other defendant to raise the question (k).

Notice to Secretary of State.—Where a suit is proposed to be instituted against the Secretary of State for India in Council, notice to him under this section should be given in all cases, whether the act in respect of which the suit is to be brought purports to be done by him in his official capacity or not. The substitution of the words "by such public officer" for the words "by him" which occurred in the corresponding s. 424 of the Code of 1882 makes the point quite clear. The words of this section countenance no distinction based only on the class or character of the suit filed when it is filed against the Secretary of State (l). See notes below under the head "Notice in suit for injunction."

"Any act purporting to be done by such public officer in his official capacity."—These words were introduced into s. 424 of the Code of 1877 by Act 12 of 1879. The same words also occurred in s. 424 of the Code of 1882. The present section corresponds with s. 424 of the Code of 1882 except that "any" has been substituted for "an" and the words "such public officer" have been substituted for the word "him." According to the concise Oxford Dictionary, to "purport" in this context means to "be intended to seem". Applying this meaning, the words "any act purporting to be done by such public officer in his official capacity" mean any act "intended to seem" to be done by him in his official capacity (m). See notes below under the heads "Notice to public officer" and "Notice in suits for injunction".

Notice to public officer.—There is no doubt that notice must be given to the Secretary of State in all cases whatever be the character of the suit (n), but as regards notice to a public officer it is to be given to him in those cases only where the suit is "in respect of any act purporting to be done by such public officer in his official capacity". The decisions bearing on the words "in respect of any act purporting to be done by such public officer in his official capacity" may be divided into the following four groups:—

I. Since notice to a public officer is required to be given only in respect of any act purporting to be done by him in his official capacity, no notice is necessary where the act done by him is not within his sphere of duties. Thus where a public officer took possession of property which he had no authority to seize and was sued for trespass, it was held that the suit was not against him in his official capacity, but as a private individual, and therefore no notice was necessary (o). Similarly where the suit was one for damages for assault, the allegation being that the plaintiff, a sub-overseer, was assaulted by the defendant who was his superior officer in a fit of anger, it was held that the act complained of was not an act purporting to be done by the defendant in his official capacity, and therefore no notice was necessary (p). On the same principle where a suit was brought to recover money due on a promissory note from a minor under the Court of Wards, and the Collector was appointed guardian ad litem of the minor, it was held that no notice was necessary as the Collector was on the record merely for the protection of the minor's interests (q).

II. Since notice to a public officer is necessary only in respect of any act purporting to be done by him in his official capacity, it follows that the only class of suits in which it is necessary to give notice to a public officer is where the suit is founded upon tort, in other words, where the suit is in respect of a wrong committed by him in the discharge of his official duties, and that no notice is necessary if the suit is founded upon contract (r), or any other cause of action (s).

Illustrations.

(1) Suit founded upon contract.—A sues B, a public officer, to recover the price of certain timber supplied by him to B. No notice is necessary, for the suit is not in respect of any tort or wrong done by B, but is one for damages for breach of a contract: Rajmal v. Hanmant (1896) 20 Bom. 697.

(2) Suit founded upon a contract implied in law.—A suit against a public officer for the recovery of money paid to him under protest is one sounding substantially in tort, though in form it is one for money had and received. Notice, therefore, of such a suit must be given before the suit is instituted: Cecil Gray v. The Cantonment Committee of Poona (1910) 34 Bom. 583. See Indian Contract Act, s. 72, ill. (b).

(3) Suit founded upon other causes of action.—No notice is necessary in a suit against the Official Trustee to determine the rights of beneficiaries to trust funds in his hands. The reason is that such a suit is not in respect of any wrong or tort committed by the Official Trustee in the discharge of his official duties: Shahebzadee v. Ferguson (1881) 7 Cal. 499.

III. A suit may be one founded upon tort as stated in Rule II above, but the wrongful act complained of may have been done inadvertently or it may have

S. 80, been done mala fide, that is maliciously or dishonestly. If the wrong is done inadvertently, there is no doubt that notice is necessary under this section. But there is a conflict of decisions as to whether notice is necessary under this section when the public officer acts mala fide, that is, maliciously or dishonestly, in the discharge of his duties, it being held in some cases that it is not (t), while in others that it is (u). The cases in which it is held that notice is not necessary proceed on the ground that an act done mala fide by a public officer cannot be said to be an "act purporting to be done by such public officer in his official capacity" within the meaning of this section. On the other hand, the cases in which it has been held that notice is necessary proceed on the ground that the section makes no distinction between acts done bona fide and acts done mala fide and that notice is necessary in every case of tort done by a public officer provided it was in the discharge of his duties. Thus where a suit was brought against a police officer, the action complained of being that he searched the house of the plaintiff, dragged him to the thana, and detained and kept him in confinement for several hours maliciously and without cause, it was held that the officer having acted illegally and in bad faith could not be said to have acted in his capacity as a public officer and therefore no notice was necessary (v). Similarly, where a suit was brought against a District Magistrate and two officers of Police for conspiracy and malicious arrest and search, it was held that the suit was one in which the public officer was sued in respect of an act done in bad faith and therefore no notice under this section was required (w). On the other hand, in Jogendranath Roy v. Price (x) where the plaintiff sued a District Magistrate for damages for illegal and malicious arrest under a warrant, it was held that though the act was said to be done maliciously, notice was required to be given under this section. The Court said, "The section does not seem to us to warrant the drawing of a distinction between acts of this kind done inadvertently or otherwise." Following the above decision, it was held by the High Court of Allahabad in a suit against a Police Officer to recover certain books seized by him in a search, the seizure of which was denied, that notice was necessary under this section (y). In a recent Madras case (z), A brought a suit against B and attached before judgment certain wood belonging to B. Thereafter the village munsif sold the said wood for arrears of revenue due from B though there was no necessity to sell the whole, and after retaining the amount due for arrears of revenue handed over the balance of the sale proceeds to B, although he had knowledge of the attachment. Thereupon A brought a suit against the village munsif for damages, alleging that the munsif colluded with B and paid the balance of the sale-proceeds to him. The Court found that the munsif was aware of the attachment and that he dishonestly and fraudulently paid over the balance of the sale-proceeds to B. On the question of notice under this section, it was held by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court that the munsif was entitled to notice under this section, although he acted mala fide in the discharge of his duties.

IV. Where the suit is one founded upon tort, notice must be given whether the relief sought is for damages or merely for a declaration that the act complained of is against the provisions of law and therefore illegal (a).

Notice in suits for injunction.—Where a suit is brought against a public officer for an injunction to restrain him from doing an act threatened to be done by him, no notice is necessary to be given under this section. The reason is that this section applies where a relief is sought in respect of an act done by a public officer, and not where relief is sought in respect of an act not yet done, but threatened to be done (b). It must, however, be noted that the words “act purporting to be done” relate to a public officer and not to the Secretary of State. Therefore, notice must be given to the Secretary of State, even though the suit against him may be one for an injunction (c), unless the circumstances of the case are such that if notice has to be given and the plaintiff has to wait for two months, irreparable injury may be done to him in the meantime (d). Following this view, it has been held that where in a case of dispute between the plaintiff and the Government as to the title of certain land the plaintiff gave notice to the Secretary of State of an intended suit for a declaration of title as required by this section, but during the currency of the notice the Government threatened to demolish the structure on the land, the plaintiff was entitled to institute a suit even before the expiry of two months from the date of the notice for a declaration of title and for an injunction restraining the Government from demolishing the structure. The Court said: “It is small gain to a private person to enact that he may have redress against a defendant after two months’ notice if, during the currency of the two months, the defendant is allowed to make redress impossible. The right of suit, which is expressly granted by the Legislature, cannot, in reason, be deferred until its exercise has become illusory” (e).

The mere fact that the plaintiff sues for an injunction and in the alternative for damages is no ground for requiring a notice to be given if the necessity really exists for an injunction (f).

Death of complainant after notice but before suit.—Notice is given by A under this section to the Secretary of State of a proposed suit. A dies before the institution of the suit. The notice by A does not enure for the benefit of his legal representative, and he must give a fresh notice under this section before instituting the suit (g).

Amendment of plaint.—Where notice of a proposed suit is once given, it is not necessary to give a fresh notice of two months if the plaint has to be amended owing to discovery of facts not within the plaintiff’s knowledge at the time of the institution of the suit (h). But no amendment will be allowed if the effect of the amendment will be to convert the suit into another of a different character, e.g., a suit based on negligence into one based on nuisance. In such a case a fresh suit must be brought after giving fresh notice as required by this section (i).

Notice to Collector.—A Collector is entitled to notice under this section of a suit for damages in respect of an act done by him in his official capacity as agent of the Court of Wards; but he is not entitled to such notice if he is sued or joined as a party, not by reason of any act purporting to be done by him in his official capacity but merely for the protection of a minor's title (j).

Notice to Cantonment Committee.—A Cantonment Committee constituted under the Indian Cantonments Act, 1889, is a "public officer" within the meaning of this section (k).

Notice to Official Assignee.—No notice is necessary to the Official Assignee in a suit to restrain him by an injunction from selling goods claimed by the plaintiff to belong to him (l).

Limitation.—In computing the period of limitation prescribed for a suit under this section, the period of the notice should be excluded (m).

Place of suing.—See notes to s. 79, "Jurisdiction," on p. 209 above.

[s. 429.] (1) Where the decree is against the Secretary of State for India in Council or against a public officer in respect of any such act as aforesaid, a time shall be specified in the decree within which it shall be satisfied; and, if the decree is not satisfied within the time so specified, the Court shall report the case for the orders of the Local Government.

When aliens may sue.

(2) No alien enemy residing in British India without such permission, or residing in a foreign country, shall sue in any of such Courts.

Explanation.—Every person residing in a foreign country the Government of which is at war with the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and carrying on business in that country without a license in that behalf under the hand of one of His Majesty's Secretaries of State or of a Secretary to the Government of India, shall, for the purpose of subsection (2), be deemed to be an alien enemy residing in a foreign country.

Alien enemy.—As to who are alien enemies, see the undermentioned case (n).

Alien enemy residing in British India: with permission of Government of India.—A filed a petition in the Allahabad High Court for judicial separation against her husband. The parties were Germans, and the petition was filed while England was at war with Germany. At the time of filing the petition, A was residing in Lucknow apparently with the permission of the Government of India, while her husband was in Germany. After filing the petition, A applied for an order directing the summons together with a copy of the petition to be sent to the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division of the High Court in England for transmission to the Foreign Office for service upon the respondent. The Court granted the application (o).

Limitation.—Where the right of alien enemies to sue is suspended by an order of the Government, the period during which the right is suspended is not to be excluded from the time prescribed by the Limitation Act for the suit (p).

84. [S. 431.] (1) A foreign State may sue in any Court of British India:

When foreign States may sue.

Provided that such State has been recognised by His Majesty or by the Governor-General in Council.

Provided, also, that the object of the suit is to enforce a private right vested in the head of such State or in any officer of such State in his public capacity.

(o) Angelina v. Joseph (1917) 39 All. 377.

Ss. (2) Every Court shall take judicial notice of the fact 84, 85. that a foreign State has or has not been recognized by His Majesty or by the Governor-General in Council.

Proviso (2) to sub-section (1).—The second proviso to the corresponding s. 431, C. P. C., 1882, ran as follows:—

“Provided that the object of the suit is to enforce the private rights of the head or of the subjects of the foreign State.”

The language of that proviso was liable to be construed as conferring upon the head of a foreign State a general power to litigate in respect of the private rights of his subjects. Such, however, was not the object, and the language has accordingly been modified to make it clear that the object of litigation by a foreign State must be the enforcement of a private right vested in the head of the State or in an officer of the State as such.

Private right vested in the head of a State.—That is, those private rights of a State that must be enforced through a Court of Justice as distinguished from its political rights (g).

85. [S. 432.] (1) Persons specially appointed by order of the Government at the request of any Sovereign, Prince or Ruling Chief, whether in subordinate alliance with the British Government or otherwise and whether residing within or without British India, or at the request of any person competent, in the opinion of the Government, to act on behalf of such Prince or Chief, to prosecute or defend any suit on his behalf, shall be deemed to be the recognized agents by whom appearances, acts and applications under this Code may be made or done on behalf of such Prince or Chief.

Persons specially appointed by Government to prosecute or defend for Princes or Chiefs.

(2) An appointment under this section may be made for the purpose of a specified suit or of several specified suits, or for the purpose of all such suits as it may from time to time be necessary to prosecute or defend on behalf of the Prince or Chief.

(3) A person appointed under this section may authorize or appoint persons to make appearances and applications and do acts in any such suit or suits as if he were himself a party thereto.

Recognized agents specially appointed under this section.—This section is an enabling section. It enables a Sovereign Prince or Ruling Chief to prosecute or defend suits through recognized agents specially appointed in that behalf; it does not prevent the institution of a suit by a Sovereign Prince in his own name or through a recognized agent appointed under O. 3, r. 2 [Code of 1882, s. 37] (r),

Ss,
85, 86.

A plaint in a suit instituted on behalf of a Ruling Chief is signed by A.B. At the time of signing the plaint A.B. was not especially appointed to sue on behalf of the Chief under this section. The plaint is nevertheless valid, if A.B. is subsequently appointed to sue on behalf of the Chief, and if the appointment is made before the expiration of the period of limitation prescribed for the suit (s).

A Political Agent not specially appointed under this section cannot sue on behalf of a Prince (t).

Discovery.—A foreign State is not exempt from giving discovery (u).

86. [S. 433.] (1) Any such Prince or Chief, and any ambassador or envoy of a foreign State, may, with the consent of the Governor-General in Council, certified by the signature of a Secretary to the Government of India, but not without such consent, be sued in any competent Court.

(2) Such consent may be given with respect to a specified suit or to several specified suits, or with respect to all suits of any specified class or classes, and may specify, in the case of any suit or class of suits, the Court in which the Prince, Chief, ambassador or envoy may be sued; but it shall not be given unless it appears to the Government that the Prince, Chief, ambassador or envoy—

- (a) has instituted a suit in the Court against the person desiring to sue him, or
- (b) by himself or another trades within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court, or
- (c) is in possession of immoveable property situate within those limits and is to be sued with reference to such property or for money charged thereon.

(3) No such Prince, Chief, ambassador or envoy shall be arrested under this Code, and, except with the consent of the Governor-General in Council certified as aforesaid, no decree shall be executed against the property of any such Prince, Chief, ambassador or envoy.

(4) The Governor-General in Council may, by notification in the Gazette of India, authorize a Local Government and any Secretary to that Government to exercise, with respect to any Prince, Chief, ambassador or envoy named in the notification, the functions assigned by the foregoing subsections to the Governor-General in Council and a Secretary to the Government of India, respectively.

(5) A person may, as a tenant of immoveable property, sue, without such consent as is mentioned in this section, a Prince, Chief, ambassador or envoy from whom he holds or claims to hold the property.

Consent shall not be given "unless it appears to the Government that."—The words "it appears to the Government that" have been added in subsection (2) to make it clear that the decision of the Government is final and not open to question by the Court. The contrary was assumed in the undermentioned cases (v).

Consent must be obtained before institution of suit.—This section provides that a Sovereign Prince or Ruling Chief may be sued in any competent Court with the consent of the Governor-General in Council. Such consent must be obtained before the institution of the suit; a consent given after the institution of the suit is not a sufficient consent under this section. If the consent is not obtained before the institution of the suit the Court should dismiss the suit, or, perhaps, allow the plaintiff to withdraw it with liberty to bring a fresh suit under O. 23, r. 1 [Code of 1882, s. 373] (w).

Waiver of objection to want of consent.—It has been seen in the notes to s. 21 that where a Court has no jurisdiction at all to entertain a suit, the objection to its jurisdiction may be taken at any stage of the suit even though the defendant may have waived the objection: the reason is that a defect in the jurisdiction cannot be cured by waiver. But if the case is one of irregular exercise of jurisdiction, the defect may be cured by waiver on the part of the defendant. If a suit is instituted against a Sovereign Prince without the consent of the Governor-General in Council and the plaintiff is admitted, the case is one of irregular exercise of jurisdiction, and if the defendant fails to object to the institution of the suit in his written statement, and does not object until the suit is ripe for hearing, he will be deemed to have waived the objection and will be precluded from taking the objection at a later stage of the suit (x). It was so held by the High Court of Bombay after an exhaustive review of the authorities on the subject. This view has been dissented from by the High Court of Madras on the ground that the recognition of cases of waiver, as excepted from the ordinary provisions of International Law as understood in England, cannot be imported into the clear language of the Indian Code (y). The fact that a Sovereign Prince chooses to waive his privilege in one suit does not preclude him from pleading it in another suit (z).

Money charged on immoveable property.—Unless maintenance has been made a charge upon immoveable property, a mere claim for maintenance is not a claim for money charged on immoveable property within the meaning of sub-section (2), cl. (c) (a).

Suit against Ruling Chief in his private capacity.—The provision of this section apply whether the suit is brought against a Ruling Chief in his Sovereign capacity or in his private capacity such as a trustee of a temple in British India (b).

Sovereign Prince.—The Maharaja of Hill Tipperah is a Sovereign Prince within the meaning of this section, in that the Tipperah State governs itself without dependence on any foreign power. "It makes and administers its own laws, and the Maharaja admittedly exercise the power of life and limb within his own territory." Its acknowledgment of the British Government as the paramount power, and the nazar paid on the recognition by that Government of succeeding Maharajahs, do not take away from it the status of a Sovereign State (c).

Ruling Chief.—The Desai of Patadi is a Ruling Chief within the meaning of this section (d). The Kurundwad Jahageerdars are also Ruling Chiefs (e).

Sub-section (4).—For notifications issued under this sub-section, see General Statutory Rules and Orders, Vol. I, pp. 625-638.

Style of Princes and Chiefs as parties to suits.

87. [S. 434.] A Sovereign Prince or Ruling Chief may sue, and shall be sued, in the name of his State :

Provided that in giving the consent referred to in the foregoing section the Governor-General in Council or the Local Government, as the case may be, may direct that any such Prince or Chief shall be sued in the name of an agent or in any other name.

INTERPLEADER.

88. [S. 470.] Where two or more persons claim adversely to one another the same debt, sum of money or other property, moveable or immoveable, from another person who claims no interest therein other than for charges or costs, and who is ready to pay or deliver it to the rightful claimant, such other person may institute a suit of interpleader against all the claimants for the purpose of obtaining a decision as to the person to whom the payment or delivery shall be made, and of obtaining indemnity for himself :

- S. 88. Provided that where any suit is pending in which the rights of all parties can properly be decided, no such suit of interpleader shall be instituted.

English Law.—Compare R. S. C., O. 57, rr. 1, 2.

Changes in the section.—This section corresponds with s. 470 of the Code of 1882 except in the following particulars:—

- (1) The words “the same debt, sum of money or other property, moveable or immoveable” have been substituted for the words “the same payment or property.”
- (2) The words “who claims no interest therein other than for charges or costs” have been borrowed from R. S. C., O. 57, r. 2, and have been substituted for the words “whose only interest therein is that of a mere stakeholder.”

Procedure.—As to procedure in interpleader suits, see O. 35 below.

What is an interpleader suit.—An interpleader suit is one in which the real dispute is between the defendants only and the defendants interplead, that is to say, plead against each other instead of pleading against the plaintiff as in an ordinary suit. In every interpleader suit there must be some debt or sum of money or other property in dispute between the defendants only, and the plaintiff must be a person who claims no interest therein other than for charges or costs and who is ready to pay or deliver it to such of the defendants as may be declared by the Court to be entitled to it. Thus suppose certain property is claimed by A as well as by B, and X is in possession of that property and claims no interest in the property himself and is ready and willing to deliver it to such party as may be declared by the Court to be the rightful owner of it. X as plaintiff may institute an interpleader suit against A and B as defendants. In such a case X will, as a rule, be dismissed from the suit at the first hearing after his costs are provided for, and A and B will be left to interplead and to fight the matter out between themselves exactly as if one of them was plaintiff and the other was defendant (O. 35, r. 4). But before the plaintiff is dismissed from the suit, he must deposit the property in dispute in Court (O. 35, r. 2).

Who claims no interest other than for charges or costs.—A railway company which claims no interest in goods in its possession other than a lien on the goods for wharfage, demurrage and freight, may institute an interpleader suit, where the goods are claimed by two persons adversely to each other (f).

A holds in his hands a sum of Rs. 5,000 which is claimed by B and C adversely to each other. A institutes an interpleader suit against B and C. It is found at the hearing that A had entered into an agreement with B before the institution of the suit that if B succeeded in the suit he should accept from A Rs. 4,000 only in full satisfaction of his claim. The suit must be dismissed, for A has by virtue of the agreement, an interest in the subject-matter of the suit (g).

A suit must not be regarded as an interpleader suit and subject therefore to the provisions of this section, merely because one of the reliefs claimed by the plaintiff requires the defendants to interplead together concerning certain claims. The Court must have regard to all the prayers of the plaint to determine the exact nature of the suit (h).

PART V.

Special Proceedings.

ARBITRATION.

89. [New.] (1) Save in so far as is otherwise provided by the Indian Arbitration Act, 1899, or by any other law for the time being in force, all references to arbitration, whether by an order in a suit or otherwise, and all proceedings thereunder, shall be governed by the provisions contained in the second Schedule.

Arbitration.

(2) The provisions of the second Schedule shall not affect any arbitration pending at the commencement of this Code, but shall apply to any arbitration after that date under any agreement or reference made before the commencement of this Code.

Arbitration.—The provisions of the Code of 1882 relating to arbitration have been transferred with certain modifications to a separate Schedule “in the hope that at no distant date they may be transferred into a comprehensive Arbitration Act.” See Sch. II.

Indian Arbitration Act, IX of 1899—Application of the Act.—The Act came into force on the first day of July 1899. It relates to “arbitration by agreement without the intervention of a Court of Justice,” that is to say, to private arbitrations only. Sec. 3 of the Act provides that sections 523 to 526 of the Code of 1882 [now paras. 17, 19 and 20 of Sch. II] shall not apply to any submission or arbitration to which the Act applies. The question then arises, to what cases does the Act apply? Sec. 2 of the Act provides that the Act “shall apply only in cases where, if the subject-matter submitted to arbitration were the subject of a suit, the suit could, whether with leave or otherwise, be instituted in a Presidency town.” The terms of that section show that two conditions must be present before the provisions of the Arbitration Act can be applied to an agreement to refer matters in dispute to arbitration, namely, (1) that there must be no suit pending in respect of those matters (i) [note the words “could be instituted”], and (2) that the case must be one in respect of which if either party wanted to bring a suit the suit could be instituted in a Presidency town. It is only in those cases that the Arbitration Act applies. In other cases the provisions of paras. 17, 19 and 20 of Sch. II apply.

Sec. 2 of the Arbitration Act empowers the Local Government, with the previous sanction of the Governor-General in Council, to declare the Act applicable to local areas other than Presidency towns as if they were Presidency towns.

“Any other law for the time being in force.”—This, it has been held, has reference inter alia to the provisions of O. 23, r. 3: see notes to O. 23, r. 3, “Adjustment: submission and award.”

Ss.
89-91.

The expression "any other law" has also reference to the rule of law which enables a party to institute a regular suit on an award. Thus a "submission" under the Arbitration Act [s. 4] means a written agreement to submit differences to arbitration. If the agreement is not in writing, and an award is made, a suit, it is submitted, may be brought on the award. As to the form of a suit on an award, see Sch. I, App. A form No. 10. See also notes to Sch. II, para. 20, "This paragraph is no bar to a regular suit to enforce an award."

In this connection may be noted the provisions of s. 30 of the Specific Relief Act of 1877, by which it is enacted that the provisions of Chapter II of the Act relating to the specific performance of contracts shall mutatis mutandis apply to awards. See Pollock and Mulla's Indian Contract and Specific Relief Acts, notes to s. 30 of the latter Act.

SPECIAL CASE.

90. [New.] Where any persons agree in writing to state a case for the opinion of the Court, then the Court shall try and determine the same in the manner prescribed.

Power to state case for opinion of Court.

See O. 36 below, of which the rules correspond with ss. 527-531 of the Code of 1882.

Re-opening of case.—It is settled practice that where a special case is stated by consent, it can only be re-opened by mutual consent (j).

SUITS RELATING TO PUBLIC MATTERS.

91. [New.] (1) In the case of a public nuisance the Advocate-General, or two or more persons having obtained the consent in writing of the Advocate-General, may institute a suit, though no special damage has been caused, for a declaration and injunction or for such other relief as may be appropriate to the circumstances of the case.

Public nuisances.

(2) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to limit or otherwise affect any right of suit which may exist independently of its provisions.

This section is new. It creates a right of action where there was none before.

Remedies for a public nuisance.—Nuisances are of two kinds—(1) public and (2) private.

A public nuisance is an act or illegal omission which causes any common injury, danger or annoyance to the public or to the people in general who dwell or occupy property in the vicinity, or which must necessarily cause injury, obstruction, danger or annoyance to persons who may have occasion to use any public right [Indian Penal Code, s. 268].

Where a person commits a public nuisance—

- (a) he is liable to criminal prosecution under the Indian Penal Code ;
- (b) he may be proceeded against under this section ;
- (c) he is liable to damages in a suit at the instance of a private individual who suffers special damage by reason of the nuisance, that is, damage beyond what is suffered by him in common with all other persons affected by the nuisance (k).

These remedies, it is conceived, are concurrent. The institution of a criminal prosecution does not bar a sui under this section (l), nor does the institution of a suit under this section bar a criminal prosecution, though cases can be conceived where the Advocate-General may, in the exercise of his discretion, refuse his consent under this section where a criminal prosecution is pending in respect of the same act or omission.

Illustrations.—A keeps his horses and waggons standing for an unreasonable time in the highway.

(a) This is a public nuisance for which a criminal prosecution may be instituted against A.

(b) Further, a suit may be instituted against A under the present section by the Advocate-General, or by two or more persons with the consent in writing of the Advocate-General, though no special damage has been caused, for an order requiring A to abate the nuisance, and for an injunction restraining him from continuing the nuisance. If the nuisance is repeated or continued, notwithstanding the injunction, he is liable for contempt where the decree granting the injunction is passed by a High Court (m), or he may be proceeded against under O. 21, r. 32, below, or he may be punished with imprisonment or fine or both under s. 291 of the Penal Code.

(c) If the horses and waggons are kept standing opposite a man's house, so that the access of customers is obstructed, the house is darkened, and the people in it are annoyed by bad smells, a suit may be brought against A by the occupiers for damages, the damage so caused being sufficiently special to entitle them to maintain the action (n). The mere fact that a suit has been instituted under this section against A by the Advocate-General at the relation of the occupiers, or by the occupiers themselves as plaintiffs with the consent of the Advocate-General, will not preclude the occupiers from maintaining a private action against A for the special damage caused to them. Quære whether they can claim damages for the special damage in a suit brought under this section? It is conceived they cannot. It is submitted that the words "such other relief as may be appropriate" do not include such damages. In England, however, persons who have suffered special damage from a public nuisance may join the Attorney-General as a co-plaintiff in a suit brought by the Attorney-General at their relation, and the Attorney-General may claim an injunction, and the persons specially damaged by the nuisance may claim damages (o). The present section does not warrant such a procedure in India. The suit contemplated by this section is a suit of a

- S. 91. public nature, exclusively brought to vindicate a public right. The section finds its place in the Part headed "Special Proceedings" under the division "Suits relating to public matters," and this affords a sufficient indication of the object of the section.

Nature of proceedings under this section.—Proceedings for a public nuisance in England were formerly commenced by an Information filed by the Attorney-General in the High Court of Chancery. They are now instituted by action in the High Court of Justice [see R. S. C., O. 1, r. 1]. The action may be brought like the Information—

- (1) by the Attorney-General acting ex officio, or
- (2) by the Attorney-General at the relation of a private individual.

Under the present section, a suit for a public nuisance may be instituted—

- (1) by the Advocate-General acting ex officio, or
- (2) by the Advocate-General at the instance of relators, or
- (3) by two or more persons having obtained the consent in writing of the Advocate-General.

Difference between suit by Advocate-General acting ex officio and suit by him at the relation of private individuals.—Except for the purposes of costs, there is no difference between an ex officio suit and a suit at the relation of private individuals. In both cases the Sovereign, as parens patriae, sues by the Advocate-General (p). "When the Attorney-General proceeds at the relation of a private person or a corporation he takes the proceeding as representing the Crown, and the Crown through the Attorney-General is really a party to the litigation. It is quite true that when the proceeding is taken at the relation of a subject, the practice is to insert his name in the proceedings as the relator, and to make him responsible for the costs but I do not think that this practice in any sense makes the relator a party to the proceedings, although he is responsible for the costs, any more than (to take a converse case) an infant, who brings an action, is responsible for the costs of it. If I am right, it would seem that the practice of making the relator directly responsible for the costs of the action had its origin not in the protection of the defendant, but of the Crown" (q). "When once the matter is in the hands of the Attorney-General it becomes substantially a public proceeding, in which the Attorney-General, if there be no relator, becomes as prosecutor responsible for the costs, while if a relator is introduced, the responsibility for costs is upon the latter" (r).

Relator's interest in the suit.—"A relator need not have a personal interest in the matter except as one of the public; he need not, in fact, be himself damaged at all" (s).

Interest of persons suing with consent of Advocate-General.—Persons suing for a public nuisance with the consent of the Advocate-General under the section need not have any personal interest in the matter of the suit, except as members of the public. They are entitled to sue under this section, "though," to use the words of the section, "no special damage has been caused [to them]." In the other words, they need not have a cause of action in themselves.

Injunction.—The following are some of the leading principles by which the Courts are guided in granting injunctions:—

1. The injury complained of must be either irreparable or continuous (t). The remedy by way of injunction is therefore not appropriate for damage which is in its nature temporary and intermittent (u), or is accidental and occasional (v), or for an interference with legal rights which is trifling in amount and effect (w).
2. "Apprehension of future mischief from something in itself lawful and capable of being done without creating a nuisance is no ground for an injunction" (x). "There must, if no actual damage is proved, be proof of imminent danger, and there must also be proof that the apprehended damage will, if it comes, be very substantial" (y).
3. Though no substantial damage is proved, the Court may grant an injunction if the defendants claim the right to continue doing that which the Court has held they are not entitled to do (z).
4. Where an illegal act is committed which in its nature tends to the injury of the public, an injunction will be granted to restrain the act without proof of actual injury to the public (a).
5. Where the plaintiff has proved his right to an injunction against a nuisance, it is no part of the duty of the Court to enquire in what way the defendant can best remove it; the plaintiff is entitled to an injunction at once, and it is the duty of the defendant to find his own way out of the difficulty whatever inconvenience or expense it may put him to. But where the difficulty of removing the nuisance is considerable, the Court may suspend the operation of the injunction for a time (b).
6. No length of time can legalize a public nuisance. Though twelve years' user may bind the right of an individual, yet the public have a right to demand the suppression of a nuisance apart from the length of time for which it may have continued (c).
7. A public nuisance is not excused on the ground that it causes some convenience or advantage [Indian Penal Code, s. 268].

"Declaration."—A suit may be instituted under this section by two or more Mahomedans for a declaration that they are entitled to carry tabuts in procession along a public road for immersion in the sea, against persons who obstruct them in doing so, and for an injunction restraining them from interfering in the exercise of their right (d).

"Other relief."—The removal of a public nuisance may be directed by the Court under this part of the section.

Sub-section (a).—The Code of Criminal Procedure contains provisions for the removal of public nuisance by summary proceedings before a Magistrate (e). It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that where special damage is caused to a private individual by a public nuisance, he has a right of suit against the person causing the nuisance for a removal of the nuisance, and a Civil Court may pass a decree for removing the nuisance, notwithstanding that an order for the like purpose might be made by a Magistrate (f). This right is saved by sub-section (2).

Instances of public nuisance—"Public or common nuisance affect the King's subjects at large or some considerable portion of them, such as the inhabitants of a town; and the person therein offending is liable to criminal prosecution. A private nuisance affects only one person out of a determinate number of persons, and is the ground of civil proceedings only" (g). Building over any part of a public street is a public nuisance, for such act must necessarily cause obstruction to persons who may have occasion to use their public right over the part encroached upon. The public is entitled to the full width of the public street, however wide it may be, and whoever appropriates any part of the street by building over it infringes the right of the public quoad the part built over (h). An obstruction is not the less a nuisance, because it is on a part of the street not commonly used, or otherwise leaves room enough for the ordinary amount of traffic (i). On the other hand, it has been held by the High Court of Calcutta, as regards tidal navigable rivers, that it is not any encroachment, however slight, that would constitute a public nuisance. "It seems to us rather," the Court said, "that there must be some evidence that such encroachment causes one of the results specified in section 268" [of the Indian Penal Code] (j).

Acts which merely offend the sentiments of a class do not amount to a public nuisance. In India it must often happen that acts are done by the followers of a creed which must be offensive to the sentiments of those who follow other creeds. Upon this principle it has been held that the placing of a Mahomedan symbol in the neighbourhood of a Hindu temple is not a public nuisance, though likely to cause annoyance to Hindus (k). Similarly, it is not a public nuisance to expose on the verandah of a house meat cut up for a dinner, though it may annoy the feelings of Jains frequenting a temple close by the house (l). But wilfully slaughtering cattle in a public street so that the groans and blood of the animals could be heard and seen by the passers-by is a public nuisance, for it must necessarily cause annoyance to every one of the passers-by Hindu, European Mahomedan or other, who was not utterly devoid, not merely of refinement, but also of all proper feelings (m).

Advocate-General, or two or more persons having an interest in the trust and having obtained the consent in writing of the Advocate-General, may institute a suit, whether contentious or not, in the principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction or in any other Court empowered in that behalf by the Local Government within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the whole or any part of the subject-matter of the trust is situate to obtain a decree—

- (a) removing any trustee ;
- (b) appointing a new trustee ;
- (c) vesting any property in a trustee ;
- (d) directing accounts and inquiries ;
- (e) declaring what proportion of the trust-property or of the interest therein shall be allocated to any particular object of the trust ;
- (f) authorizing the whole or any part of the trust-property to be let, sold, mortgaged or exchanged ;
- (g) settling a scheme ; or
- (h) granting such further or other relief as the nature of the case may require.

(2) Save as provided by the Religious Endowments Act 1863, no suit claiming any of the reliefs specified in sub-section (1) shall be instituted in respect of any such trust as is therein referred to except in conformity with the provisions of that sub-section.

Changes introduced by the section.—This section corresponds with s. 539 of the Code of 1882 except in the following particulars :

1. The words, “public purposes of a charitable or religious nature,” have been substituted for the words, “public, charitable or religious purposes,” to remove the misconception that “public” is merely co-ordinate with “charitable” or “religious.”
2. The words, “whether contentious or not,” have been added to give effect to a Calcutta decision. See notes “Whether contentious or not.”
3. The words “in the principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction” have been substituted for the words “in the High Court or the District Court.”
4. The words “or any other Court empowered in that behalf by the Local Government” have been added in order to invest Courts subordinate to District Courts with power to try cases under this section.

S. 92.

5. Clause (a) is new. It is intended to supersede a Madras decision, and give effect to the Calcutta, Bombay and Allahabad decisions noted below in the commentary under the head "Clause (a): removing any trustee."
6. Clause (d) is also new. It gives legislative recognition to a Bombay decision noted below in the commentary under the head "Clause (d); directing accounts and inquiries."
7. Sub-section (2) is new. It is intended to give effect to the view of the section taken by the Bombay High Court that this section is mandatory, and to supersede the decision to the contrary of the other High Courts. See notes under the head "Sub-section (2): this section is mandatory."

Object of the section.—"The real object of the special provisions of this section seems to us to be clear. Persons interested in any trust were, if they could all join, always competent to maintain a suit against any trustee for his removal for breach of trust; but where the joining of all of them was inconvenient or impracticable, it was considered desirable that some of them might sue without joining the others, provided they obtained the consent of the Advocate-General or of the Collector of the District: and this condition was imposed to prevent an indefinite number of reckless and harassing suits being brought against trustees by different persons interested in the trust" (n).

Who may sue under this section.—A suit under this section may be brought—

- (1) by the Advocate-General, and outside the Presidency towns, by the Collector or such officer as the Local Government may appoint in that behalf [see s. 93], or
- (2) by two or more persons having an interest in the trust and having obtained the consent in writing of the Advocate-General. The "consent in writing" must be a specific permission given to two or more persons by name; a permission given to one applicant by name "and another" is not a sufficient compliance with the terms of this section (o). A suit under this section brought by only one plaintiff with the consent of the Advocate-General is bad at its institution, and the plaint cannot be amended by the addition of a second plaintiff, though the Advocate-General may consent to the amendment. The section nowhere speaks of the consent of the Advocate-General to an amendment of the plaint (p).

"Interest in the trust."—When a suit under this section is not instituted by the Advocate-General, it must be brought by at least two persons, and such persons must have an interest in the trust. The interest in the trust need not be direct. Thus persons entitled to worship in a temple have such an interest in the trust as to enable them to institute a suit with the consent of the Advocate-General against the trustees of the temple (q). Similarly persons residing in a village, whose business it was to conduct pilgrims to a shrine and perform the worship of the idol on their behalf, were held to have a sufficient interest to entitle them to sue under this section (r). But the interest must be an existing one, and not a mere contingency the mere possibility of succession to the managership of trust properties in respect of which the suit is brought is not sufficient to give a right to sue (s). Further, the interest must be a present and substantial interest and not sentimental or remote; thus where a suit was brought under this section by a Hindu residing in Madras and another residing in Tellicherry in respect of a temple situated in Tellicherry, and it appeared that the former had gone to worship in the temple on one or two occasions in the past and might go there to worship in the future if business took him to Tellicherry, it was held that though he had a right as a Hindu to worship in the temple, he had not such an interest in the trust as to entitle him to sue under this section (t).

Consent of the Advocate-General.—The “consent in writing” required by this section is a condition precedent to the institution of the suit to which such consent relates. If, therefore, no valid consent is given before the institution of the suit, the suit must be dismissed, or the plaintiff may be allowed to withdraw the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit. The defect cannot be rectified after the institution of the suit (u). And where such consent is given, the suit must be confined to the matters included in the consent; it is not competent to the Court to grant reliefs other than those included in the terms of the consent (v). Further, where a suit is brought under this section, no amendment should be permitted without the sanction of the Advocate-General. Where a plaintiff in a suit brought under this section is amended without the consent of the Advocate-General, e.g., where a new party is added as a defendant and possession of the trust property is claimed from him, the Court must dismiss the suit (w). It is an invariable practice in the Bombay Presidency for the Advocate-General to endorse his consent upon the plaint (x).

The Advocate-General in giving his consent has to exercise his judgment in the matter, and see not only whether the persons suing are persons who have an interest in the trust, but also whether the trust is a public trust of the character defined in the section, and whether there are prima facie grounds for thinking that there has been a breach of trust (y). Where the sanction given by the Advocate-General is so worded as to indicate that the Advocate-General has not exercised his judgment, it is not a defect fatal to the suit but a mere irregularity falling within the scope of s. 99; hence the decree in the suit will not be interfered with in appeal, unless the irregularity is shown to have affected the decision of the suit on the merits (z).

“Public purposes”.—A mutt that is otherwise private does not become public simply because some persons are fed when gurupuja is performed and a water pandal is maintained in the mutt during the hot season (a). But where a number of the public had always used a temple and there was attached to it a dharmashala, and the surplus funds not required for the service of the temple were to be applied to feeding travellers and maintaining a sadavart, it was held that the intention of the founder was to devote the property to public purposes of a religious and charitable nature (b). A trust is none the less a trust for a public purpose within the meaning of this section even if the main object of the trust is the support of fakirs of a particular sect and the propagation of the tenets of that sect (c).

“Where the direction of the Court is deemed necessary for the administration of any such trust.”—The directions which are referred to in this section are such as are necessary for the carrying out of the trust and as are given to a trustee, either the existing trustee, where there is one, or the new trustee, where one is to be appointed. The nature of the reliefs (specified in the section) shows what is meant by the words ‘deemed necessary for the administration of any such trust’ (d). The view thus expressed derives support from the language of sub-sec. (2) which implies that it is only a suit claiming one or more of the reliefs specified in sub-sec. (1) that requires to be instituted in conformity with the provisions of sub-sec. (1).

“Whether contentious or not.”—These words are new. They are intended to give effect to a decision of the Calcutta High Court under s. 539 of the Code of 1882 that that section was not confined to non-contentious proceedings and that it applied to contentious suits also (e), and the opinion to the same effect of Best and Weir, JJ., in an earlier Madras case (f).

Clause (a): removing any trustee.—This clause is new. In the absence of this clause in the correspondings. 539 of the Code of 1882, it was held by the High Courts of Calcutta, Bombay and Allahabad (g), following an earlier decision of the Madras High Court (h), that a suit for the removal of a trustee of a public trust and for the appointment of a new trustee came under that section, though the removal of a trustee was not one of the reliefs specified in that section. Such a relief, it was said, was either covered by the words “such further or other relief as the nature of the case may require,” or it was implied in the clause providing for the appointment of new trustees. On the other hand, it was held by the Madras High Court in a later case that such a suit did not come under that section (i). Clause (a) of the present section gives effect to the Calcutta, Bombay and Allahabad decisions. A suit for the removal of a trustee must therefore be instituted in conformity with the provisions of this section. A suit by the trustees of a temple for a declaration that the appointment by the Devasthanam Committee of the defendant as a trustee in place of a deceased trustee is invalid, is in effect a suit for the removal of the defendant from the office of trustee, and it cannot be instituted without the sanction required by this or the next section (j).

In framing a scheme of management under this section [see clause (g)], it is desirable to include a provision for the removal of trustees for breach of trust, for where such a provision is included, the removal of a defaulting trustee may be obtained by an application in execution of the decree, and the costs and trouble of a regular suit which would otherwise be probably necessary may thus be avoided (k).

In connection with the removal of a trustee, it may be noted that there is no hard and fast rule that because a manager of a shrine has arrogated to himself the position of owner he should be removed from the office of trustee. Each case must be decided with reference to its circumstances (l). Thus it has been held that mere lax and improvident management on the part of the manager of a shrine, fostered by the belief that he was entitled to manage the trust property free from control and very much as though he was its absolute owner, is no ground for removing him from the trust (m).

"Trustee."—A person appointed trustee by the Court, though his appointment may be impeached as being illegal, is a trustee within the meaning of clause (a), and not a trespasser (n). And so also is a trustee de son tort, that is, a person who is not appointed a trustee, but who takes charge of the trust property and purports to manage it as trust property (o).

Clause (b): appointing new trustee.—A suit for the appointment of new trustees of a temple on the ground that the defendants are not lawful trustees and that the trusteeships are therefore vacant, is a suit under clause (b) of this section (p).

Clause (c): vesting any property in a trustee.—Under this section, the Court in sanctioning a scheme may provide for the appointment of additional or new trustees though such appointment may not be in conformity with the original constitution of the trust or with the rules in force in respect to it (q).

Clause (d): directing accounts and inquiries.—This clause is new. Under the corresponding s. 539 of the Code of 1882 it was held by the High Court of Bombay, that a suit to remove the trustees of a public charity, and to compel them to account, and to make good the losses sustained by the charity by reason of default on the part of the trustees, and for the appointment of new trustees, was a suit within that section, though a relief for accounts was not one of the reliefs specifically mentioned in that section. Such a relief, it was said, was covered by the words "further or other relief" (r). The present clause gives legislative recognition to the above decision.

Clause (g): settling a scheme.—This section vests a very wide discretion in the Court as regards directions to be given for the administration of public trusts. In giving effect to the provisions of the section and in appointing new trustees and settling a scheme the Court is entitled to take into consideration not merely the wishes of the founder, so far as they can be ascertained, but also the past history of the institution, and the way in which the management is carried on heretofore, in conjunction with other existing conditions that may have grown up since its foundation (s).

A scheme framed by the Court may be varied, if good cause is shown (t). But where a scheme is once settled, it precludes a suit to establish a private right to manage the property [e.g., hereditary trusteeship] which, if established, would interfere with the scheme settled by Court (u).

The Court has power under this section to frame a scheme in respect of a temple though it be under the control of a Temple Committee constituted under the Religious Endowments Act 20 of 1863 (v).

Clause (h) : further or other relief.—"The words 'granting such further or other relief as the nature of the case may require,' must be read with what has preceded as referring to further relief to which the party may be entitled which arises out of the existence of the trust in respect of which the suit has been brought." Therefore, where the only relief claimed in a suit is for a declaration that certain property is wakf property, the suit does not come within the purview of this section. Such a relief does not come within the words "further or other relief" (w). "The general clause dealing with 'further or other relief' ought to be read with the [seven] preceding specific clauses, and the nature of the reliefs which may be properly granted under it is of the same character as the reliefs which may be granted under the preceding clauses. The [seven] specific clauses are not merely illustrative, but furnish an indication of the nature of the relief which may be granted in a suit under this section. Thus it has been held that the mere fact that the plaintiffs sue for a declaration that they are the trustee of a temple and of the properties attached thereto, does not bring the suit within this section; such a relief does not come within the words "further or other relief" (x). There is a conflict of opinion as to whether a prayer that a deed of trust may be construed by the Court and the true scope and object of the trust fund may be determined by the Court comes within the words "further or other relief" (y). See notes below "Suits merely for a declaration of trust."

When the section applies.—This section does not apply, unless—

- (1) there is an express or constructive trust created for public purposes of a charitable or religious nature;
- (2) there is a breach alleged of such trust, or the direction of the Court is deemed necessary for the administration of such trust [see notes above, "Where the direction of the Court, etc."]; and
- (3) the relief claimed is one or other of the reliefs mentioned in the section (z) [see notes above, "Clause (h) : further or other relief"].

If all the three conditions are satisfied, the suit must be instituted in conformity with the provisions of this section, that is to say, it must either be instituted by the Advocate-General or by two or more persons interested in the trust with the consent of the Advocate-General [see sub-section (2) and notes thereto]. If the suit is not brought in conformity with the provisions of this section, it should be dismissed [see notes above "Consent of the Advocate-General"]. But if any one of these three conditions is absent, the suit is outside the scope of the present section, and it is to be instituted in the ordinary manner. The mere fact that a suit relates to a public charitable or religious trust, or that it relates to property held on such trust, is not sufficient to bring it within the scope of this section [see notes below "Suits to enforce private rights," and "Suits for possession of trust property against trespassers and against alienees from trustees"]. At the same time it is to be remembered that a suit which is clearly within the scope of this section cannot be treated as one outside its scope, because besides the reliefs permissible by this section reliefs not allowed by the section are claimed in the suit [see notes below, "Suits for removal of trustee, etc."].

Suits to enforce private rights.—Suits brought not to establish a public right in respect of a public trust, but to remedy a particular infringement of an individual right, are not within this section (a). Such suits are to be instituted in the ordinary manner and not in conformity with the provisions of this section. The following are instances of suits of this character :— S. 92.

- (1) a suit by a person claiming to be a co-trustee of a certain dargah and entitled as such to a share with the defendant trustee in the management and profits thereof : Miya Vali Ulla v. Sayad Bava (1898) 22 Bom. 496 ;
- (2) a suit by the trustees of a fire temple for the vindication of the right of management which was vested in and actually being exercised by them at the date of the obstruction by the defendants : Navroji v. Dastur Kharshedji (1904) 28 Bom. 20, 54 ;
- (3) a suit between two individuals each claiming certain rights as mutawali over wakf property : Manijan v. Khadem Hossein (1905) 32 Cal. 273 ;
- (4) a suit between two persons as to which of them is the lawful trustee of a charity : Budree Das v. Chooni Lal (1906) 33 Cal. 789, 808 ; Muhammad v. Ahmed (1913) 35 All. 459 ; Niamat Ali v. Ali Rezu (1914) 37 All. 86 ; Ayahinessa v. Kulfu (1914) 41 Cal. 749 ; Giyana v. Kandusami (1887) 10 Mad. 375 ;
- (5) It has been held by the High Court of Allahabad that the right of a Mahomedan to use a mosque is not a public but a private right. It is like the right to use a private road ; any one who has the right may maintain a suit in respect of it [Jawahra v. Hussain (1885) 7 All. 178, at pp. 182, 183]. To such a suit the provisions of this section do not apply. Thus it has been held that any Mahomedan entitled to frequent a mosque may, if property belonging to the mosque has been sold by the person managing the same for the time being for his private debts, maintain a suit for a declaration that the property is wakf property, and to set aside the sale and evict the purchaser [Zafaryag Ali v. Bakhtawar Singh (1883) 5 All. 497]. Similarly, if land attached to a mosque is encroached upon, any Mahomedan entitled to use the mosque may sue to eject the trespasser. And if the mosque be in a dilapidated condition, and a Mahomedan frequenting the mosque, or one looking after it, is desirous of repairing it, but is obstructed by a third person, he may maintain a suit to establish his right to repair the mosque [Jawahra v. Akbar Husain (1885) 7 All. 178]. The contrary, however, has been held by the High Court of Calcutta in Jan Ali v. Ram Nath (1882) 8 Cal. 32, and Lutifunnissa Bibi v. Navirun Bibi, (1885) 11 Cal. 33. According to these decisions, the right sought to be established in such suits as the above is not a private but a public right, and it can only be enforced by a suit brought in conformity with the provisions of this section. But in a later Calcutta case [Mohiuddin v. Sayiduddin (1893) 20 Cal. 810], it was pointed out that the reasoning of the Allahabad cases, showing that the right of worship of each worshipper in a Mahomedan mosque or religious endowment was an independent right wholly irrespective of the rights of the other worshippers, was correct.

Suits for possession of trust property against trespassers and against allenees from trustees.—Suits against strangers to the trust, that is, against trespassers and against transferees of trust property from trustees for recovery of possession of trust property from them, are not within this section. Such suits are to be instituted

S. 92. in the ordinary manner, and not in conformity with the provisions of this section (b). The following are instances of suits of this character :—

- (1) a suit by the disciples of a mutt for a declaration that the defendant was not the duly appointed successor to the late head of the mutt, and that he was in possession under a false claim of title, and for ejecting the defendant from the mutt properties: Strinivasa v. Strinivasa (1893) 16 Mad. 31. [Here the claim against the defendant is as against a trespasser];
- (2) a suit for a declaration that a certain piece of land of which it was alleged the defendants had taken wrongful possession was a public graveyard, and for the ejectment of the defendants from the land: Muhammad v. Kallu (1899) 21 All. 187; Ghazaffar v. Yawar Husain (1906) 28 All. 112, 117, 120, 121; Dasondhay v. Muhammad (1911) 33 All. 660. [Here also the claim against the defendant is as against trespassers]. Compare Latifunnissa Bibi v. Nazirun Bibi (1885) 11 Cal. 33, where the suit was for a declaration that certain property was wakf property and for recovery of possession thereof from a third party, and where the Court held that the suit ought to have been instituted in conformity with the provisions of this section. This decision would appear to be no longer law: see Mohiuddin v. Sayiduddin (1893) 20 Cal. 810, p. 816;
- (3) a suit to set aside an alienation of trust property alleged to have been wrongfully made by the trustees, and for the recovery of such property from the hands of the alienee: Kazi Hassan v. Sagun (1900) 24 Bom. 170; Lakshmandas v. Ganpatrav (1884) 8 Bom. 365; Vishvanath v. Rambhat (1891) 15 Bom. 148; Ghelabhai v. Uderam (1911) 36 Bom. 29. [Here the defendants are transferees from trustees];
- (4) a suit by the trustees of a temple against the manager and treasurer of the temple for accounts and for a decree for what may be found due on taking such accounts: Malhar v. Narasinha (1912) 37 Bom. 95.
- (5) a suit by two of the worshippers of a temple with the leave of Court under O. 1, r. 8, against the committee of management (not being trustees) and archakas of the temple for a declaration that a transfer made by the committee to the archakas of the right to collect and receive offerings made by the pilgrims is invalid: Venkataramana v. Kasturiranga (1917) 40 Mad. 212 [F. B.].

See notes above, "Trustee."

Suits for removal of trustee on ground of unlawful alienation of trust property and against alienee from such trustee.—A common type of suits under this section is a suit against the trustee of a charity for his removal on the ground of an unlawful alienation made by him of trust property, claiming it as his private property. It is clear that such suit is within this section for the relief claimed is one under cl. (a) of this section, and the ground on which relief is claimed is breach of trust in alienating the property. It is also clear that the Court cannot remove the trustee, unless it finds that the property is trust property and that it has been wrongfully alienated by the trustee. The question we have to consider is, whether the Court has power, in the absence of the alienee, to declare that the property is trust property and that the alienation is unlawful. It has been held by the High Court of Madras, that an alienee is not a proper party to a suit under this section, and that if he is joined as a party by the plaintiff, the suit as against him should be dismissed. But this, it has been held, does not preclude the Court from determining in a suit against the trustee alone whether the property is trust property, and declaring, if it is so found, that it is trust property. But the transferee, not being a party to the suit, is not bound by the declaration, and if a suit is subsequently brought against him for recovery of possession of the property from him, it is open to him to contend that the property is not trust property (c). On the other hand, it has been held by the High Court of Allahabad, that the alienee, though not a necessary party to the suit (d), is a proper party (e), and that if he is joined as a party, and the Court declares that the property is trust property, he will be bound by the declaration in a subsequent suit for possession against him (f). The High Court of Bombay has gone further and held, that the transferee is not only a proper but a necessary party, and that no such declaration can be made in his absence (g). As regards the High Court of Calcutta there is a conflict of decisions, it being held in some cases that he is not a proper party to the suit (h), while in others that he is (i). But all the High Courts are agreed that in a suit such as the above a decree cannot be passed against the alienee directing him to deliver possession of the property to the plaintiffs, though he be a party to the suit, as such a relief is neither specifically mentioned in the section nor is it implied in cl. (h), and that the remedy of the newly appointed trustee is to institute a separate suit for possession against him (j). In a recent Calcutta case (k), however, Greaves, J., went to the extreme length of holding that the alienee may be joined as a party to the suit having regard to the provisions of O. 1, r. 3, and, further, that if the transfer to him is invalid, he may be declared to be a trustee of the trust property and be directed to convey the trust property to the newly appointed trustees. It is true that where a suit is brought under this section for removing a trustee for wrongfully transferring trust property, the Court has to find whether the property is trust property and whether the transfer is valid, but it is difficult to see how, if no suit can be brought under this section for any reliefs except those mentioned therein, the Court can incorporate in a decree passed under this section a declaration that the property is trust property and that the transfer is invalid. If such a declaration cannot be legally incorporated in the decree, it is difficult to see how it can operate as res judicata against the alienee in a subsequent suit against him for possession. It is also difficult to see how, if a suit cannot be instituted under this section for any relief against the alienee, the Court can pass a decree directing the alienee to convey the trust property to the newly appointed trustee; such a direction is quite different in its scope from one vesting the trust property in the trustees as contemplated by cl. (c) of sub-sec. (1). The correct view seems to be that the Court may add the alienee as a party to the suit under the latter part of sub r. (2) of O. 1, r. 10, to enable the Court to determine the question of the validity of the transfer, but that when it comes to the point of passing a decree in the suit, the decree should not contain any reliefs except those expressly mentioned in the section. This course may involve a multiplicity of suits, but that is a matter for the Legislature, and not for the Courts.

S. 92.

Suits merely for a declaration of trust.—This section presupposes the existence of a trust for the administration of which it is necessary to make provision. Hence it does not apply to a suit brought solely for the purpose of having a declaration of the Court that certain property is wakf, the fact of endowment being denied on the other side (l). Nor does this section apply to a suit brought merely for a declaration that the plaintiffs are the trustees of an endowment (m). See notes above "Clause (h)."

Courts competent to try suits under this section.—A suit under this section must be instituted either in the principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction or in any other Court empowered in that behalf by the Local Government. But this does not empower the Local Government to direct the transfer of a particular suit pending in a District Court to a particular Judge. The authority must be a general one to receive suits under this section (n).

The expression "principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction" in this section does not include the Court of an Additional District Judge appointed under s. 8 of the Civil Courts Act XII of 1887. An Additional District Judge therefore has no jurisdiction to try suits under this section. A District Judge therefore has no power under s. 24 of the Code to transfer such a suit for trial to an Additional District Judge (o).

Where a suit is brought against an executor in the Court of a Subordinate Judge for the administration of the testator's estate, the mere fact that the will contains directions for applying portions of the estate to charitable purposes does not bring the suit within this section. The Subordinate Judge has jurisdiction to entertain such a suit, but if any questions relating to charitable bequests arise before him and a scheme has to be framed under this section, he should hold the amount appropriated for charities in the possession of a Receiver until the Advocate General or the Collector obtains the directions of the District Court (p).

Sub-section (2): this section is mandatory.—The Legislature has by enacting this section constituted a special tribunal for the trial of a class of suits which it has removed from the cognizance of the ordinary Courts. These suits are suits respecting any "alleged breach of any express or constructive trust created for public purposes of a charitable or religious nature, or where the direction of the Court is deemed necessary for the administration of any such trust." This class of suits can only be instituted in the special Courts mentioned in this section, and they can only be brought either by the Advocate General, or by two or more persons having an interest in the trust and having obtained the consent in writing of the Advocate General. It has been so enacted by sub-s. (2) of the present section. Under the corresponding section 539 of the Codes of 1877 and 1882 it was doubtful whether every suit of the character described above was to be instituted in the manner aforesaid. Sub-s. (2) makes it clear that it ought to be so instituted. The doubt referred to above arose in the following way. The Code of 1859 did not contain any special provisions for the institution of suits relating to public charities. Such provisions were introduced for the first time by s. 539 of the Code of 1877. They were reproduced in s. 539 of the Code of 1882, and they now find a place in sub-s. (1) of the present section. But neither the Code of 1877 nor the Code of 1882 contained any provision such as is contained in sub-s. (2). Before the enactment of the Code of 1877 suits relating to public charitable or religious trusts could be instituted in the ordinary Courts by certain persons as plaintiffs. Thus— S. 92,

- (1) persons appointed supervisors over trustees could sue in any ordinary Court competent to hear the suit for the removal of the trustees for malversation and to obtain the appointment in their place of other fit and proper persons (q) : similarly,
- (2) one or more of the members of a defined class of the general public [such as the Satchasi community of Chatra] could sue on behalf of the whole class, with the leave of the Court under s. 30, in any ordinary Court competent to hear the suit, to obtain a declaration of their right to take part in the management of the worship of a goddess (r).

It will at once be seen that the above suits fall within the purview of the present section. They also came within the terms of s. 539 of the earlier Codes. In the absence of any provision in s. 539 similar to that contained in sub-s. (2), the question arose whether these suits were to be instituted in the special Courts mentioned in s. 539 and by the Advocate-General as plaintiff, or whether they could be instituted as before in ordinary Courts and by persons who could have sued if s. 539 had not been enacted. It was held by the High Court of Bombay that s. 539 was mandatory, in other words, that every suit of the character mentioned in that section must be brought in accordance with its provisions, and not otherwise. That is to say, the suits referred to above could no longer be brought by the supervisors as plaintiffs in the one case and by the members of the community in the other, but they must be instituted either by the Advocate-General or by two or more persons interested in the trust after obtaining the sanction of the Advocate-General; and further, that these suits could only be brought in the special Courts indicated in that section, namely, the High Court or the District Court, as the case might be (s). On the other hand, it was held by the other High Courts that section 539 was permissive, and that it did not take away the right of suit which existed prior to and independently of it. According to these Courts suits of the character mentioned above could, notwithstanding the enactment of section 539, be brought as before by the abovenamed parties as plaintiffs in any Court competent to entertain those suits, and it was not obligatory to institute them in accordance with the provisions of s. 539 (t). Sub-section (2) gives effect to the Bombay decisions, and supersedes the decisions of the other High Courts. It provides in distinct terms that no suit claiming any of the reliefs specified in sub-section (1) shall be instituted except in conformity with the provisions of that sub-section. At the same time it declares that the special provisions of the Religious Endowments Act 20 of 1863 for the institution of suits governed by that Act are not affected by the provisions of this section. We proceed to consider the provisions of that Act and their bearing on the present section.

“Save as provided by the Religious Endowments Act, 1863.”—After the downfall of the Mogul Empire in India, it was discovered that the income of many endowments granted in land “by the presiding Governments of this country and by individuals for the support of mosques, temples, colleges and for other pious and beneficial purposes” was misappropriated by persons managing the endowments. It

S. 92. was therefore deemed expedient that the British Government should take charge of these endowments, and for that purpose and the purpose also of providing for the maintenance of bridges, serais, uttaras and other buildings erected for the use of the public, Regulation 19 of 1810 was passed, whereby the general superintendence of all religious and charitable endowments referred to above was vested in the Board of Revenue. That Regulation applied to endowments in Bengal. A similar Regulation, being Regulation 7 of 1817, was subsequently passed to provide for like endowments in the Madras Presidency (u). Several years after the passing of these Regulations, it was thought that the connection of a Christian Government with the religious establishments of Hindus and Mahomedans was inexpedient, and a report was therefore called for by the Government of India in the year 1841 from the Collectors of all Districts with a view to divest themselves of the management of religious endowments, and transfer the management to properly qualified individuals. As a result Act 20 of 1863 was passed, whereby such of the provisions of the abovementioned Regulations as related to religious endowments were repealed, and provision was made for the transfer of all such endowments, in certain cases to trustees, and in others to committees (ss. 3-8). But the duty of superintending over charitable endowments imposed on the Board of Revenue by the old Regulations is still retained, and, in fact, express care is taken in the Act to declare that this duty over charitable endowments is not intended to be affected or interfered with (ss. 21, 23).

The Religious Endowments Act applies only to public religious endowments, as did the old Regulations. It does not apply to private religious endowments. S. 14 of the Act provides that any person interested in any mosque, temple, or religious establishment may sue the trustees or members of a committee for any misfeasance, breach of trust, or neglect of duty committed by them in respect of the trust vested in them, and the Court may in such suit direct the specific performance of any act by them, and may decree damages and costs against them, and may also direct the removal of any of the trustees or any member of a committee. A suit which does not charge the trustees or member of a committee with misfeasance, breach of trust, or neglect of duty, does not fall under that section (v). S. 18 provides that no suit under the Act shall be instituted without the leave of the Court.

The Act is in force in all Presidencies except the Presidency of Bombay where it is in force in North Canara only. But it does not apply to Presidency towns; so that a suit instituted in a Chartered High Court in the exercise of its ordinary original jurisdiction inherited from the Supreme Court charging neglect of duty on the part of a temple trustee does not require the leave of the Court under s. 18 of the Act (w).

After the passing of the Regulations above referred to, the Board of Revenue took over the management of some endowments, but in the large majority of cases they did not take charge of endowments created by private individuals. The operation of the Act, however, is not confined to such endowments as had actually been taken under the management of the Board of Revenue under the old Regulations. The Act applies, to every public religious endowment to which the provisions of the old Regulations applied, that is to say, to every public religious endowment created "by the preceding Governments of this country and by individuals," whether the management of the endowment was taken over by the Board of Revenue or not (x). S. 92.

Reading s. 92 of the Code and the Religious Endowments Act together we have the following result:—

- (1) No suit in respect of charitable endowments of a public nature, claiming any of the reliefs specified in sub-section (1) of section 92, can be brought except in conformity with the provisions of that sub-section.
- (2) In the case of religious endowments of a public nature to which the Religious Endowments Act applies, a suit charging the trustee, manager, superintendent, or a member of a committee of a mosque, temple or religious establishment, with misfeasance, breach of trust or neglect of duty, may be brought under the provisions of that Act with the leave of the principal Civil Court of original civil jurisdiction in the District in which the mosque, temple, or religious establishment is situate as provided by s. 18 of the said Act, or it may be brought under the provisions of the Code with the consent of the Collector as provided by s. 92 of the Code (y).
- (3) No suit in respect of religious endowments of a public nature to which the Religious Endowments Act does not apply, claiming any of the reliefs specified in sub-section (1) of section 92, can be brought except in conformity with the provisions of that sub-section.

Operation of decree under this section.—It is not settled whether a decree in a suit under this section is binding only on the parties thereto or whether it is binding on all persons affected thereby whether they be parties to the suit or not (z).

Death of one of the plaintiffs pending suit.—It has been held by the High Court of Allahabad, that where a suit is brought by two persons under this section, and one of them dies pending the suit, the suit abates unless some other person is brought on the record in place of the deceased. Such person must be one who has an interest in the trust, and he must have obtained the consent of the Advocate-General as required by this section (a). On the other hand, it has been held by the High Court of Madras that a suit brought under this section being a representative suit, there is no question of abatement, and the Court has power under O. 1, r. 10 (2), to add other persons interested in the trust as parties not because they are the legal representatives of the deceased plaintiff, but because they had become parties to the representative suit by the very fact of its being instituted on behalf of all persons interested in the trust; from this point of view, the consent of the Advocate-General is not necessary to add any other person interested in the trust as a party (b). The Chief Court of the Punjab has followed the Madras decisions (c).

Death of defendant trustee pending suit.—Where a suit is brought under this section against a trustee not only for his removal, but for framing a scheme, and the scheme is one of the main reliefs sought, the suit does not abate on the death of the trustee, and his successor in office may be brought on the record as a party defendant (d). The suit, of course, would abate, if it was solely for removal of the trustee.

Specific Relief Act, 1877, s. 42.—Where a suit is maintainable under this section, and the plaintiff seeks any of the reliefs specified in the section, s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act does not apply. Thus if a suit is brought under this section for a declaration that the defendants are not the lawful trustees and for the appointment of new trustees, the suit will not be dismissed merely because there is no prayer for delivery of the trust property to the new trustees that may be appointed by the Court (e). [Sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act provides in effect that where a suit is brought for a declaratory decree, and the plaintiff is able to seek further relief than a mere declaration, but omits to do so, the suit should be dismissed].

Limitation Act.—The de jure managers and trustees of a public charity losing their right by limitation to oust the de facto trustees, does not confer on the latter immunity from suit on the part of the Advocate-General under this section (f).

Relators cannot appeal in their own right.—Where a suit instituted under this section by the Advocate-General at the instance of relators is dismissed, and the Advocate-General does not think fit to appeal, it is not competent to the relators to file an appeal on their own account against the decree dismissing the suit (g). The reason is that relators are not parties to the suit (h).

Cy-pres doctrine.—Though the section does not expressly empower the Court to apply the cy-pres doctrine in the settling of schemes, it would seem that the Court has the power to apply the doctrine (i).

93. [S. 539, last para.] The powers conferred by sections 91 and 92 on the Advocate-General may, outside the Presidency-towns, be, with the previous sanction of the Local Government, exercised also by the Collector or by such officer as the Local Government may appoint in this behalf.

Collector.—An Assistant Collector has no power under this section to give his consent to the institution of a suit of the kind contemplated by s. 92 [or s. 91] in the absence of the Collector. Where such a suit is instituted with the consent of the Assistant Collector, but not with the consent of the Collector, the plaint must be rejected under O. 7, r. 11 (j).

PART VI.

Supplemental Proceedings.

94. [New.] In order to prevent the ends of justice from being defeated the Court may, if it is so prescribed.—

- (a) issue a warrant to arrest the defendant and bring him before the Court to show cause why he should not give security for his appearance, and if he fails to comply with any order for security commit him to the civil prison ;
- (b) direct the defendant to furnish security to produce any property belonging to him and to place the same at the disposal of the Court or order the attachment of any property ;
- (c) grant a temporary injunction and in case of disobedience commit the person guilty thereof to the civil prison and order that his property be attached and sold ;
- (d) appoint a receiver of any property and enforce the performance of his duties by attaching and selling his property ;
- (e) make such other interlocutory orders as may appear to the Court to be just and convenient.

This section summarizes the general powers of the Court in regard to interlocutory proceedings. The details of procedure have been relegated to Schedule I.

Arrest and attachment before judgment.—See O. 38 below.

Temporary injunctions and interlocutory orders.—See O. 39 below.

Appointment of receiver.—See O. 40 below. See also notes to s. 51, “Receiver in execution proceedings.”

95. [Ss. 491, 497.] (1) Where, in any suit in which an arrest or attachment has been effected or a temporary injunction granted under the last preceding section,—

Compensation for obtaining arrest, attachment or injunction on insufficient grounds.

- (a) it appears to the Court that such arrest, attachment or injunction was applied for on insufficient grounds, or

S. 95.

(b) the suit of the plaintiff fails and it appears to the Court that there was no reasonable or probable ground for instituting the same, the defendant may apply to the Court, and the Court may, upon such application, award against the plaintiff by its order such amount, not exceeding one thousand rupees, as it deems a reasonable compensation to the defendant for the expense or injury caused to him :

Provided that a Court shall not award, under this section, an amount exceeding the limits of its pecuniary jurisdiction.

(2) An order determining any such application shall bar any suit for compensation in respect of such arrest, attachment or injunction.

Changes introduced by the section.—This section corresponds with ss. 491 and 497 of the Code of 1882 except that the words “by its order” have been substituted for the words “in its decree.” The words “by its order” indicate that the award should no longer form part of the decree, but should be embodied in a separate order. The order is now made appealable by s. 104.

Scope of the section.—This section provides for compensation to the defendant in the two following cases :—

- I. (1) Where an arrest or attachment before judgment has been effected or a temporary injunction has been granted (see Orders 38 and 39) ; and
- (2) such arrest, attachment or injunction was applied for on insufficient grounds.
- II. (1) Where an arrest or attachment before judgment has been effected or a temporary injunction has been granted ;
- (2) the plaintiff fails in the suit ; and
- (3) there was no reasonable or probable ground for instituting the suit.

In case II it is not necessary to show that the arrest, attachment or injunction was applied for on insufficient grounds. It is enough if the plaintiff fails in the suit, and there was no reasonable or probable ground for instituting the suit. The principle is that a plaintiff who has obtained an arrest, attachment or injunction by instituting a suit without any probable ground, should be punished as much as a plaintiff who has obtained the process on insufficient grounds.

This section is no bar to a regular suit.—This section provides a summary remedy for an injured defendant and enables him to seek compensation for the injury done to him by the plaintiff by instituting proceedings by an application to the Court instead of by a suit. But the remedy under this section is optional, and an injured defendant may, if he so chooses institute a regular suit against the plaintiff for compensation for wrongful arrest, attachment or injunction. This clearly appears from sub-section (2), which impliedly recognizes the right of a defendant to institute a regular suit for compensation (k). In a suit, however for compensation, the plaintiff must prove malice in fact in addition to the facts required to be proved by this section (l). But whether the proceeding is by way of suit or by an application under this section, the defendant is not entitled to any compensation unless the attachment "has been effected." Merely procuring an order for attachment before judgment however maliciously is not sufficient to entitle the defendant to compensation (m). As to the period of limitation for such a suit, see Limitation Act, 1908, sch. I, arts. 19, 29, 36 and 42, and also the undermentioned cases (n). As to suits for damages for temporary injunction improperly obtained, see the undermentioned cases (o).

"On Insufficient grounds".—These words are equivalent to "without reasonable and probable cause" (p).

An award under this section is a bar to a regular suit.—Once an application is made by a defendant under this section for compensation for wrongful arrest, attachment or injunction, and an award is made under this section, the defendant cannot institute a regular suit for compensation for the same wrong whether any compensation is awarded to him or not. In other words, the disposal of an application, under this section has the effect of res judicata so as to bar any subsequent suit in respect of the same cause of action. Note that it is the disposal of the application, and not the mere presenting of the application, that is a bar to a regular suit.

Amount of compensation.—Note that the amount of compensation under this section cannot exceed Rs. 1,000. Where a defendant claims a larger amount of compensation, he must institute a regular suit.

Right of defendant not served with summons to apply for compensation under this section.—If a defendant is arrested before judgment, he is entitled to apply for compensation under this section, though he has not been served with a summons in the suit (q).

Counter-claim for compensation in a summary suit.—If a defendant who is arrested before judgment in a summary suit brought against him on a negotiable instrument under O. 37, claims compensation for arrest under this section, he is entitled on that ground to apply for leave to defend the suit under O. 37, r. 3, and if a prima facie case is made out, leave to defend should be given (r).

Provincial Small Cause Courts.—A Provincial Small Cause Court has jurisdiction under this section to award compensation to a defendant for wrongful arrest or attachment (s). See s. 7, cl. (b).

Appeal.—An appeal lies from an order under this section : see sec. 104, sub-sec. (1), cl. (f).

S. 491 of the Code of 1882 provided for compensation for a wrongful arrest and attachment. S. 497 provided for compensation for wrongful injunction. An order under s. 497 was appealable under that Code (t), but as to orders under s. 491 it was held that they were not appealable (u). The present section combines the provisions of ss. 491 and 497, and s. 104 gives a right of appeal from all orders under this section, whether they are orders made on an application for compensation for wrongful injunction, or for wrongful arrest or attachment.

Undertaking.—Where a temporary injunction has been granted on an undertaking by the plaintiff to compensate the defendant for any loss that may arise by reason of the injunction, the undertaking is to be enforced by an application under this section to the Court which granted the injunction. A attaches a house in execution of a decree against B. C sues for a declaration that the house belongs to him, and obtains a temporary injunction staying the sale on his undertaking to pay interest to A at 6 per centum on the value of the house if his suit be dismissed. C's suit is dismissed. In such a case the procedure to be adopted by A to recover the interest from C is to apply not to the Court executing the decree, but to the Court which granted the injunction (v).

PART VII.

Appeals.

APPEALS FROM ORIGINAL DECREES.

96. [S. 540. Jud. Act, 1873, s. 49.] (1) Save where otherwise expressly provided in the body of this Code or by any other law for the time being in force, an appeal shall lie from every decree passed by any Court exercising original jurisdiction to the Court authorized to hear appeals from the decisions of such Court.

Appeal from original decree.

(2) An appeal may lie from an original decree passed ex parte.

(3) No appeal shall lie from a decree passed by the Court with the consent of parties.

Changes introduced by the section.—Sub-section (3) is new. In other respects this section corresponds with s. 540 of the Code of 1882. As to the effect of sub-section (3), see notes below under the head “Sub-section (3): consent decrees not appealable.”

Compare Judicature Act, 1873, s. 49, which provides that “no order made by the High Court or any judge thereof, by the consent of parties, shall be subject to any appeal except by leave of the Court or judge making such order.”

Letters Patent appeal.—Appeals from decrees of a single Judge of a High Court to the High Court are governed not by this section, but cl. 15 of the Letters Patent. “The Code makes no provision for an appeal within the High Court, that is to say, from a single Judge of the High Court. This right of appeal depends on clause 15 of the charter” (w).

Right of appeal.—It is not to be assumed that there is a right of appeal in every matter which comes under the consideration of a Court; such right must be given by statute, or by some authority equivalent to a statute (x). “Unless a right of appeal is clearly given by statute, it does not exist, whereas a litigant has independently of any statute a right to institute any suit of a civil nature in some Court or another” (y). No right of appeal can be given except by express words (z). Note in the present section the express words “an appeal shall lie from every decree.”

Agreement not to appeal.—An agreement whereby the parties agree not to appeal from a decree is binding upon the parties thereto, if it is for a lawful consideration and is otherwise valid (a). But an agreement by the next friend of a minor not to appeal is not binding on the minor (b).

Decree.—As to the distinction between a decree and an order, see p. 4 ante. All decrees are appealable, unless the appeal is barred under this Code or any other law. But all orders are not appealable; it is only those orders that are specified in s. 104 that are appealable.

No appeal can be entertained from a decree unless the decree has been drawn up (c). See notes to s. 33, on p. 99 above.

Appeal from ex parte decree.—Sub-section 2 provides that an appeal may be preferred from a decree passed ex parte. Suppose that an appeal is preferred from a decree ex parte, and the appellate Court comes to the conclusion that the lower Court was wrong in proceeding to decide the suit ex parte: what procedure should the appellate Court adopt in such a case? According to the Bombay High Court, the appellate Court should not remand the case to the lower Court for re-hearing, for an order of remand under O. 41, r. 23 [Code of 1882, s. 562] can only be made when the lower Court has disposed of a suit on a preliminary point, but should proceed as directed by O. 41, rr. 27 and 28 [Code of 1882, ss. 568, 569] (d). The Madras High Court has held that the Court has inherent power independently of the provisions of O. 41, r. 23, to remand a case for re-hearing, and the appellate Court may in such a case remand the case to the lower Court for re-hearing (e).

Forum of appeal.—The value of a suit, that is, the amount or value of the subject-matter thereof, determines the forum of suit, that is, the Court in which the suit is to be filed. It also determines the forum of appeal, that is, the Court to which the appeal lies. We have already dealt in the notes to s. 15 with questions relating to the forum of suit. The present note is confined to forum of appeal. Now an appeal may lie to the District Court or it may lie directly to the High Court. How is this to be determined, in other words, what is it that determines the forum of appeal? There is no doubt as stated above that it is the value of the suit that determines the forum of appeal. But the question that presents difficulty is, what is the value of a suit for the purposes of appeal? Now a plaintiff may in his plaint fix a sum definitively as the amount of his claim as in a suit for debt, or he may fix it approximately or tentatively as in a suit for accounts or for mesne profits [O. 7, r. 2]. Where the plaintiff fixes a sum definitively, it is that sum that determines the forum of appeal, and not the amount affected by the decree and involved in the appeal (f). Where the plaintiff fixes a sum approximately, there is a difference of opinion as to the forum of appeal. According to the Calcutta High Court it is the amount determined by the first Court as the amount due to the plaintiff that determines the forum of appeal (g). According to the Bombay (h) and Allahabad (i) High Courts, it is the amount determined by the first Court as the amount due to the plaintiff and accepted by the plaintiff by payment of additional court-fee that determines the forum of appeal. According to the Madras High Court, it is the amount or value of the subject-matter as fixed in the plaint, though approximately, that determines the Court to which the appeal lies; it has accordingly been held by that Court that where in a suit for account filed in the Court of a District Munsif, the plaintiff fixed his claim approximately at Rs. 2,000 and the Munsif passes a decree for more than Rs. 5,000, the appeal from the Munsif's decree lies not to the High Court, but to the District Court (j). According to the Calcutta High Court, the Munsif cannot pass a decree for more than the amount of his pecuniary jurisdiction; the appeal, therefore, from his decree lies to the District Court. We are inclined to think that the value of the subject-matter of a suit is its value at the date of instituting the suit, and that the view taken by the Madras High Court is the right one. Where the suit is dismissed by the first Court—in which case the mesne profits remain undetermined—the sum as fixed in the plaint determines the forum of appeal (k). See notes to s. 6, p. 15 above, also notes to s. 15, "Over-valuation and Under-valuation," p. 74 above.

A decree is passed by Court M in respect of a cause of action which arose at Kadiri. Appeals from decrees of Court M lie to Court C. Subsequently Kadiri is transferred to the territorial jurisdiction of Court P from which appeals lie to Court B. To which Court does the appeal from the decree lie, to Court C or to Court B? The answer is, to Court B. The reason is that a transfer of territorial jurisdiction ipso facto effects a transfer of venue (l).

Who may appeal.—An appeal under this section may be preferred by any of the following persons:—

1. Any party to the suit adversely affected by the decree (m), or, if such party is dead, by his legal representative (n) [see s. 146];
2. any transferee of the interest of such party, who, so far as such interest is concerned, is bound by the decree, provided his name is entered on the record of the suit (o). [See notes to s. 47 under the head "Representative," on p. 130 above.]
3. An auction-purchaser may appeal from an order in execution setting aside the sale on the ground of fraud. [See notes to s. 47 under the head "Appeal" on p. 136 above.]

No person unless he is a party to the suit is entitled to appeal under this section (p).

We have said above that any party to a suit adversely affected by the decree may prefer an appeal from the decree. The question whether a party is adversely affected by a decree is a question of fact to be determined in each case according to its particular circumstances. Thus it is quite clear that if the plaintiff's claim is decreed in its entirety, and all the issues are found in his favour, the plaintiff cannot appeal from the decree. Suppose now that the plaintiff's claim is decreed in its entirety, but that one of the issues is found against the plaintiff; can the plaintiff appeal from the finding adverse to him in such a case? It has been held that he cannot (q). The reason is that

(j) Kannayya v. Venkata (1918) 40 Mad. 1 [F. B.]. The jurisdiction of a Munsif under the Madras Civil Courts Act 3 of 1872 extends to suits of which the value does not exceed Rs. 2,500. Further, under that Act, appeals from decrees in suits of which the value exceeds Rs. 5,000 lie to the High Court, and not to the District Court. In the case cited above, it was held by the Madras High Court that though the decree was for a sum exceeding Rs. 5,000, the suit was for Rs. 2,000, and it is the value of the suit as given in the plaint, and not the value determined by the decree, that determines the forum of appeal.

S. 96. the very fact that the decree is entirely in the plaintiff's favour notwithstanding a finding adverse to him on one of the issues shows that such finding was unnecessary to the determination of the plaintiff's suit. We have seen in the notes to s. 11, pp. 59-60 above, that when a finding on an issue is not necessary to the determination of a suit, such finding does not operate as res judicata; and it is an elementary principle that an appeal is not admissible on any point that does not operate as res judicata. Similarly, if a suit is brought by A against B, and the suit is dismissed in its entirety, B cannot appeal from the decree. And even if one of the issues is found against B, B cannot appeal from the finding, for such finding does not operate as res judicata for the reason stated above. See notes to s. 11 under the head "Decision in the former suit must have been necessary to the determination of that suit," on p. 59 above, and the cases there cited.

It sometimes happens, where there are two or more defendants, that although a suit is dismissed as against one of them, in other words, the decree on the face of it is entirely in his favour, the decree impliedly negatives the right claimed by such defendant as against the plaintiff and the other defendants. In such a case it has been held that an appeal will lie at the instance of such defendant on the ground that he is adversely affected by the decree. X owes Rs. 2,000 to A. A assigns the debt first to B and then to C. C sues A and B to recover the debt, alleging that the assignment to B had become void through non-fulfilment of the conditions upon which it was made. A decree is passed against A, but the suit is dismissed as against B. Here the decree necessarily implies the finding that the assignment to B had become void, inasmuch as but for such a finding the decree could not have been passed in favour of C who admittedly was the second assignee of the debt. B may therefore appeal from the decree, though as against him the suit was dismissed (r).

In some cases an appeal may be preferred by a defendant against his co-defendants. A sues two Hindu brothers B and C on a promissory note passed by B for money borrowed by him (B) as manager of the family, alleging, that B and C were joint, and that the loan was obtained by B for family purposes. B does not appear at the hearing. C appears and admits that he and B are joint, but denies that the loan was obtained for family purposes. An issue is raised as to whether the debt contracted by B was for family purposes. It is found by the Court that the loan was obtained by B for family purposes, and a decree is passed against B and C. Here C can appeal from the decree as between himself and B. The rule is that when a Court deals with a case as raising not only a question between the plaintiff and the defendants, but also as between the defendants, one of the defendants can appeal from the decree as between himself and the other defendants (s). See notes to s. 11 under the head "Res judicata between co-defendants" on p. 47 above.

Joinder of appellants.—It is irregular for defendants with different defences to a suit and with different grounds for appeal to join in a single appeal (t).

Sub-section (3): consent decrees not appealable.—Sub-section (3) is new. It declares that no decree passed by consent of parties shall be appealable. Under the Code of 1882 consent decrees were passed under s. 375. Under the present Code consent decrees are to be passed under rule 3 of Order 23. This rule corresponds with s. 375 of the Code of 1882 except that certain words which occurred at the end of s. 375 have now been omitted. S. 375 ran as follows:—

“If a suit be adjusted wholly or in part by any lawful agreement or compromise or if the defendant satisfy the plaintiff in respect to the whole Compromise of suit. or any part of the matter of the suit, such agreement, compromise or satisfaction shall be recorded and the Court shall pass a decree in accordance therewith so far as it relates to the suit, and such decree shall be final so far as it relates to so much of the subject-matter of the suit as is dealt with by the agreement, compromise or satisfaction.”

O. 23, r. 3, is a reproduction of s. 375 with the omission of the words italicized above (u). This omission has been supplied by sub-section (3) of the present section. Sub-s. (3), however, goes further than those words. The said words barred an appeal from a consent-decree only so far as such decree related to so much of the subject-matter of the suit as was dealt with by the agreement, compromise or satisfaction on which the decree was based. If a consent-decree dealt with any matter extraneous to the suit, that is, with matters that did not relate to the subject-matter of the suit, it was held that the decree, though passed with the consent of parties, was appealable, and that it should be modified by omitting therefrom such terms as did not relate to the subject-matter of the suit (v). As regards the terms so excluded it was held that they might be enforced in a separate suit as a contract (w). There is no such limitation in sub-section (3). It excludes an appeal from every decree passed with the consent of the parties, though it may comprise terms that do not relate to the suit. But in such a case it is open to either party to the compromise to appeal from the order recording the compromise on the ground that the Court had no power under O. 22, r. 3, to record a compromise containing matters not relating to the suit [O. 43, r. 1, cl. (m)].

Both under O. 23, r. 3, and the corresponding s. 375 of the Code of 1882, the agreement or compromise in terms of which the Court is invited to pass a consent-decree must be “lawful.” It was accordingly observed by the High Court of Bombay in Gouldas v. James Scott (x), a case under s. 375, that “notwithstanding the declared finality of the decree, an appeal against it would be maintainable, where the party against whom the decree was passed alleged that there had been in fact no ‘lawful agreement’ come to, in which case the condition precedent to the making of the decree would not be fulfilled.” These observations were mere obiter dicta, but they were adopted by the High Court of Madras in Sridharan v. Puramathan (y), where it was expressly held that an appeal would lie from a consent-decree, if the agreement in terms of which the decree was passed was not lawful. The present Code does not allow an appeal from a consent-decree in any case. But it is quite competent to either party to appeal from the order recording the compromise where the compromise is not a lawful compromise, on the ground that the Court had no power under O. 22, r. 3, to record a compromise that was not lawful [O. 43, r. 1, cl. (m)]. See notes to O. 22, r. 3, “Appeal.”

Procedure for setting aside consent decrees.—Sub-section (3), in so far as it bars an appeal from consent decrees, gives effect to the principle that a judgment by consent acts as an estoppel (z). But a consent-decree can be set aside on any ground that would invalidate an agreement, such as misrepresentation, fraud or mistake (a). This, however, cannot be done by an appeal, but it must be done by a fresh suit brought for the purpose (b). In some cases it may be done by an application for a review (c). But it cannot be set aside by a Rule (d). See notes to s. 11, "Consent decree and estoppel," p. 62 above.

(u) There are certain words added at the commencement of rule 3 of Order 23, which it is not material to notice here. See notes to O. 23, r. 3.

"By consent of parties."—To constitute consent there must be an agreement between the parties. Mere acceptance by a party of an order offered by the Court does not amount to consent (e).

97. [New.] Where any party aggrieved, by a preliminary decree passed after the commencement of this Code does not appeal from such decree, he shall be precluded from disputing its correctness in any appeal which may be preferred from the final decree.

Appeal from final decree where no appeal from preliminary decree.

Object of the section.—This section is new. The object of the section is to estop parties aggrieved by a preliminary decree, who do not appeal from such decree within the period of limitation, from afterwards disputing its correctness in any appeal which may be preferred from a decree.

A party aggrieved by a preliminary decree must appeal from the decree within the period of limitation. It is unreasonable that he should allow proceedings to be carried on to their final stage and large costs to be incurred and then object to the preliminary decree in an appeal from the final decree. Recent Calcutta decisions under the Code of 1882 were quite the other way. According to these decisions, a party aggrieved by an order in the nature of a preliminary decree was not bound to appeal from the order, though the order was appealable as a decree; he was at liberty to wait until the final decree was passed, and then to dispute the correctness of the order in an appeal from the final decree, though the period of limitation for an appeal from the order had then expired. Thus it was held that when an order was passed in a suit for dissolution of partnership and accounts, declaring the shares of the parties, and referring the case to a commissioner for taking accounts, it was open to the party aggrieved by the order to dispute its correctness in an appeal from the final decree, though no appeal was preferred from the order, and the period prescribed by the law of limitation for appealing from the order had then expired (f). In a subsequent case it was held by a Full Bench in Khadem Hossein v. Emdad Hossein (g) [Maclean, C.J., and Rampini, J., dissenting], that where an order was passed in a suit for partition declaring the rights of the parties (h) it was open to the party aggrieved by the order to dispute its correctness in an appeal from the final decree, though no appeal was preferred from the order within the time allowed by law. The contrary had been laid down in an earlier case decided by the same High Court (i), but that decision was dissented from by a majority of the Full Bench in Khadem Hossein's case. Under this section, omission to prefer an appeal from a preliminary decree precludes objections to it in an appeal from the final decree (j). It is to be noted that the present section applies only to preliminary decrees passed after the commencement of this Code.

Ss.
97, 98.

Preliminary decree.—As to what is a preliminary decree, see notes to s. 2, cl. (3), under the head “Preliminary decree,” on p. 6 above.

Final decree passed prior to or during pendency of appeal from preliminary decree.—Under the Code of 1882 it was held that where after the passing of the final decree a party appealed from the preliminary decree, but did not also appeal from the final decree, that circumstance was a bar to the hearing of his appeal from the preliminary decree (k). Under the present Code it has been held by the High Courts of Madras and Allahabad that the mere fact that there is no appeal preferred from the final decree is no ground for not hearing the appeal from the preliminary decree, whether the latter appeal is filed before or after the final decree. If the preliminary decree is set aside, the final decree falls with it (l). The Calcutta rulings are not uniform (m).

Consolidation of appeals.—The Code contains no provisions for consolidating suits or appeals. Whether or not the Court has jurisdiction to consolidate appeals, it would not do so unless before the hearing of the suits consolidation was asked for of the suits and unless the evidence given in the two cases is common to both of them (n). See s. 151, notes under the head “Inherent powers of Court,” cl. (a).

98. [S. 575.] (1) Where an appeal is heard by a Bench of two or more Judges, the appeal shall be decided in accordance with the opinion of such Judges or of the majority (if any) of such Judges.

Decision where appeal heard by two or more judges.

(2) Where there is no such majority which concurs in a judgment varying or reversing the decree appealed from, such decree shall be confirmed :

Provided that where the Bench hearing the appeal is composed of two Judges belonging to a Court consisting of more than two Judges, and the Judges composing the Bench differ in opinion on a point of law, they may state the point of law upon which they differ, and the appeal shall then be heard upon that point only by one or more of the other Judges, and such point shall be decided according to the opinion of the majority (if any) of the Judges who have heard the appeal, including those who first heard it.

S. 98. present section differs in several material respects from the proviso to the second paragraph of s. 575. The proviso to the second paragraph of s. 575 ran as follows :—

"Provided that if the Bench hearing the appeal is composed of two Judges belonging to a Court consisting of more than two Judges, and the Judges composing the bench differ in opinion on a point of law, the appeal may be referred to one or more of the other Judges of the same Court and shall be decided according to the opinion of the majority (if any) of all the Judges who have heard the appeal, including those who first heard it."

As to the points of distinction between the old and the new section, see notes below under the head "The appeal shall then be heard upon that point only," and the head "By whom appeal to be heard upon the point of law stated."

"Differ in opinion on a point of law."—No reference can be made under this section if the Judges differ on a question of fact. The power to refer can only be exercised if there is a difference of opinion on a point of law (o).

"The appeal shall then be heard upon that point only."—Under the old section it was the appeal that was referred to a third Judge when the Judges hearing the appeal differed in opinion on a point of law and it was held that on such reference the whole appeal was open for argument, and not only the point of law on which the Judges had differed in opinion (p). The procedure to be adopted under the present section is to state the point of law upon which the Judges differ, and the appeal is then to be heard upon that point only.

By whom appeal to be heard upon the point of law stated.—Where a point of law on which the Judges hearing the appeal differ has been stated, the appeal is to be heard upon that point by one or more of the other Judges of the Court. This was, in fact, the practice followed in Bombay under the Code of 1882 (q). The practice of the Allahabad High Court was, however, different. The practice there was that the appeal should be heard by a Bench including the Judges who first heard the appeal (r). It is to be noted that while the appeal upon the point of law is under this section to be heard by a Judge or Judges other than those who first heard it, the point is to be decided according to the opinion of the majority (if any) of the Judges who have heard the appeal, including those who first heard it.

Where the Judges differ on a point of law, but do not state the point.—A obtains a decree in a District Court against B. B appeals to the High Court. The appeal is heard by a Bench of two Judges. The Judges differ in opinion on a point of law, but they do not state the point of law, and deliver judgments as judgments of the Court without any reservation, one Judge holding that the appeal should be allowed with costs, and the other that the appeal should be dismissed with costs. In such a case the Judges are not competent subsequently to state the point of law (s), and their dissentient judgments will operate as confirming the decree of the District Court under para. 1 of sub-sec. (2) (t). But B may then appeal under the Letters Patent (u).

Letters Patent appeal.—Where an appeal is heard by a Bench of two Judges of a Chartered High Court, and the Judges differ, then, if the appeal is from the Original Side of the High Court (that is, an appeal under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent), the procedure is governed by cl. 36 of the Letters Patent and the opinion of the senior Judge prevails (w), but if the appeal is a second appeal from the mufassal, the procedure is governed by the present section (x). See also cls. 10 and 27 of the Allahabad High Court set forth in Appendix II below.

Ss.
98, 99.

99. [S. 578.] No decree shall be reversed or substantially varied, nor shall any case be remanded in appeal on account of any misjoinder of parties or causes of action or any error, defect or irregularity in any proceedings in the suit, ~~not affecting the merits of the case~~ or the jurisdiction of the Court.

No decree to be reversed or modified for error or irregularity not affecting merits or jurisdiction.

Changes introduced by the section.—This section corresponds with s. 578 of the Code of 1882, except in the following respects :—

1. The words “any misjoinder of parties or causes of action” are new. As to the effect of these words see notes to O. 2, r. 3 under the heads “Procedure in case of misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action,” and “Procedure in case of multifariousness,” and notes to O. 2, r. 4, under the head “Leave of the Court.”
2. The words “in any proceedings in the suit” have been substituted for the words “whether in the decision or in any order passed in the suit or otherwise.” As to the effect of this alteration, see notes below under the head “In any proceeding in the suit.”

Scope of the section.—The mere circumstance of there being an error, defect or irregularity in any proceeding in a suit is no ground for reversing or varying a decree in appeal. But if it appears that the error, defect or irregularity affected the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of the Court, it would be a ground for reversing or varying the decree. Where an irregularity is one which affects the merits of a case or the jurisdiction of a Court, it is said to be a material irregularity. Where it does not, it is usually spoken of as a mere irregularity. This section cures a mere irregularity, error or defect. It does not cure a material irregularity, error or defect.

“Misjoinder of parties or causes of action.”—This expression may be amplified, and the rule contained in this part of the section may be stated as follows :—

No decree shall be reversed or substantially varied, nor shall any case be remanded in appeal, on account of—

- (1) misjoinder of plaintiffs (O. 1, r. 1);
- (2) misjoinder of defendants (O. 1, r. 3);
- (3) misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action (O. 2, r. 3). [The practice was different under the Code of 1882: see notes to O. 2, r. 3, under the head “Procedure in case of misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action”].

S. 99.

- (4) misjoinder of defendants and causes of action (O. 2, r. 3). [The practice was different under the Code of 1882: see notes to O. 2, r. 3, under the head "Procedure in case of multifariousness."]
- (5) misjoinder of causes of action (O. 2, rr. 3, 4 and 5). See notes to O. 2, r. 4, under the head "Leave of the Court."

The words "on account of any misjoinder of parties or causes of action" have been inserted in the section to make it clear that such a misjoinder is to be treated as a mere irregularity. Non-joinder stands on the same footing as misjoinder (y).

Error, defect or irregularity not affecting the merits of the case.—

A decree will not be reversed or substantially varied in appeal for admitting a document not properly stamped (z), or for admitting a document declared invalid where the judgment is not based on that document (a), or because the wrong side was allowed to begin (b), or because the suit was decided on a Sunday (c), for these are irregularities that could not affect the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of the Court. All these irregularities are cured by the present section. The exclusion of evidence by the lower Court is an irregularity which may or may not affect the merits of the case: if it does not, the irregularity is condoned under this section (d); see Indian Evidence Act, 1872, s. 167. For other cases see—

The latter words were held to apply only to irregularities in proceedings subsequent to the institution of the suit, and not to irregularities in the frame or institution of the suit (e). The present section applies to irregularities in any proceedings in the suit.

Suits Valuation Act VII of 1887, section 11, modifies the provisions of the present section in cases where an objection is taken in appeal that by reason of the over-valuation or under-valuation of a suit a Court which had not jurisdiction with respect to the suit exercised jurisdiction with respect thereto. The said section runs as follows :—

Ss.
99, 100.

- (1) Notwithstanding anything in section '[99] of the Code of Civil Procedure an objection that by reason of the over-valuation or under-valuation of a suit or appeal, a Court of first instance or lower appellate Court which had not jurisdiction with respect to the suit or appeal exercised jurisdiction with respect thereto shall not be entertained by an appellate Court unless—
 - (a) the objection was taken in the Court of first instance at or before the hearing at which issues were first framed and recorded, or in the lower appellate Court in the memorandum of appeal to that Court, and
 - (b) the appellate Court is satisfied, for reasons to be recorded by it in writing that the suit or appeal was over-valued or under-valued, and that the over-valuation or under-valuation thereof has prejudicially affected the disposal of the suit or appeal on its merits.
- (2) If the objection was taken in the manner mentioned in clause (a) of sub-section (1), but the appellate Court is not satisfied as to both the matters mentioned in clause (b) of that sub-section, and has before it the materials necessary for the determination of the other grounds of appeal to itself, it shall dispose of the appeal as if there had been no defect of jurisdiction in the Court of first instance or lower appellate Court.
- (3) If the objection was taken in that manner, and the appellate Court is satisfied as to both those matters, and has not those materials before it, it shall proceed to deal with the appeal under the rules applicable to the Court with respect to the hearing of appeal; but if it remands the suit or appeal, or frames and refers issues for trial, or requires additional evidence to be taken, it shall direct its order to a Court competent to entertain the suit or appeal.

APPEALS FROM APPELLATE DECREES.

100. [S. 584.] (1) Save where otherwise expressly provided in the body of this Code or by any other law for the time being in force, an appeal shall lie to the High Court from every decree passed in appeal by any Court subordinate to a High Court, on any of the following grounds, namely :—

Second appeal.

- (a) the decision being contrary to law or to some usage having the force of law ;
- (b) the decision having failed to determine some material issue of law or usage having the force of law ;

S. 100.

(c) a substantial error or defect in the procedure provided by this Code or by any other law for the time being in force, which may possibly have produced error or defect in the decision of the case upon the merits.

(2) An appeal may lie under this section from an appellate decree passed ex parte.

The word "specified" in the expression "specified law or usage" which occurred in cl. (a) of s. 584 of the repealed Code has been struck out as being redundant.

Scope of the section.—This section deals with second or special appeals. A second appeal can lie only to the High Court. A Court of first appeal is competent to enter into questions of fact, and decide whether the findings of facts by the lower Court are or are not erroneous. But a Court of second appeal is not competent to entertain questions as to the soundness of a finding of fact by the Court below (f). A second appeal can only lie on one or other of the grounds specified in the present section (g). A judge to whom a memorandum of second appeal is presented for admission is entitled to consider whether any of the grounds specified in this section exist and apply to the case, and, if they do not, to reject the appeal summarily (h). The limitations to the power of the Court imposed by ss. 100 and 101 in a second appeal ought to be attended to, and an appellant ought not to be allowed to question the finding of the first appellate Court upon a matter of fact (i). "Nothing can be clearer than the declaration in the Civil Procedure Code that no second appeal will lie except on the grounds specified in section [100]. No Court in India or elsewhere has power to add to or enlarge those grounds" (j).

No second appeal will lie on the ground of an erroneous finding of fact.—There is no jurisdiction to entertain a second appeal on the ground of an erroneous finding of fact, however gross or inexcusable the error may seem to be. No doubt, a second appeal does lie where there is a substantial error or defect in procedure [see cl. (c)]. But an erroneous finding of fact is a different thing from an error or defect in procedure. Where there is no error or defect in procedure, the finding of the first appellate Court upon a question of fact is final, if that Court had before it evidence proper for its consideration in support of the finding (k). The mere fact that the High Court would have upon the documents and evidence placed before the Court of first appeal come to a different conclusion, is no ground for a second appeal; it is precisely this revision of evidence which is excluded by the limited character of a second appeal (l). In this connection may be cited the observations of the Judicial Committee in Nafar Chandra Pal v. Shukur (m):—

"Questions of law and of fact are sometimes difficult to disentangle. The proper legal effect of a proved fact is necessarily a question of law, so also is the question of admissibility of evidence and the question of whether any evidence has been offered on one side or the other ; but the question whether the fact has been proved, when evidence for and against has been properly admitted, is necessarily a pure question of fact."

A second appeal will lie where a fact has been found without any evidence to support it.—It follows from what is stated in the next preceding paragraph that a second appeal will lie where there is a finding without any evidence to support it, or if the finding is based on irrelevant matters, or on a misconception of what the evidence is. All these are cases of substantial error or defect in procedure, and a second appeal will therefore lie under cl. (c) of the section (n).

A second appeal will lie to impeach legal conclusions drawn from findings of fact.—Though a second appeal does not lie upon a finding of fact, yet if a legal conclusion is drawn from the finding, a second appeal will lie under cl. (a) of the section on the ground that the legal conclusion was erroneous. Thus where a suit involved a question of adverse possession, and it was held by the lower Courts that the proper legal conclusion to be drawn from the findings of fact in the case was that the defendant was in adverse possession, the Privy Council held that the correctness of this conclusion was a question open to second appeal, and that the High Court was not precluded from deciding to the contrary (o). See notes above, "No second appeal will lie on the ground of an erroneous finding of fact."

A second appeal will lie where the Courts below have misconceived the real question they had to try.—The High Court has jurisdiction under this section to set aside the decree of the trial Judge in favour of the plaintiff, affirmed on the facts by the first appellate Judge, on the ground that the evidence taken showed that the true question of fact, which had not been considered and as to which no issue had been framed, should have been answered in favour of the defendant (p).

Decision being contrary to law.—A second appeal will lie where the decision is contrary to "law." The term "law" in cl. (a) is not limited in its meaning to statute law : it means general law (q).

When the question is one of construction of a document (r), or of legal inference from a document (rr), the question is one of law, and a second appeal will lie. But where a suit involves a question of the fact of adoption, and documents are produced as evidence of the fact of adoption, the question whether the documents do or do not support the alleged adoption is a question of fact, and no second appeal will lie (s). Where the Court of first instance granted a mandatory injunction for the demolition of a building, and the decree was reversed in appeal on an erroneous view of the law, it was held that a second appeal would lie (t). Though a person may not have been duly appointed executor, he may render himself responsible as executor if he intermeddles with the estate of the deceased. Misapplication of law on this point is a good ground for a second appeal (u).

Where an appeal which ought to have been made to the High Court is made to a District Court, and the latter Court hears and decides the appeal, the decision is contrary

- S. 100. to law within the meaning of cl. (a) of sub-sec. (1), and a second appeal lies to the High Court from the decree of the District Court (v). See notes to s. 96, "Forum of appeal, p. 246 above."

Usage having the force of law.—These words mean "a local or family usage as distinguished from the general law" (w). If the decree appealed from is based, on a misconception of the canons which the Privy Council and the High Court have defined as to how a special custom should be proved, the High Court will interfere in second appeal (x). The existence of custom or "usage having the force of law" is a mixed question of fact and law. The present section precludes the High Court from interfering in second appeal with the findings arrived at by the lower Courts of actual facts from which the existence of the custom has been inferred. But the inference as to the existence and the decision as to the validity of the custom are matters of law, and these may therefore be revised by the High Court in second appeal (y). Similarly, where the question is as to the existence or non-existence of a custom, and the lower appellate Court has acted upon illegal evidence or on evidence legally insufficient to establish the alleged custom, the question is one of law, and the High Court is entitled in second appeal to consider whether the finding is based upon sufficient evidence (z).

Substantial error or defect in procedure.—Where secondary evidence was admitted in contravention of the provisions of the Evidence Act, s. 66, it was held that the case came within cl. (c), and that a second appeal would lie (a). On the same ground it was held that a second appeal would lie where an unregistered document was admitted in evidence (b). Similarly where the lower appellate Court proceeded to determine the appeal without waiting for the return of a commission issued by that Court, a second appeal was allowed (c).

Where the Court of first appeal disposes of a suit upon a case not raised by the parties or warranted by the evidence, the case is one of substantial error or defect in procedure and a second appeal will lie (d). Omitting to decide a material issue (e), omitting to examine witnesses tendered (f), refusing to receive documentary evidence which ought to have been accepted (g), allowing the plaintiff in the lower appellate Court to change the nature of his suit (h), have all been held to be good grounds for special appeal. But disregard of an Amin's second report made after a local investigation does not constitute a substantial error or defect of procedure within the meaning of this section, and is no ground for second appeal (i). The refusal by a lower appellate Court to exercise the discretion vested in it by O. 41, r. 27, with respect to the admission of additional evidence, is a substantial error or defect in procedure, and affords a ground of special appeal; but where the Court has exercised its discretion in a sound and reasonable way, and in the exercise of its discretion refused to admit additional evidence, the case is not one of substantial error or defect in procedure (j).

Refusal by Court of first appeal to extend time for filing an appeal.—Where an application is made to a Court of first appeal to admit an appeal from the original decree after the expiration of the period of limitation, that Court has the power, on sufficient cause being shown, to admit the appeal [Limitation Act, s. 5]. If the lower appellate Court refuses to admit the appeal, holding in the exercise of its discretion that there was no sufficient cause for not presenting the appeal within the prescribed time, there is no ground for a second appeal. But if the lower appellate Court did not exercise its discretion at all, or exercised it capriciously and arbitrarily, or without proper legal material to support its decision, a second appeal will lie under cl. (a) of the section. The principle is that where a Court has exercised its discretion in a sound and reasonable way, the High Court has no power to interfere in second appeal (k).

Dismissal of appeal for default.—Though a second appeal will lie from an appellate decree passed ex parte no second appeal lies from an order dismissing an appeal for default. Such an order is not a decree (l); see O. 41, r. 11 (2), and s. 2, cl. (2), sub-cl. (b).

Changing nature of suit.—An appellant should not be allowed to set up a new case in second appeal (m).

Pleas which may be taken for the first time in special appeal.—An appellant will not be allowed to set up for the first time in second appeal a plea not taken by him in the lower Court. But if the objection is one which goes to the very root of the case, it may be allowed to be taken for the first time in second appeal (n). Thus, subject to the provisions of s. 21 above, an objection to jurisdiction may be taken for the first time in special appeal, if it is patent on the face of the record (o) [See notes to s. 21, "Objection to jurisdiction, etc."]. Similarly, the plea of res judicata may be taken for the first time in second appeal, provided it can be decided upon the record before the Court (p). So also the plea of want of notice in an ejectment suit (pp). As to the plea of limitation, the notes to O. 41, r. 2, under the head "Leave of Court: Limitation," which refer to first appeals, apply also to second appeals (q).

The High Court will allow in second appeal a new point to be raised for the first time, though the point may not have been taken in the memorandum of appeal before it, provided it is purely a question of law arising on the findings of the Courts below, and not affected by any facts outside those findings. Thus where the lower appellate Court awarded to the plaintiff one-third share of the property in suit on the ground that remoter gotraj sapindas inherit per stirpes, and the defendant preferred a second appeal to the High Court on the ground that the plaintiff was not entitled to any share at all, the defendant was allowed to contend at the hearing of the second appeal that the plaintiff was not entitled in any event to more than one-sixth share, as remoter gotraj sapindas inherit per capita and not per stirpes (r). But no question of law will be allowed to be raised for the first time at the hearing of a second appeal, if it sets up a new right differing in kind from that asserted throughout the trial, and not merely in degree as in the above case. Thus where the right claimed by one of the defendants was treated as one of maintenance only in the Courts below, she was not allowed to contend in second appeal that, besides maintenance, she was entitled to a half share in the property (s).

Second appeal.—A second appeal does not lie from any order made in appeal under s. 104. But a second appeal will lie from an order made under s. 47, as such an order is deemed to be a “decree.” See s. 2, cl. (2).

101. [S. 585.] No second appeal shall lie except on the grounds mentioned in section 100.

Second appeal on no other grounds.

102. [S. 586.] No second appeal shall lie in any suit of the nature cognizable by Courts of Small Causes, when the amount or value of the subject-matter of the original suit does not exceed five hundred rupees.

No second appeal in certain suits.

Suits of the nature cognizable by Courts of Small Causes.—Whether a suit is or is not of the nature cognizable by a Court of Small Causes is to be determined by a reference to the provisions of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act 9 of 1887 [see ss. 15, 16 and 27]. If a suit is of the nature cognizable by a Small Cause Court, and the value of the subject-matter of the suit does not exceed Rs. 500 no second appeal will lie, even though for special reasons the suit cannot be or has not been tried in a Small Cause Court, or though the Small Cause Court to which the plaint was presented returns the plaint under s. 23 of the said Act to be presented to another Court on the ground that it involves a question of title, and is not therefore cognizable by that Court. The reason is that it is the nature of the suit, and not the Court in which it is tried, that determines the right of appeal (t). The words “any suit of the nature cognizable” mean any suit relating to a subject-matter over which a Court of Small Causes would have jurisdiction if the claim were within the pecuniary limits of its jurisdiction (u). In determining whether a second appeal lies under this section, the original character of the suit is to be regarded rather than the character it may subsequently assume by operation of the findings of the Court (v). Nor should regard be had to the mode of trial of the suit; thus a suit which is of the nature cognizable by a Court of Small Causes is none the less so because instead of being tried under the summary procedure it has been tried in the ordinary manner (w).

Suit for mesne profits.—Section 15 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act gives jurisdiction to Courts of Small Causes to take cognizance of all suits of a civil nature of which the value does not exceed Rs. 500 except such suits as are specified in the second schedule of the Act. That schedule consists of several articles of which article 31 is the most important for the purposes of the present section. That article excludes from the jurisdiction of Small Cause Courts “any other suit for an account including.....a suit for the profits of immoveable property belonging to the plaintiff which have been wrongfully received by the defendant.” This article contemplates cases in which the plaintiff claims an account of monies which the defendant has received and to an account of which the plaintiff is entitled, because the monies received belonged to him. It has been held by a majority of the Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court that a suit for mesne profits does not fall under this article, in other words it is cognizable by a Small Cause Court. Such a suit is not a suit "for the profits of immoveable properties belonging to the plaintiff which have been wrongfully received by the defendant." A suit for mesne profits is a suit for damages in which the defendant would be liable even if no profits have been actually received by him during the period of dispossession. For it will be seen on referring to s. 2, sub-s. (12), of the Code that mesne profits are defined as profits which the person in wrongful possession of such property actually received or might with ordinary diligence have received therefrom (x). On the other hand, it has been held by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court (y), that a suit for mesne profits does come within art. 31 of the said Act, and is not therefore cognizable by a Small Cause Court at all. As regards recent Bombay decisions, if we are to reconcile them all, we may say that a suit for mesne profits is, according to the Bombay Court, a "suit for the profits of immoveable property belonging to the plaintiff which have been wrongfully received by the defendant" within the meaning of art. 31 (z), but, that it does not come within the said article, if the amount claimed is an ascertained sum so that no account has to be taken (a).

Suit for title.—A Small Cause Court has no jurisdiction to entertain a suit for title relating to immoveable property. A suit, however, which is otherwise cognizable by a Small Cause Court, does not cease to be so, because it incidentally involves a question of title (b).

Suit for a declaration.—A Small Cause Court has no jurisdiction to entertain a suit for a declaratory decree. The mere fact, however, that there is a prayer for a declaration will not prevent a suit from being of the nature cognizable by a Small Cause Court, if all the other reliefs claimed in the suit could be obtained without asking for a declaration (c).

Execution.—The expression "suit" in this section includes execution proceedings (d), from which it follows that if a suit is of the nature cognizable by a Small Cause Court, no second appeal will lie from an order made in execution of the decree passed in the suit, unless the value of the suit exceeds Rs. 500. It is immaterial that the order in execution is made by a Court other than a Court of Small Causes or a Court vested with the powers of a Small Cause Court, as where the property attached in execution of the decree is immoveable property and the order in execution is made by a First Class Subordinate Judge in his ordinary jurisdiction. The test is, what was the nature of the suit in which the decree sought to be executed was passed, and not the nature of the proceedings in execution (e). It is also immaterial that the amount sought to be recovered in execution exceeds Rs. 500. The test is not the amount claimed in execution proceedings, but the amount of the subject-matter of the suit (f).

103. [New.] In any second appeal, the High Court may, if the evidence on the record is sufficient, determine any issue of fact necessary for the disposal of the appeal but not determined by the lower appellate Court.

Power of High Court to determine issues of fact.

Scope of the section.—This section is new. It empowers the High Court in second appeal to determine issues of fact—

- (1) where it is necessary to determine such issues for the disposal of the second appeal,
- (2) where such issues have not been determined by the lower appellate Court, and
- (3) where the evidence on the record is sufficient to enable the High Court to determine such issues. If the evidence on the record is not sufficient, the High Court should refer the issues for trial under O. 41, r. 25.

In the absence of any provision such as is contained in the present section, there was a conflict of decisions under the Code of 1882 as to the power of the High Court to determine issues of fact in second appeal in the circumstances specified in the present section. On the one hand, it was held that where the evidence on the record was sufficient to enable the High Court to deliver judgment, the High Court had the power at the hearing of a second appeal itself to fix and determine issues of fact necessary for the disposal of the appeal but not determined by the lower appellate Court, as a remand in such a case would merely cause delay and increase costs (g). On the other hand, it was held that even if the evidence on the record was sufficient, the High Court had no such power, and the only course open to it was to remand the issues for a finding to the lower appellate Court, the ground of the decisions being that the High Court had no power in second appeal to determine any issue of fact (h). The present section gives effect to the former view.

APPEALS FROM ORDERS.

104. [S. 588.] (1) An appeal shall lie from the following orders, and save as otherwise expressly provided in the body of this Code or by any law for the time being in force, from no other orders :—

Orders from which appeal lies.

- (a) an order superseding an arbitration where the award has not been completed within the period allowed by the Court ;
- (b) an order on an award stated in the form of a special case ;
- (c) an order modifying or correcting an award ;
- (d) an order filing or refusing to file an agreement to refer to arbitration ;
- (e) an order staying or refusing to stay a suit where there is an agreement to refer to arbitration ;

- (f) an order filing or refusing to file an award in an arbitration without the intervention of the Court ; S. 104.
- (g) an order under section 95 ;
- (h) an order under any of the provisions of this Code imposing a fine or directing the arrest or detention in the civil prison of any person except where such arrest or detention is in execution of a decree ;
- (i) any order made under rules from which an appeal is expressly allowed by rules.

(2) No appeal shall lie from any order passed in appeal under this section.

This section and O. 43, r. 1, contain a full list of appealable orders. The words, " save as otherwise expressly provided in the body of this Code or by any law for the time being in force," are new. See notes below under the head " Letters Patent appeal."

Clause (a)—See Schedule II, paragraph (8), and notes thereto.

Clause (b)—See Schedule II, paragraph (11), and notes thereto.

Clause (c)—See Schedule II, paragraph (12), and notes thereto.

Clause (d)—See Schedule II, paragraph (17), and notes thereto.

Clause (e)—See Schedule II, paragraph (18).

Clause (f)—See Schedule II, paragraph (21), and notes thereto. This clause does not apply to proceedings under cl. (2) of s. 11 of the Arbitration Act, 1899. Hence no appeal lies under this clause from an order refusing to set aside an award made and filed under that Act. The High Court, however, has jurisdiction to hear the appeal under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent (i).

Clause (h)—See O. 16, rr. 10, 12, 17 and 21 (summoning and attendance of witnesses); O. 26, r. 17 (attendance and examination of witnesses before Commissioner); O. 38, r. 4 (arrest before judgment); O. 39, r. 2, sub-r. (3) (disobedience of injunction).

Clause (i)—See O. 43, r. 1.

Sub-section (2).—Thus if an appeal is preferred under O. 43, r. 1 (a), from an order under O. 7, r. 10, returning a plaint to be presented to the proper Court, and an order is made in appeal remanding the case under O. 41, r. 23, no appeal lies from such order (j). See notes to O. 41, r. 23, " Appeal."

Section 154.—There are some orders which were appealable under sec. 588 of the repealed Code, which are not appealable under this section. As to these it is provided by s. 154 that where the right to appeal has already accrued to a party before the commencement of this Code, such right shall not be affected by anything contained in this Code.

Letters Patent appeal.—Clause 15 of the Letters Patent provides that an appeal will lie from every “judgment” of a single Judge of the High Court in the exercise of civil jurisdiction to other Judges of the Court. Now an order refusing to set aside an award is a “judgment” within the meaning of the said clause (k). It is clear that if such an order is made by a Munsif’s Court, or by the Court of a Subordinate Judge or by a District Court, no appeal will lie from it, for it is not an order specified in the present section. It is equally clear that if such an order is made by a Judge of the High Court an appeal will lie from it under the Letters Patent, for the present section expressly saves the right of appeal given by any law for the time being in force. Upon this point there was a conflict of decisions under the Code of 1882, for it was provided by s. 588 of that Code that an appeal lay from the orders specified in that section, and from no other orders. The question accordingly arose whether s. 588, by declaring that no appeal would lie from any order other than those specified in that section, took away the right of appeal given by the Letters Patent. It was held by the High Courts of Calcutta, Madras and Bombay, following a decision of the Privy Council (l), that s. 588 did not take away the right of appeal given by cl. 15 of the Letters Patent (m), and that an appeal therefore lay from an order of a single Judge of the High Court refusing to set aside an award to the other Judges of the Court. On the other hand, it was held by the Allahabad High Court, on a different reading of the Privy Council case referred to above, that s. 588 took away the right of appeal given by the Letters Patent (n), and that no appeal therefore lay from an order refusing to set aside an award, though the order might be made by a Judge of the High Court. The Allahabad ruling, it is submitted, is no longer law, having regard to the words “save as otherwise expressly provided by any law for the time being in force” which have been newly added into this section.

105. [S. 591.] (1) Save as otherwise expressly provided,
Other orders. no appeal shall lie from any order made by a Court in the exercise of its original or appellate jurisdiction; but, where a decree is appealed from, any error, defect or irregularity in any order, affecting the decision of the case, may be set forth as a ground of objection in the memorandum of appeal.

(2) Notwithstanding anything contained in sub-section (1), where any party aggrieved by an order of remand made after the commencement of this Code from which an appeal lies does not appeal therefrom, he shall thereafter be precluded from disputing its correctness.

Changes introduced by the section.—This section corresponds with s. 591 of the Code of 1882 except in the following particulars:—

1. Sub-section (2) is new. See notes below under the head “Sub-section (2): appeal from order of remand.”

(n) Banno Bibi v. Mehdi Husain (1889) 11 All. 375; Muhammad v. Ishaan-ullah (1892) 14 All. 226.

2. In s. 591 the words were "in any such order" after the word "irregularity." S. 105.
The word "such" has been omitted, as the expression "such order" gave rise to the contention in some cases before the Privy Council that s. 591 applied to non-appealable orders only, a contention that was overruled by the Privy Council" (o).

Scope of the section.—An interlocutory order made in a suit is either appealable (s. 104) or not appealable. This section, like the corresponding s. 591, applies to appealable as well as non-appealable orders. Where an interlocutory order is appealable, the party against whom the order is made is not bound to prefer an appeal against it, but he may make the irregularity in the order a ground of objection in the memorandum of appeal, where an appeal is preferred from the decree in the suit in which the order was made. In other words, s. 105 allows an appealable order which has not been appealed from to be made the subject of appeal in an appeal from the decree. There is no law prevailing in India which renders it imperative upon a party to appeal from every interlocutory order by which he may conceive himself aggrieved, under the penalty, if he does not do so, of forfeiting for ever the benefit of the consideration of the appellate Court. Nothing would be more detrimental to the expeditious administration of justice than the establishment of a rule which would impose upon a party the necessity of appealing, whereby on the one hand he might be harassed with endless expense and delay, and on the other inflict upon his opponent similar calamities. It was so observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Moheshur Singh v. The Bengal Government (p) and subsequent cases (q), and it is this principle that underlies the present section. The present section makes it quite clear that an order appealable under s. 104 may be questioned under s. 105 in an appeal from the decree in the suit, although no appeal from the order has been preferred under s. 104 (r). And even where the interlocutory order is one from which no appeal lies, an error, defect or irregularity in that order may be set forth as a ground of objection in the memorandum of appeal, where an appeal is preferred from the decree in the suit in which the order was made (s).

Affecting the decision of the case.—According to the Calcutta and earlier Allahabad decisions, the words "affecting the decision of the case" mean affecting the decision of the case on its merits. It has accordingly been held that no order can be attacked in appeal from a final decree, unless the error, defect or irregularity in the order is one affecting the decision of the case on the merits. Thus an order under O. 9, r. 13, setting aside an ex parte decree, is not an order that could possibly affect the merits of the case; such an order merely ensures a hearing upon the merits. Hence the alleged wrongfulness of the order cannot be urged as a ground of objection in an appeal from the decree in the suit (t). The same remarks apply to an order made under O. 41, r. 19, re-admitting an appeal which has been dismissed for default (u). The Chief Court of the Punjab has followed the earlier Allahabad decisions (v). On the other hand, it has been held by the High Court of Madras (w) and in a recent case by the Allahabad High Court (x), that an order under O. 9, r. 13, setting aside an ex parte decree can be attacked in appeal from the final decree, even though the error or defect in the order is not one affecting the decision of the case on the merits, the reason given being that the section does not contain the words "on the merits," and no such words can therefore be read into the section. For the same reason it has been held that an order setting aside an award and directing the case to be tried by the Court may be attacked in appeal from the final decree (y).

Error, defect or irregularity.—The error, defect or irregularity referred to in this section must be an error, defect or irregularity in law or procedure, and not in matters of fact (z).

Application of the section.—This section contemplates two things, namely, (1) a regular appeal from a decree, and (2) the insertion in that appeal of a ground of objection relating to an interlocutory order. Hence it has been held by the High Court of Allahabad that no appeal will lie where the appeal is ostensibly against the decree passed in the suit, but the grounds of appeal are solely directed against an interlocutory order made in the suit (a). On the other hand, it has been held by the other High Courts that an appeal will lie, though the only reason for the appeal is the erroneous decision in regard to an interlocutory order (b).

It should be noted that in order to take advantage of the provisions of this section, the ground of objection must be set out in the memorandum of appeal (c).

Sub-section (a): appeal from order of remand.—An order under O. 41, r. 23 remanding a case is appealable, where an appeal would lie from the decree of the Appellate Court [O. 43, r. 1, cl. (u)]. Such an order was also appealable under the Code of 1882 [sec. s. 588, cl. (28)]. Under s. 591 of the Code of 1882, it was held that a party aggrieved by an order of remand could object to its validity in an appeal against the final decree, though he might have appealed against the order under s. 588 and had not done so (d). Sub-section (2) has been added to preclude an appellant from taking, on an appeal from the final decree, any objection that might have been urged by way of appeal from an order of remand. But this sub-section does not apply to Privy Council appeals (e). See notes to s. 109, "Final Order."

106. [S. 589.] Where an appeal from any order is allowed, it shall lie to the Court to which an appeal would lie from the decree in the suit in which such order was made, or where such order is made by a Court (not being a High Court) in the exercise of appellate jurisdiction, then to the High Court.

Sub-section (1).—Sub-section (1) is new. It is important to note that the powers of the appellate Court referred to in cls. (a) to (d) are limited by the rules as is shown by the opening words of the section (f).

“Prescribed.”—“Prescribed” means proscribed by the rules contained in the First Schedule or made under s. 122 or s. 125 of the Code : see s. 2, cls. (16) and (18).

Clause (a)—See O. 41, r. 24.

Clause (b)—See O. 41, r. 23.

Clause (c)—See O. 41, r. 25.

APPEALS TO THE KING IN COUNCIL.

109. [S. 595.] Subject to such rules as may, from time to time be made by His Majesty in Council regarding appeals from the Courts of British India, and to the provisions hereinafter contained, an appeal shall lie to His Majesty in Council—

When appeals lie to King in Council.

- (a) from any decree or final order passed on appeal by a High Court or by any other Court of final appellate jurisdiction ;
- (b) from any decree or final order passed by a High Court in the exercise of original civil jurisdiction ; and
- (c) from any decree or order, when the case, as hereinafter provided, is certified to be a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council.

Ss. 109 and 110 are to be read together. See also cl. 39 of the Letters Patent. For rules of procedure in appeals to the King in Council, see O. 45 below.

Difference between the old and the new section.—This section corresponds with s. 595 of the Code of 1882 except that in cls. (a) and (b) the words “decree or final order” have been substituted for the words “final decree,” and in cl. (c) the words “or order” have been added after the word “decree.” This, however, does not introduce any change in the law. The Code of 1882 contained a section, being section 594, which ran thus : “In this chapter (that is chapter XLV) unless there be something repugnant in the subject or context, the expression ‘decree’ includes also judgment and order.” Chapter XLV of the Code of 1882 relating to appeals to His Majesty in Council has been split into two parts in this Code, ss. 595, 596, 597 and 616 being retained in the body of the Code [now ss. 109-112], and the remaining sections being relegated to O. 45. S. 594 has been reproduced with slight alterations in O. 45, r. 1. But it is not reproduced in this part of the Code, as four only out of the twenty-three sections of that chapter are retained in the body of the Code. What has been done instead is that the words “decree or final order” have been substituted where the words “final decree” occurred in the four old sections, and the words “decree or order” have been substituted where the word “decree” occurred in those sections.

Right of appeal to the Privy Council.—Appeal in cases under the Provincial Insolvency Act.—The right of appeal from the High Courts to the Privy Council now rests on cl. 39 of the Letters Patent, and this is elaborated in the Code of Civil Procedure, ss. 109 and 110. Therefore, though there is no express provision in the Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907) for appeal to the Privy Council from orders of the High Court made under that Act, an appeal to the Privy Council is competent, if the case comes under ss. 109 and 110 of the Code (j).

“Decree.”—An act of State is not a decree. Hence no appeal lies to the King in Council from an order of the Viceroy and Governor-General of India in Council depositing the Maharajah of a Native State in India, such an order being an act of State (k).

“Final order.”—A final order within the meaning of clauses (a) and (b) of the section is an order which finally decides any matter which is directly at issue in the case in respect to the rights of the parties. An order comprising the decision of a High Court upon a cardinal issue in a suit, that issue being one that goes to the foundation of the suit, and one that can never, while the decision stands, be questioned again in the suit, is final within the meaning of this section, notwithstanding that there may be subordinate inquiries to make (l). An order refusing the appointment of a receiver in a suit is not a final order, and no appeal lies from it to the Privy Council (m). Similarly an order made in revision under s. 115 of the Code deciding that the applicant should be allowed to sue in forma pauperis is not a final order (n). An order of the High Court directing the lower Court to proceed with the execution of a decree which the lower Court had refused to execute on the ground that it had no jurisdiction is not a final order (o). Nor is an order refusing an application to be brought on the record as the legal representative of a deceased party to a pending appeal a final order (p). But where an order directing the taking of accounts which the defendant contends ought not to be taken at all decides in effect that if the result should be found to be against the defendant he is liable to pay the amount, the order is final within the meaning of this section (q). Similarly an order under rules 90 and 92 of Order 21 setting aside or confirming a sale is appealable to His Majesty in Council. Such an order is clearly one which deals finally with the rights of parties, and there is no reason why it should be excluded from the privilege of an appeal; sub-sec. (2) of s. 104, which provides that no second appeal shall lie in the case of such an order [O. 43, cl. (j)], cannot restrict the provision of the present section which allows an appeal to the King in Council from final orders (r).

An order of remand is not ordinarily capable of being the subject of an appeal to His Majesty in Council, being interlocutory ordinarily and not being final within the meaning of this section, but it would be a final order and therefore capable of appeal if it has the effect of deciding finally the cardinal point in the suit (s). It has thus been held that no appeal lies to His Majesty in Council from an order remanding a case for trial on the ground that the lower Court was wrong in dismissing the suit as barred by the provisions of O. 2, r. 2 (t), or as barred by limitation (u). In a recent Allahabad case an application was made by a company under sch. II, cl. 17, to file an agreement to submit to arbitration. The application was opposed on the ground that the agreement not being under the seal of the company was invalid and also on grounds of misrepresentation and fraud. The Court of first instance dismissed the application on the sole ground that the agreement not being under the seal of the company was invalid. On appeal the High Court reversed the decree holding that the agreement did not require to be under the seal of the company, and remanded the case for trial of the other issues, vis., issues as to fraud and misrepresentation. From this order of remand the

S. 109. respondent applied for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. It was held by a Full Bench that the order was not a "final order" within the meaning of cl. (a) of this section, there being other important issues to dispose of, and it refused leave to appeal (v). Sec. 105, sub-s. (2), does not apply to appeals to His Majesty in Council (w).

"Order passed on appeal."—An order passed by a High Court rejecting an application to amend a decree is not an order "passed on appeal" within the meaning of cl. (a) of this section, and is therefore not appealable to His Majesty in Council. Moreover, it is doubtful whether such an order is a final order (x). Similarly it has been held that an order made by a High Court refusing to admit an appeal presented after the expiration of the prescribed period is not an order "passed on appeal" within the meaning of this section (y).

"Any other Court of final appellate jurisdiction."—An appeal lies to the Privy Council from a final order of a District Judge made under s. 104 [Code of 1882, s. 588], as no appeal lies to the High Court from such order (z). See s. 104, sub-s. (2).

Limitation.—The application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council must be made within six months from the date of the decree sought to be appealed from [Limitation Act, 1908, Sch. I, art. 179].

Under the Limitation Act of 1877, it was held that in computing the aforesaid period the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the decree appealed from could not be excluded as s. 12 of that Act did not apply to such applications (a). It was also held that the application could not be admitted after the expiration of six months, though there was sufficient cause for not presenting the application within the prescribed period, as s. 5 of the Act did not apply to such applications (b). Both these sections have now been amended in the Limitation Act of 1908, and they have been made applicable to applications for leave to appeal. The aforesaid decisions are, therefore, no longer law, and it has now been expressly held that under s. 12 of the Limitation Act of 1908 the time requisite to obtain a copy of the decree appealed from is to be excluded (c).

Prerogative of the Crown.—The Code does not limit the prerogative of the Crown to admit an appeal. Hence special leave may be granted to appeal where leave has been refused by the High Court (d). But no special leave will as a rule be granted, unless there is some substantial question of law or general interest involved (e). See s. 112.

Clause (c): Certificate as to fitness.—Leave to appeal to the Privy Council may be granted (1) when a case fulfils the requirements of s. 110, or (2) when it is otherwise a fit case for appeal to the Privy Council. In either case a certificate has to be granted by the High Court, in the first case, a certificate to the effect that the case fulfils the requirements of s. 110 and is therefore a fit case for appeal to the Privy Council, and, in the second case, that for other reasons it is a fit case for appeal to the Privy Council [see O. 45, rr. 2-3]. Clause (c) of the present section refers to the second class of cases. In this class of cases it is not necessary that the order should be a final one. Nor is it necessary that the value of the subject-matter of the suit should be Rs. 10,000 or upwards (f). The only condition necessary is that the case should be a fit one for appeal to the Privy Council. Referring to this clause, Lord Hobhouse said: "That is clearly intended to meet special cases—such, for example, as those in which the point in dispute is not measurable by money, though it may be of great public or private importance" (g). Thus where an application was made by a Company for a certificate to appeal to the Privy Council on the ground that the financial and commercial position of the Company might be seriously affected by the questions at issue, and that those questions were of importance to Indian Companies generally, the High Court of Bombay granted the requisite certificate. The order sought to be appealed from in that case was an order dismissing a petition presented by the Company for a confirmation of a special resolution altering the memorandum of association of the Company (h). Similarly when a case involved a substantial question of law, and the point in dispute, though not measurable by money, was of considerable importance, namely, the extent of the control acquired by one who had built a fire-temple for Parsis at Udwarda, the High Court of Bombay granted leave to appeal to the Privy Council (i). Similarly the question as to what is the legal position of a person who has collected the debts of a deceased person by virtue of his being a holder of a succession certificate under the Succession Certificate Act, 1889, was held to be a substantial question of law of general public importance, and leave to appeal was granted under cl. (e) of this section (j). In fact, as observed by Beaman, J., in the undermentioned case (k), "what is contemplated in cl. (e) is a class of cases in which there may be involved questions of public importance, or which may be important precedents governing numerous other cases, or in which while the right in dispute is not exactly measurable in money, it is of great public or private importance." "To certify that a case is of that kind, though it is left entirely in the discretion of the Court, is a judicial process which could not be performed without special exercise of that discretion, evinced by the fitting certificate" (l).

S. 110. and where the decree or final order appealed from affirms the decision of the Court immediately below the Court passing such decree or final order, the appeal must involve some substantial question of law.

Read with this section O. 45, rr. 4 and 5.

This section corresponds with s. 596 of the Code of 1882, except that the words "or final order" have been added in paragraphs 2 and 3 after the word "decree." See notes to s. 109 under the head "Difference between the old and the new section."

Date of valuation.—As regards "the amount or value of the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of first instance," the material date is the date of the institution of the suit. But there is a difference of opinion whether, if interest or mesne profits are claimed in a suit and awarded by the decree, the interest or mesne profits are to be calculated up to the date of the institution of the suit or up to the date of the decree. See notes below under the head "Amount or value of the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of first instance."

As regards "the amount or value of the subject-matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council," the material date, it is submitted, is the date of the petition for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council.

As regards the value of "property" referred to in the second paragraph of this section, the material date is the date of the decree from which the appeal to His Majesty in Council is to be made (n).

"The amount or value of the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of first instance."—Not only the amount or value of the subject-matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council, but the amount or value of the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of first instance, must be Rs. 10,000 or upwards. The word "and" in the first paragraph of this section cannot be read as "or." It is obvious that though the amount of the subject-matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council may be Rs. 10,000 or upwards, the amount of the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of first instance may be less than Rs. 10,000. The words "amount or value of the subject-matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council" mean the amount or value at the date of the petition for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council (o).

The only class of cases under the head "amount or value of the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of first instance" that present any difficulty are those which include a claim for interest or for mesne profits. Prior to the year 1874 appeals to the Privy Council were governed by the Order in Council of April 10, 1838. By that Order it was prescribed that the amount or value of the subject-matter in dispute in appeal to His Majesty in Council must be Rs. 10,000 or upwards. It was accordingly held by the Privy Council in cases which arose prior to 1874 that interest on money claims and mesne profits of immoveable property subsequent to the date of the institution of the suit actually awarded by the decree appealed from may be added in calculating the value of the matter in dispute in appeal to His Majesty in Council, but not interest or mesne profits accruing subsequent to the decree, and if that amount was Rs. 10,000 or upwards a party was entitled to appeal though the value of the subject-matter of the suit in the (n) Surendra Nath v. Dwarka Nath (1917) 44 Cal. 119. (o) Moti Chand v. Ganga Prasad (1902) 24 All. 174, 29 I. A. 40.

Court of first instance was less than Rs. 10,000 (p). It was also held that in no case can the costs of the suit be added to the principal in calculating the appealable value (q). The condition that the amount or value of the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of first instance should also be Rs. 10,000 or upwards was first imposed by the Privy Council Appeals Act 6 of 1874, and it was subsequently inserted in the Code of Civil Procedure. The first authoritative decision we have on the meaning of the words "amount or value of the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of first instance" is that of the Judicial Committee in Moti Chand v. Ganga Prasad (r). In that case the Court of first instance passed a decree for the plaintiff for principal and interest up to the date of the decree amounting to Rs. 9,496, with further interest up to the date of realization. From this decree the defendant appealed to the High Court and that Court reversed the decree and dismissed the suit with costs. The plaintiff then applied to the High Court for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. On behalf of the plaintiff it was contended that interest subsequent to the decree should be added to the said sum of Rs. 9,496, and that if that was done, the value of the subject-matter of the suit would exceed Rs. 10,000. But this contention was overruled, and the application was refused on the ground that the claim and decree in the original Court were for less than Rs. 10,000. The plaintiff then applied to the King in Council for special leave to appeal, but the application was refused. In the course of the judgment their Lordships of the Judicial Committee said: "In the present case the amount or value of the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of first instance, construing that in the manner most favourable to the proposed appellant, was at the outside the amount for which he recovered his decree which was below Rs. 10,000, amounting in round numbers, I think, to about Rs. 9,500." It is conceived that the words "construing that in the manner most favourable to the proposed appellant" mean "even by including interest subsequent to the suit and up to the decree." It is not clear from the judgment of their Lordships whether interest from the date of suit up to the date of decree can be added to the principal in calculating the appealable value of Rs. 10,000. But this decision is certainly an authority for the proposition that interest subsequent to the decree cannot be added in calculating the amount of Rs. 10,000 (s).

In Dalglish v. Damodar (t), the High Court of Calcutta held that in calculating the amount of the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of first instance, mesne profits awarded by the decree are to be calculated up to the date of the decree. This decision proceeded on the authority of Mohideen v. Pitchay (u), a case under the Ceylon Ordinance No. I of 1889 which does not impose any condition as to the amount or value of the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of first instance. The Calcutta decision, it is submitted, is erroneous, and it was dissented from by the High Court of Madras in Subramania Ayyar v. Sellammal (v) where it was held that in calculating the amount of the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of first instance, mesne profits only up to the date of the institution of the suit can be added to the value of the property of which possession is claimed. The Calcutta decision was also doubted by the Patna High Court in Maharaja Kesho Prasad v. Shiva (w), but in a later case (x) the same Court

- S. 110. followed the Calcutta decision having regard to the practice of that Court in matters of settled practice to follow the Calcutta High Court.

Where the dispute in the suit relates to the income of property of the value of Rs.10,000, the value of the subject-matter of the suit cannot be said to be Rs. 10,000 so as to give a right of appeal under this section (y).

In suits relating to immoveable property the value of the subject-matter of the suit is the selling or market value and not the value as deduced from the amount of the stamp upon the plaint. Hence if in a suit for possession of immoveable property the value of the property as laid in the plaint is under Rs.10,000 for the purpose of Court fees, it is open to the plaintiff to show, when applying for a certificate for leave to appeal to the Privy Council, that the market value of the property was Rs. 10,000 or upwards (z).

It has been held by the High Court of Bombay that where in a suit for accounts the plaintiff values his claim for less than Rs.5,000 and institutes his suit in a Court of the Second Class Subordinate Judge whose pecuniary jurisdiction is limited to Rs.5,000, he cannot be heard to say that the amount of the subject-matter is Rs. 10,000 or upwards (a). In the course of the judgment Beaman, J., said: "The amount or value of the subject-matter of a suit can in no case exceed the limits of the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Court in which it is instituted. It follows that the amount or value of the subject-matter of a suit for the purposes of s. 109, clauses (a) and (b), and s. 110 of the Civil Procedure Code, if that suit is instituted in a Court the pecuniary limits of whose jurisdiction is Rs. 5,000, can never be greater than Rs. 5,000." It is different, however, where a suit is for an injunction and a declaration relating to immoveable property, for such a suit according to the Bombay decisions may be brought in the Court of a Second Class Subordinate Judge though the value of the property may exceed Rs. 5,000. In such a case, it has been held that the case does not fall under the first paragraph of this section, but that it falls under the second paragraph, and that the plaintiff is not precluded from showing that the decree involved some claim or question to property of the value of Rs. 10,000 or upwards within the meaning of the second paragraph (b).

"The amount or value of the subject-matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council".—Not only the amount or value of the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of first instance, but the amount or value of the subject-matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council, must be Rs. 10,000 or upwards. The word "and" in the first paragraph of the section cannot be read as "or." The words "amount or value of the subject-matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council" mean the amount or value at the date of the petition for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council (c).

It may happen that the amount of the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of first instance is more than Rs. 10,000, while the amount of the subject-matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council is less than Rs. 10,000. A mortgages his property to B. C claims that a portion of the property of the value of about Rs. 6,000 belongs to him and that it did not belong to A. B then sues A on the mortgage; the mortgage-debt being Rs. 38,000, and joins C as a defendant. A decree is passed for A on the mortgage. C's claim is allowed in part by the Court of first instance, but it is disallowed altogether by the High Court. Is C entitled to appeal to the King in Council? No, because though the amount of the decree passed in favour of A exceeds Rs. 10,000, the value of C's claim is less than Rs. 10,000 (d). Note that C ought not to have been joined as a party to the suit at all [see notes to O. 34, r. 1, "Persons having an interest, etc"]".

Single decree in several appeals.—A, claiming to be the next reversioner on the death of a Hindu widow, sues B, C and D, being alienees of separate items of the estate of the last male holder, and obtains a decree against them. B, C and D prefer separate appeals which are all disposed of by one decree. A applies for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council from the decision as to the items in possession of B and D. The claims against the several alienees being based on really different causes of action, the fact that only one appellate decree was drawn up does not affect the requirements of this section, and consequently no leave can be granted in such of the appeals in which the value of the subject-matter was below Rs. 10,000 (e).

Abandonment of appeal in part after grant of certificate.—A obtains a decree against B for Rs. 11,000. B applies for leave to appeal from the decree to the Privy Council, and a certificate is granted. Afterwards in the printed case and at the hearing B withdraws part of his appeal, reducing by so doing the amount in dispute to Rs. 9,000. Does this render the appeal incompetent? No, if B had a bonâ fide intention, when he applied for a certificate, to appeal in respect of the whole amount of the decree (f).

"Or the decree or final order must involve, directly or indirectly, some claim or question to property of the value of Rs. 10,000 or upwards."—The decree or final order referred to in the second paragraph of the section is the decree or final order from which the appeal is to be preferred to the Privy Council. The material date for determining the value of the "property" under this paragraph is the date of that decree or order (g).

Note that the expression used in the second paragraph of this section is "property", while that used in the first paragraph is "subject-matter of the suit" and "subject-matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council." It has been held by the High Court of Madras (h), that the second paragraph of this section applies only to cases which involve some claim or question to or respecting property additional to the actual subject-matter in dispute in the appeal and to be taken into account therewith in making up the appealable value, or it may possibly also apply to cases involving claims incapable of a money valuation such as claims to easements and the like, but apart from this if nothing beyond the actual subject-matter in dispute is involved, the first paragraph of the section alone applies. This decision is at variance with the view expressed by Maclean C.J., at the end of his judgment in Dalgleish v. Damodar (i), but that part of the judgment of the learned Chief Justice was not necessary for the determination of the case nor are any reasons given in support of that view. In a recent Patna case Miller C. J., expressed his preference for the view taken by the Madras High Court (j).

When the plaintiff, a tenant-in-common, obtained a decree against the defendant, another tenant-in-common, for a mandatory injunction to demolish buildings erected by the defendant on a plot of common land, the buildings being worth more than Rs. 10,000, the High Court granted leave to the defendant to appeal to the Privy Council, though the subject-matter of the suit was valued for purposes of court-fees at Rs. 1,500 (k). Similarly where the plaintiff obtained a decree for possession of a piece of land worth Rs. 2,000, and the result of the decree was to oblige the defendant to remove buildings worth more than Rs. 10,000, which the defendant had built on the land, leave was granted to appeal to the Privy Council (l). Where the value of the subject-matter of the suit was below Rs. 10,000, but the effect of a deed of gift, with regard to the construction of which there was a dispute, would govern the ownership of property worth five lacs, a certificate of appeal was granted (m). Similarly, where the value of the subject-matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council was below Rs. 10,000, but the proposed appeal to His Majesty in Council involved a decision as to the validity of an award which dealt with property worth over Rs. 10,000, a certificate of appeal was granted (n).

A sues B for a declaration that he is entitled to one-third share in certain property and for an order that the property should be partitioned and his share given to him. The property exceeds Rs. 10,000 in value, but the share claimed by A is of a value less than Rs. 10,000. A decree is passed for A as prayed. B then applies for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. Can it be said in such a case that the decree involves some claim or question to property of a value exceeding Rs. 10,000? Yes, according to the Calcutta High Court (o); no, according to the Bombay High Court, unless there be other property outside the subject-matter in dispute which can be affected by the decision (p). In the case last cited Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C.J., laid down that in order to determine the value prescribed by this section, the decree has to be looked at as it affects the interests of the parties prejudiced by it, and, where the detriment to the party seeking relief is estimated at less than Rs. 10,000, then the value of the matter in dispute in appeal is not of the prescribed value, and the decree itself does not involve any claim or question to, or respecting property of, the prescribed value, and the case does not fulfil the requirements of the section. The Patna High Court has followed the Bombay decision (q).

A obtains a decree against B for enhancement of rent of land in B's possession from Rs. 85 to Rs. 800 per annum. In such a case leave may be granted under the second paragraph if the value of the land is Rs. 10,000 or upwards: the capitalized value of Rs. 800 does not afford any test as to the value of the subject-matter under the first paragraph (r).

Where the matter is under the appealable value or is not capable of valuation.—In such a case, a party desirous of appealing to the Privy Council may apply for a certificate that the case is “a fit one for appeal” to His Majesty in Council under s. 109, cl. (c) (s). See notes to s. 109 under the head “Certificate as to fitness.”

“Where the decree appealed from affirms the decision of the Court immediately below the Court passing such decree.”—It is not enough where the decree appealed from affirms the decision of the Court immediately below the Court passing such decree, that the appeal involves some substantial question of law; it is further necessary that the amount of the subject-matter of the suit and of the subject-matter in dispute on appeal must be Rs. 10,000 or upwards, or that the decree must involve some claim to property of like amount. The existence of a question of law of itself does not give a right of appeal in the ordinary course of procedure under this section (t). This is clear from the word "and" with which the last paragraph of this section begins.

It has been held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that the word "decision" in this clause means merely the decision of the suit, and cannot, like the word "judgment," be defined as meaning the statement of the grounds on which the Court proceeds to pass the decree. It follows from this that in order to "affirm" the decision of the Court below it is sufficient if the appellate Court affirms the decree of the Court below; it need not also affirm the grounds of fact on which the judgment was passed. Thus where the decree of the appellate Court was that "the appeal be dismissed," but the reasons given were not the same as those of the lower Court in respect of some matters of fact, it was held that the decision of the Court below was "affirmed" within the meaning of this section, and that no certificate should be granted unless the appeal involved a substantial question of law (u). Nor is it necessary in order to "affirm" the decision of the Court below that the finding of the appellate Court should coincide in terms with that of the Court below: it is sufficient if the findings of fact of the two Courts are in effect the same (v). And it has been held that a decree of the High Court dismissing an appeal for want of prosecution the appellants not having supplied their counsel with materials upon which to argue the appeal when it was called on for hearing, is a decree "affirming" the decision of the Court below (w). Where the appellate Court agrees with the findings of the Court below upon the merits, but awards simple interest from a certain date instead of compound interest, it amounts to an affirmation of the decision of the lower Court (x). To determine whether the decree appealed from affirms the decision of the Court below we must look to the substance of the case (y).

In a suit by A against B a decree is passed in A's favour. B appeals from the decree but the appeal is dismissed by the lower appellate Court. B then appeals to the High Court. The appeal is heard by a single Judge of the High Court who reverses the decree of the lower appellate Court. From this judgment A appeals to the High Court under cl. 15 of the Charter with the result that the judgment of the single Judge is reversed by a Bench of two Judges. B applies for leave to His Majesty in Council. Here the decree appealed from is the decree passed by the Bench of two Judges of the High Court. The Court "immediately below" the Court constituted by the two Judges is the lower appellate Court, and not the Court constituted by the single Judge of the High Court. This therefore is a case in which the decree appealed from affirms the decision of the Court immediately below, and no leave to appeal can therefore be granted unless the appeal involves some substantial question of law. The above result follows from the fact that the Code makes no provision for an appeal within the High Court, that is to say, from a single Judge of the High Court: the right of appeal from the judgment of a single Judge of the High Court is conferred by cl. 15 of the Charter (z).

Rule followed by Judicial Committee in case of concurrent findings of fact, when the appeal before it falls on the question of law on which leave to appeal was granted.—The Judicial Committee has undoubtedly power as a Court of review to review the concurrent findings of facts of the lower Court, though the appeal before it may fail on the question of law on which leave to appeal was granted. But as a general rule the Committee will not interfere with these findings on the ground that where the question is one of fact, it is a question of the weight and credibility of evidence upon which a Court of review can never be in quite as good a position to form an opinion as the Court of first instance (a). In Umrao Begum v. Irshad Husain (b), Lord Hobhouse in delivering the judgment of the Board said: "The question is not only a question of fact, but it is one which embraces a great number of facts whose significance is best appreciated by those who are most familiar with Indian manners and customs. Their Lordships would be specially unwilling in such a case to depart from the general rule which forbids a fresh examination of facts for the purpose of disturbing concurrent findings by the lower Court." The mere fact that the lower Courts do not agree on all the steps which lead to one and the same conclusion is no reason for disregarding the said rule (c). "It cannot detract from the weight of concurrent findings of fact, that different Courts, in arriving at the same result upon the same evidence, have not been influenced by precisely the same considerations. A difference of opinion to that extent is only calculated to suggest that the evidence, whatever view be taken of it, must necessarily lead to one and the same inference" (d). And sometimes the nature of the question may be such (as where the question is whether a deed of gift was executed by a Mahomedan under apprehension of death) that the Judicial Committee will not interfere with concurrent findings of the lower Courts on that question even where the evidence is such as to justify either view (e). "The rule [above referred to] however, is not an absolute rule; it presses upon the appellant with more or less weight according to the circumstances of the case, and no doubt the fact that the Courts have differed on some important but subordinate questions is a matter to be taken into consideration in determining whether the evidence before the lower Courts should be reviewed in detail" (f). Thus concurrent findings of facts have been allowed to be disputed where the question of fact appeared to be a good deal mixed up with law (g). They have also been allowed to be disputed where the decision, though ultimately one of fact, turned upon the admissibility or value of many subordinate facts, and involved the construction of documents and other questions of law (h).

The principle of concurrent findings of fact does not apply where the case is one of no evidence. The reason is that a decision that there is no evidence to support a finding is a decision of law (i). Nor does it apply to findings as to the existence of a custom, since that is a matter of mixed law and fact (j).

The appeal must involve some substantial question of law.—No appeal lies to the Privy Council from an appellate decree when there are concurrent findings of the appellate Court and of the Court below upon questions of fact and when upon such findings no substantial question of law arises (k). To grant leave to appeal on the ground that "there seems to be a point of law which however has not been argued here," is not a compliance with the provisions of this section (l).

Involve.—Suppose that there are concurrent findings of fact of such a character that the Privy Council, having regard to the rule set forth on p. 278, would decline to disturb them in appeal: suppose, further, that no substantial question of law could arise before the Privy Council unless such findings were set aside by the Privy Council; could the proposed appeal be said in such a case to involve a question of law so as to entitle a party to leave to appeal to the Privy Council? No, according to the Allahabad High Court (m). Yes, according to the undermentioned decisions of the Calcutta and Bombay High Courts (n).

Substantial question of law.—The rejection of an application under O. 41, r. 27 [Code of 1882, s. 568] for the reception of additional evidence does not involve a substantial question of law (o). Omitting to state reasons in an appellate judgment as required by O. 41, r. 31 [Code of 1882, s. 574] is not a substantial question of law (p). Nor does the dismissal of an appeal for default in furnishing security for costs under O. 41, r. 10, involve any substantial question of law (q). The question whether a tenancy is to be regarded as one at will or one of a permanent nature is a matter in which a substantial question of law is involved (r). But awarding interest at 9 per cent. per annum, being the rate fixed in the mortgage bond, from the date of the suit under s. 34 above, is not such an arbitrary and unwarrantable exercise of discretion under that section as to constitute it a substantial question of law (s).

Review.—An order granting leave to appeal to the Privy Council is open to review (t).

Appeal.—See notes to O. 45, r. 3, "Appeal."

Rules observed by the judicial committee in appeals from decrees of Indian Courts:—

- (1) A point not raised in the plaint before the District Judge, or before the High Court, cannot be raised before the Judicial Committee (u).
- (2) The Judicial Committee will not disturb the findings of the Court below upon mere issues of fact, unless it is clearly satisfied that there has been some miscarriage in the reception or in the appreciation of evidence (v).
- (3) In appeal from second appeals the findings of fact by the first Court are binding on the Judicial Committee, unless special leave to appeal from the decision of the first Court has been given (w).

- (4) The Judicial Committee will not criticise with any strictness opinions as to the credibility of witnesses, which is eminently a question for the Courts in India (x).
- (5) As to the circumstances in which the Judicial Committee will allow a re-hearing, see the undermentioned cases (y).

111. [S. 597.] Notwithstanding anything contained in section 109, no appeal shall lie to His Majesty in Council—

Bar of certain appeals.

- (a) from the decree or order of one Judge of a High Court established under the Indian High Courts Act, 1861, or the Government of India Act, 1915, or of one Judge of a Division Court, or of two or more Judges of such High Court, or of a Division Court constituted by two or more Judges of such High Court, where such Judges are equally divided in opinion, and do not amount in number to a majority of the whole of the Judges of the High Court at the time being; or
- (b) from any decree from which under section 102 no second appeal lies.

The words and figures “or the Government of India Act, 1915,” were inserted in the section by the Amending Act 13 of 1916.

Decree or order.—In cl. (a) the words “decree or order” have been substituted for the word “judgment” which occurred in the corresponding s. 597 of the Code of 1882. See notes to s. 109 under the head “Difference between the old and the new section.”

Bar of certain appeals under clause (a).—The reason why no appeal is allowed from the decrees and orders referred to in cl. (a) of this section is that an appeal from such decrees and orders is provided for in cl. 15 of the Letters Patent. The object clearly seems to be that a party should not be permitted to appeal directly to the King in Council from the said decrees and orders, but that he should, in the first instance, appeal under the said cl. 15 to the other judges of the High Court (z).

112. [S. 616.] (1) Nothing contained in this Code shall be deemed—

- (b) to interfere with any rules made by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and for the time being in force, for the presentation of appeals to His Majesty in Council, or their conduct before the said Judicial Committee. S. 112.

(2) Nothing herein contained applies to any matter of criminal or admiralty or vice-admiralty jurisdiction, or to appeals from orders and decrees of Prize Courts.

Clause (a).—See notes to s. 109, "Prerogative of the Crown," on p. 270 above.

PART VIII.

Reference, Review and Revision.

113. [S. 617.] Subject to such conditions and limitations as may be prescribed, any Court may state a case and refer the same for the opinion of the High Court, and the High Court may make such order thereon as it thinks fit.

Reference to High Court.

See notes to O. 46, r. 1, below.

For rules of procedure, see O. 46 below.

114. [S. 623.] Subject as aforesaid, any person considering himself aggrieved—

Review.

- (a) by a decree or order from which an appeal is allowed by this Code, but from which no appeal has been preferred,
- (b) by a decree or order from which no appeal is allowed by this Code, or
- (c) by a decision on a reference from a Court of Small Causes, may apply for a review of judgment to the Court which passed the decree or made the order, and the Court may make such order thereon as it thinks fit.

See notes to O. 47, r. 1, below.

As to rules of procedure, see O. 47 below.

115. [S. 622.] The High Court may call for the record of any case which has been decided by any Court subordinate to such High Court and in which no appeal lies thereto, and if such subordinate court appears—Revision.

- (a) to have exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it by law, or
- (b) to have failed to exercise a jurisdiction so vested, or

(c) to have acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity, S. 115.

the High Court may make such order in the case as it thinks fit.

This section corresponds to s. 622 of the Code of 1882. There is no material alteration in the section.

Revisional Jurisdiction.—The jurisdiction exercised by the High Court under this section is called Revisional Jurisdiction. The powers of the High Court under this section can only be invoked in cases in which no appeal lies to the High Court, provided the case has been decided by any Court subordinate to such High Court and such subordinate Court appears—

- (1) to have exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it by law, or
- (2) to have failed to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it by law, or
- (3) to have acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity.

The High Court has no power to interfere in revision under this section except in one or other of the three cases mentioned in the section. Whether a particular order is expedient or not is not a ground on which the High Court can interfere under this section (a).

High Courts' powers of superintendence.—A case may not fall under this section, and yet it may fall under s. 15 of the Charter Act, 1861, now s. 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915.

Certiorari.—The provisions of this section are not exhaustive. Cases may be imagined, though rare ones, which may not fall under this section. For such cases it cannot be said that the powers of the High Courts which have inherited the ordinary or extraordinary jurisdiction of the Supreme Courts to issue writs of certiorari have been taken away by the provisions of this section (b).

High Courts' power of revision.—In the exercise of revisional powers it is not the duty of the High Court to enter into the merits of the evidence; it has only to see whether the requirements of the law have been duly and properly obeyed by the Court whose order is the subject of revision and whether the irregularity as to failure or exercise of jurisdiction is such as to justify interference with the order (c). If the High Court finds that the external conditions of jurisdiction, of investigation and of command have been satisfied by the inferior Court, it will not substitute its own appreciation of evidence, or its own judgment thereon, for the determination of the inferior Court, in any matter committed by the Legislature to the discretion of the inferior Court (d).

"In which no appeal lies thereto."—The High Court cannot act under this section in any case in which an appeal lies to that Court. The word "appeal" is not confined to first appeal; it includes second appeal (e). Where an appeal is preferred in a case in which no appeal lies, the High Court may in a proper case treat the appeal as an application for revision and deal with it on that footing (f).

S. 115. Interlocutory orders.—To give the High Court jurisdiction to revise an interlocutory order it is necessary among other things that it must be a “case decided” within the meaning of this section, and, further, that no appeal lies to the High Court from that order. For the purposes of this section interlocutory orders may be divided into two classes, namely—

A. Those from which an appeal lies under s. 104 (1). These are orders of the Court of first instance.

B. Those from which no appeal lies. These may be—

(a) orders of the Court of first instance from which no appeal lies under s. 104 (1); or

(b) orders passed in first appeal from which no second appeal lies having regard to the provisions of s. 104 (2).

As regards interlocutory orders falling under group A, the High Court has no jurisdiction to revise them as they are appealable orders.

As regards interlocutory orders belonging to group B, there is a difference of opinion as to whether they are subject to revision under this section. The High Courts of Allahabad (g) and Madras (h), have held that these orders are not subject to revision under this section, first, because an interlocutory order cannot be said to be a “case decided” within the meaning of this section, and, secondly, because a party aggrieved by such order, though he cannot appeal from the order, has another remedy open to him under s. 105, namely, to make the alleged wrongfulness of the order a ground of appeal from the final decree in the suit. The Allahabad cases were considered in Dhapi v. Ram Pershad (i), where the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court took a different view, and, having regard to the comprehensiveness of the word “case” occurring in the section and to the possibility of grave injustice which might result from the adoption of the other principle, decided that under s. 115 of the Code the Court had jurisdiction to revise an interlocutory order. This decision was considered by Sargent, C. J., and Candy, J., in Motilal v. Nana (j) which took a course between the two extremes. According to that decision, the word “case” is wide enough to include an interlocutory order, but the word being of wide import it must be controlled by the purpose for which the section was framed. That purpose was to enable a party to obtain the rectification of a decision of a lower Court by the High Court when there would otherwise be no remedy. Hence the High Court should not entertain an application for revision of an interlocutory order, if the applicant has another remedy open to him as under s. 105 (k). But if the applicant has no other remedy open to him, as where s. 105 does not apply, the High Court should entertain the application for revision. Thus an order made by a District Judge on appeal granting a temporary injunction, having force temporarily only pending the suit, cannot be said to be an order “affecting the decision of the case” within the meaning of s. 105. It cannot therefore be called in question upon final appeal from the decree under s. 105. Hence the order may be revised by the High Court (l). In a recent Allahabad case, Walsh, J., held that an interlocutory order may be revised though the applicant has another remedy open to him under s. 105; Piggot, J., however, held differently (m).

(l) Bai Atrani v. Deeping (1918) 40 Bom. 86. Note that no second appeal lies from the order of the District Judge.
(m) Dhandel v. Chotu Lal (1916) 39 All. 254.

As regards orders made on an application for leave to sue in forma pauperis, a distinction has been made by the Allahabad High Court between orders granting the application and orders rejecting the application. An order rejecting the application, it has been held, amounts to a decision of the case and is therefore open to revision; but an order granting the application is not a decision of the case, but a mere interlocutory order, and it is not therefore open to revision (n).

Where other remedies open.—The powers conferred upon the High Court by this section are discretionary. Hence though a party may not have a remedy by way of appeal, the High Court may, in the exercise of its discretion, refuse to interfere under this section if there is any other remedy open to the party. "The especial and extraordinary remedy by invoking the revisional powers of this Court should not be exercised unless as a last resource for an aggrieved litigant" (o). "The recognised rule . . . is that if a party to civil proceedings applies to us to exercise our powers under s. [115], he must satisfy us that he has no other remedy open to him under the law to set right that which he says has been illegally, irregularly or without jurisdiction done by a subordinate Court" (p). But when it is said by the opponent that there is some other remedy open to the applicant, and the application for revision is opposed on that ground, it must be shown that it is a certain and conclusive remedy allowed by law. Thus no application will be entertained to revise an order made under O. 21, rr. 60, 61 or 62 [Code of 1882, ss. 280, 281, 282], for though no appeal lies from such order, the party against whom the order is made has a special remedy by way of suit under O. 21, r. 63 [Code of 1882, s. 283] (q). Similarly no application will be entertained to revise a decree passed in a suit for possession instituted under s. 9 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877; for though no appeal lies from a decree passed in such suit, the party against whom the decree is passed is not precluded from instituting a regular suit to establish his title to possession (r). But if the remedy is a doubtful one, the High Court may interfere by way of revision under this section (s). And even if the remedy is certain and conclusive, the High Court may in an exceptional case interfere by way of revision under this section (t). "No doubt the ordinary rule is that where an aggrieved party has other remedy available, this Court is unwilling to interfere, but it is unquestionable that even if there be such remedy, this Court may interfere in exceptional cases" (u). Thus where the lower Court refused the application of a decree-holder for rateable distribution under s. 73 on the ground that there was another property of the judgment-debtor available for the satisfaction of his claim, the High Court of Madras interfered on revision under this section, though the applicant had clearly a remedy by suit. Miller, J., said: "I do not depart from the view . . . that where a party has a remedy elsewhere than in the High Court, the High Court should not except in special cases interfere under [this section]. But here we have a case in which there is no doubt as to the rights of the parties, and no remedy, if I do not interfere, except by a suit to which there can be no defence, and which therefore would surely multiply proceedings. In such a case, the lesser evil, at any rate, is interference under [this section]" (v). In a recent Patna case, Manuk, J., said:

- S. 115. "When the High Court can by interfering under section 115 in appropriate cases terminate the litigation, the mere fact that another remedy by suit only lies should not per se be a reason for non-interference" (w).

High Court "may" call for record.—The powers of revision given by this section are very wide, and the High Court can of its own motion call for any record under this section, if it appears desirable so to do to that Court (x). It is not necessary to the exercise of its powers under this section that it should be put into motion by the party aggrieved by the proceeding complained of. It has been so held by the High Courts of Calcutta, Allahabad and Madras (y). In a Bombay case, however, where a Collector applied to the High Court to revise a decision of a Mamlatdar, the High Court declined to interfere, stating that in so doing it was following the established practice of the Court, and adding that the defendant, if he felt aggrieved, could himself apply to that Court (z).

"Case".—In a recent case before the Judicial Committee (a), the question arose whether proceedings by petition to a Civil Court in a matter under s. 10 of the Religious Endowments Act 20 of 1863 constituted a "case" within the meaning of this section. Dealing with that question, their Lordships said: "No definition is to be found in the Code of the word 'case.' It cannot, in their Lordships' view, be confined to a litigation in which there is a plaintiff who seeks to obtain particular relief in damages or otherwise against a defendant who is before the Court. It must, they think, include an ex parte application such as that made in this case, praying that persons in the position of trustees or officials should perform their trust or discharge their official duties."

Subordinate Court.—A Collector acting under s. 11 of the Land Acquisition Act is not a Court within the meaning of this section (b). Nor is a District Registrar a Court within the meaning of this section (c). Nor is a District Judge acting under s. 4 of Bombay Act 12 of 1850 (d). The High Court therefore has no jurisdiction to revise orders made by them.

The Court of the Resident at Aden is subordinate to the High Court of Bombay as regards questions which should be stated by the Resident for the decision of the High Court under the provisions of s. 8 of the Aden Act 2 of 1864 (e). His Britannic Majesty's Courts in Zanzibar are also subordinate to the High Court of Bombay (f). A Collector exercising judicial functions under the Bombay Mamlatdar's Courts Act II of 1906 is a Court within the meaning of this section (g). And so is a Civil Court acting or purporting to act under the provisions of s. 10 of the Religious Endowments Act 20 of 1863 (h). Where an application is made to a Collector for a reference to the Civil Court under s. 18 of the Land Acquisition Act 1 of 1894, and the application is rejected, the Collector in rejecting the application acts judicially and his order is subject to revision by the High Court (i). Similarly an order by a Collector refusing to refer to the Civil Court a question under the second proviso to s. 49 of that Act is subject to revision by the High Court (j).

A Judge of a High Court sitting alone is not a Court subordinate to the High Court, but performs a function directed to be performed by the High Court [clause 36, Letters Patent]; therefore, no decision of a single Judge can be revised under this section (jj).

Exercise by Court of jurisdiction not vested in it by law.—In order to determine the “jurisdiction” of a Court, we must determine the pecuniary limits of its jurisdiction, the local or territorial limits of its jurisdiction, and its jurisdiction as regards the subject-matter of the suit or other proceeding instituted in it. These limits are fixed by the particular Act by which the Court is constituted. If a Court assumes a jurisdiction which, by reason of the pecuniary or territorial limits of the jurisdiction of such Court or by reason of the subject-matter of the suit or other proceeding instituted in it, is not vested in it by law, the High Court to which such Court is subordinate may exercise its revisional powers under this section. But the High Court will not interfere in revision, unless the facts from which want of jurisdiction on the part of a subordinate Court may be inferred are patent upon the face of the record (k). As to the distinction between absence of jurisdiction and irregular exercise of jurisdiction, see notes to s. 21.

Local or territorial limits of jurisdiction.—S. 21 of the Code provides that no objection as to the place of suing shall be allowed by any revisional Court unless such objection was taken in the Court of first instance at the earliest possible opportunity, and, in all cases where issues are settled, at or before such settlement, and unless there has been a consequent failure of justice.

Pecuniary limits of jurisdiction: over-valuation and under-valuation of suits.—The provisions of s. 11 of the Suits Valuation Act (p. 255 above) apply, in so far as they are applicable, to the High Court exercising revisional jurisdiction under the present section.

Failure to exercise jurisdiction.—Where a Court having jurisdiction to act in a matter declines jurisdiction in the matter, this section will apply. Thus where a Court has jurisdiction to accept a plaint (l), or to execute a decree (m), or to review its judgment (n), but refuses to accept the plaint or to execute the decree or to review its judgment on the ground that it has no jurisdiction, the High Court will interfere under this section. Similarly where a Court refused to confirm a sale under s. 312 of the Code of 1882 [now O. 21, r. 92], believing that it had no power to do so if the purchaser objected to the sale on the ground of misrepresentation, it was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that the case was one in which the Court had failed to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it by law, and that the decision was therefore subject to revision under the present section (o). Interference under this section is also appropriate where a Court has no discretionary power to refuse a relief, but refuses the relief, believing that it has a discretionary power to do so. Thus where a Court refused the application of a decree-holder for a rateable distribution under s. 73, though according to its own finding he was clearly entitled to such distribution, on the ground that there was other property of the judgment-debtor available for the satisfaction of his claim, the High Court of Madras interfered under this section (p).

Where a Court in the exercise of its jurisdiction has acted illegally or with material irregularity.—Cl. (c) of the section contemplates cases, other

S. 115. than those referred to in cls. (a) and (b), namely, cases where the Court has either exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it, or failed to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it. It is intended to refer to the class of cases where the Court having jurisdiction and exercising it appears to have acted illegally or with material irregularity in the exercise of such jurisdiction (q). The words "acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity," have given rise to a conflict of opinion. It is therefore best first to state how much is settled law, and then to deal with the various interpretations put on the words "illegally" and "material irregularity" by the various High Courts.

It is settled law that where a Court has jurisdiction to determine a question, and it has determined that question, it cannot be said to have acted illegally or with material irregularity because it has come to an erroneous decision.—The leading case on the subject is Amir Hassan Khan v. Sheo Baksh Singh (r), decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the year 1884. In that case it was laid down by their Lordships that where a Court has jurisdiction to decide the question before it and in fact decides such question, it cannot be regarded as acting in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity, merely because its decision is erroneous. The mere fact that the decision of the Court is wrong affords no ground for the interference of the High Court under this section. In the course of the judgment, their Lordships said: "The question then is, did the Judges of the lower Courts in this case, in the exercise of their jurisdiction, act illegally or with material irregularity? It appears that they had perfect jurisdiction to decide the question which was before them [namely, whether the suit was barred as res judicata], and they did decide it. Whether they decided it rightly or wrongly, they had jurisdiction to decide the case; and even if they decided wrongly, they did not exercise their jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity." Following this decision, it has been held that the High Court will not interfere under this section, merely because the lower Court wrongly decided that the suit was barred by limitation (s), or that it was barred as res judicata (t), or because the lower Court proceeded upon an erroneous construction of the sections of an Act (u), or misunderstood the effect of a document in evidence (v), or excluded evidence which it ought to have admitted (w), or held, though incorrectly, that there was no relation of landlord and tenant between the parties to a suit or proceeding (x). Similarly it has been held that no revision lies from an order passed in appeal refusing to file an award made without the intervention of the Court (y), or from an order passed in appeal remanding a case under O. 41, r. 23 below (z), or from an order passed in appeal that the Court of first instance had jurisdiction to hear the suit (a), though such orders may be erroneous in law. The cases cited above were all cases in which the Court had jurisdiction to decide the question before it, and in fact decided the question, but the decision was impeached as being erroneous in law and was sought to be revised under the present section. In all those cases the High Court held that though there was an error in law, the decision was not open to revision, on the ground that a mere error in law is not an "illegality" within the meaning of this section. In all these cases the High Court might well have said, to use the words of their Lordships of the Privy Council in another case (b), "It [the lower Court] made a sad mistake, it is true, but a Court has jurisdiction to decide wrong as well as right." The point was further emphasized by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Balakrishna v. Vasudeva (c). Referring to this section, their Lordships said: "It will be observed that the section applies to jurisdiction alone, the irregular exercise of it, or the illegal assumption of it. The section is not directed against conclusions of law or fact in which the question of jurisdiction is not involved" (d).

The decision in Amir Hassan Khan's case presupposes jurisdiction in the Court whose decision is sought to be revised on the ground that it is erroneous. Hence the principle of that decision does not apply where a Court erroneously assumes a jurisdiction which is not vested in it by law (e). Thus if a Court proceeding upon an erroneous construction of a section of an Act assumes a jurisdiction which is not vested in it by law, the High Court will interfere in revision and set aside the decree of the lower Court as one passed without jurisdiction (f). Similarly, if a Court wrongly decides that a suit is of a civil nature, and entertains the suit on that basis, the decision is open to revision under clause (a) of this section, for no civil Court is competent to entertain a suit which is not of a civil nature (g); see s. 9 above. Likewise, if a Court proceeding upon a misapprehension of the law declines to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it by law, the High Court has the power to interfere under clause (b) of this section (h). These, however, are cases under clauses (a) and (b) of the present section. They are not cases under clause (c) being the clause now under consideration. The reason why these cases are mentioned here is that it was contended in those cases that as the assumption of jurisdiction or the refusal to exercise it had proceeded upon an error of law, the High Court had no power to interfere under this section, and the decision in Amir Hassan Khan's case was relied upon in support of that contention. But the High Courts held that if the case came under either clause (a) or clause (b), it was immaterial that the assumption of jurisdiction or the refusal to exercise it proceeded upon an error of law. The High Courts also pointed out that the basis of the decision in Amir Hassan Khan's case was that the lower Court had jurisdiction to determine the question before it and that it had determined it, and all that that case decided was that an erroneous decision of a case in the exercise of the Court's jurisdiction was no ground for interference under this section. As stated by the Judicial Committee in a recent case, "the section is not directed against conclusions of law or fact in which the question of jurisdiction is not involved" (i). Where a question of jurisdiction is involved, the High Court is competent to revise a conclusion of law or fact which bears on such question (j).

Amir Hassan Khan's case decides what an illegality or material irregularity is not. What then is an illegality or material irregularity within the meaning of this section? To find an answer to this question, the Courts have adopted Amir Hassan Khan's case as the basis. Different interpretations have been put by different Judges upon the

S. 115. decision in that case and, hence we have a number of conflicting views on the meaning of the words in question of which the principal ones are set forth below :—

1. That the words “acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity” refer only to an error of jurisdiction, and apply only to cases of the kind contemplated by cls. (a) and (b) of this section (k). As against this view it has been said that the words in question did not occur in the Code of 1877, that they were first introduced by the amending Act of 1879, that errors of jurisdiction had already been provided for by the first two clauses of the section, and that the words in question must refer therefore to something else than errors of jurisdiction (l).

2. That the said words refer to errors of procedure only as distinguished from errors of law (m). This view proceeds mainly on the word “acted.” In a recent Calcutta case, Jenkins, C.J., said : “It appears to me that section 115 can only be called in aid when the failure of justice (if any) has been due to one or other of the faults of procedure indicated in that section. If there was an error committed [by the Small Cause Court Judge], it was an error of law, and not of procedure, and in my opinion Mr. Justice Fletcher had no power to interfere” (n).

3. That the said words apply to cases where there is a wilful disregard or conscious violation by a judge of a rule of law or procedure (o). As against this view it has been said that it engrafts upon the Privy Council ruling a qualification to the effect that the High Court can interfere under the present section if the erroneous decision is the result of conscious violation by the lower Court of a rule of law or procedure, and that the distinction is in no way warranted by the language of the section (p). The answer given to that is that if the section did not apply to cases where a Judge consciously violated a rule of law or procedure, a lower Court might wilfully disregard the decisions of the High Court, or even of the Privy Council, and there would be no check upon it (q).

4. That the said words apply to cases where the decision complained of is vitiated by a gross and palpable error (r). According to this view, a mistake, though of law, if gross and palpable, would give jurisdiction to the Court under this section. But this view runs counter to the Privy Council decision (s).

It will be useless to discuss these conflicting views. Suffice it to say, as observed by the judicial Committee in Balakrishna v. Vasudera (ss), that “the section applies to jurisdiction alone, the irregular exercise of it, or the illegal assumption of it. The section is not directed against conclusions of law or fact in which the question of jurisdiction is not involved.”

Having noted the different interpretations put upon the words in question, we proceed to note some of the decisions. A good many of them, it is conceived, will not stand the test laid down in Balakrishna's case.

It is an “illegality” to frame an issue on a point of fact expressly admitted by the defendant and to dismiss the suit on the ground that the fact is not proved (t). Similarly it is an “illegality,” if a Court passes a decree on an unstamped hundi. The Stamp Act expressly provides that an unstamped hundi shall not be acted upon (u) [see Stamp Act II of 1899, s. 35]. It is an "illegality," if the appellate Court calls in question the admissibility of a document not duly stamped after the same has been admitted in evidence in the Court of first instance. Such a course is manifestly against the provisions of the Stamp Act by which it is enacted that when an instrument has been admitted in evidence, such admission shall not be called in question at any stage of the same suit (v) [see Stamp Act II of 1899, s. 35]. It is also an "illegality" to pass a decree where there is no evidence at all to support it (w). It is an illegality to attach in execution of a decree the tools of an artisan contrary to s. 60 of the Code (x), or to attach money in a provident fund regulated by the Provident Funds Act 9 of 1897 (y).

It is a "material irregularity" within the meaning of this section if a Court, taking a mistaken view of the questions at issue, proceeds to determine an issue which does not really arise in the case, and bases its decision of the case on a determination of that issue (z). It is also a material irregularity to treat the delivery of a summons by post to a person who was not shown to have been the defendant as good service, and to pass a decree ex parte against the defendant on that footing (a); or to attach in execution of a personal decree against a defendant property which he holds as trustee for another (b), or to make an order against a person without hearing him at all (c). It is also a material irregularity for a Court to decline to go into evidence when required to do so, and to proceed to dispose of the suit upon the pleadings or upon allegations made in a petition (d); or to refuse to draw up its own decree, whether it be preliminary or final (e); or to refuse to grant a certificate for a refund of court-fees paid on the memorandum of appeal when a case is remanded under O. 41, r. 23 (f) [Court Fees Act 7 of 1870, s. 13]. It is also a material irregularity to apply to a case a section of an Act which is not applicable to it (g).

Wrong decision of the lower appellate Court that the first Court had or had not jurisdiction to entertain a suit.—It has been held by the Madras (h) Bombay (i) and Allahabad (j) High Courts, though on different grounds, that the High Court has jurisdiction to interfere under this section where the lower appellate Court erroneously decides in the exercise of its admitted jurisdiction as an appellate Court that the Court of first instance had or had not jurisdiction to entertain a suit. The Calcutta decisions are not uniform, it being held in some cases that the High Court has jurisdiction (k), while in others that it has not (l). Cases of the kind referred to above arise where a court which has jurisdiction to entertain a suit returns the plaint in the suit on the ground that it has no jurisdiction, and the lower appellate Court erroneously affirms the decision of the Court of first instance; or where a Court which has no jurisdiction to entertain a suit accepts the plaint holding that it has jurisdiction, and the lower appellate Court erroneously affirms the decision; or where a Court which has jurisdiction to

According to the Madras, Bombay and Allahabad decisions the High Court has power in all these cases to revise the decisions of the lower appellate Court, according to some Judges, under the first part of this section, that is, under cl. (a) or cl. (b), and, according to others, under cl. (c).

Award.—See notes to Schedule II, paragraph 16, under the heading “Revision.”

Gross miscarriage of justice.—The interference of the High Court under this section in cases where the lower Court has acted illegally or with material irregularity should be confined to cases where the illegality or irregularity was such as had occasioned or might occasion a substantial failure of justice (m). Hence the judgment of a lower Court should not be set aside upon a mere technicality (n).

Sanction to prosecute.—Where a Civil or a Revenue Court, acting under s. 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code, grants or refuses an application to prosecute a party to the suit or witnesses before it, it is a decision of a case within the meaning of the present section. The High Court, therefore, has no jurisdiction to interfere under s. 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code and to call for the proceedings of the lower Court under that section. But it has power under s. 115 of this Code as also under section 15 of the High Courts Act [now s. 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915] to call for the proceedings and to pass such order as it may deem expedient. In other words, the application in such cases lies on the civil revisional side of the High Court, and not on the criminal revisional side. But the Bench exercising criminal jurisdiction may deal with the matter, if authorised to do so by the Chief Justice under section 14 of the High Courts Act [now s. 108 of the Government of India Act, 1915] (o). The rule is the same where action has been taken by a Subordinate Civil Court under s. 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code (p). See also the undermentioned cases (q).

Appeal.—By cl. 15 of the Letters Patent as amended in March 1919 it is provided that no appeal lies from an order made in the exercise of revisional jurisdiction. Prior to the amendment there was a conflict of decisions as to whether an appeal lay to the High Court under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent from the judgment of a single Judge delivered in the exercise of revisional jurisdiction under this section. The position was this: it was enacted by cl. 15 of the Letters Patent as it stood before the amendment that an appeal shall lie to the High Court from the judgment of one Judge of the High Court or one Judge of any Division Court pursuant to s. 13 of the Charter Act. Now s. 13 of the Charter Act provides for the exercise by the Judges of the High Court of the original and appellate jurisdiction vested in the High Court. This gave rise to the question whether the division of jurisdiction into original and appellate was exhaustive or not. If the division was exhaustive, revisional jurisdiction must be treated as comprised in appellate jurisdiction, so that an appeal would lie under cl. 15 from the judgment of a single Judge exercising revisional jurisdiction. But if the division was not exhaustive, so that revisional jurisdiction was something outside the original and appellate jurisdiction, the case would not be one under s. 13 of the Charter Act, and no appeal could therefore lie under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent. It was held by the High Courts of Madras (r) and Calcutta (s), that the division of the jurisdiction of High Courts into original and appellate was exhaustive and that revisional jurisdiction was included in appellate jurisdiction, and that an appeal therefore lay under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent from an order of a single Judge made under the present section, provided such order amounted to a "judgment" within the meaning of the said clause. The High Court of Bombay took the contrary view (t). It does not, however, appear that there was any "judgment" in the Bombay case (u).

Sub-section (2) of this section by which it was provided that nothing in this Code shall extend or apply to any Judge of a High Court in the exercise of jurisdiction as an insolvent Court has been repealed by the Presidency-Towns Insolvency Act III of 1909, s. 127.

PART X.

Rules.

121. [New.] The rules in the First Schedule shall have effect as if enacted in the body of this Code until annulled or altered in accordance with the provisions of this Part.

Effect of rules in First Schedule.

The whole of this Part is new, except ss. 129, 130 and 131, which correspond to s. 652, paras. 2, 3 and 4, of the Code of 1882.

As to annulment and alterations of rules, see s. 124.

122. [New. Cf. S. 652, first para.] High Courts established under the Indian High Courts Act, 1861, or the Government of India Act, 1915, and the Chief Court of Lower Burma, may, from time to time after previous publication, make rules regulating their own procedure and the procedure of the Civil Courts subject to their superintendence, and may by such rules annul, alter or add to all or any of the rules in the First Schedule.

Power of certain High Courts to make rules.

The italicized words were inserted in the section by the Amending Act 13 of 1916.

The words "Chief Court of Lower Burma" were substituted for the words "Chief Courts of the Punjab and Lower Burma" by the Repealing and Amending Act 18 of 1919. The Chief Court of the Punjab is now the High Court of Lahore.

The rules made under this section by the High Courts are set out in Appendices at the end of this work.

Sections 122 to 128 excepting s. 125 provide for rules to be made by the Chartered High Courts and the Chief Court of Lower Burma for regulating their own procedure and the procedure of the Civil Courts subject to their superintendence, in other words, Courts subject to their appellate jurisdiction (See High Courts Act, 1861, s. 15, and Government of India Act, 1915, s. 107). These rules must not be inconsistent with the provisions in the body of the Code (see s. 128). Further, they are subject to the previous approval of the authorities mentioned in s. 126. Sec. 129 provides for rules to be made by Chartered High Courts as to their original civil jurisdiction. These rules may be inconsistent with the provisions in the body of the Code, but they must not be inconsistent with the Letters Patent establishing those Courts.

None of the Courts empowered under this section to frame rules has power by any rule that it may make to alter the period of limitation prescribed by the Indian Limitation Act (w).

123. [New.] (1) A Committee, to be called the Rule Committee, shall be constituted at the town which is the usual place of sitting of each of the High Courts and of the Chief Court referred to in section 122. S. 123.

(2) Each such Committee shall consist of the following persons, namely :—

(a) three judges of the High Court established at the town at which such Committee is constituted, one of whom at least has served as a District Judge, or (in Burma) a Divisional Judge for three years,

(b) a barrister practising in that Court,

(c) an advocate (not being a barrister) or vakil or pleader enrolled in that Court,

(d) a Judge of a Civil Court subordinate to the High Court; and

(e) in the towns of Calcutta, Madras and Bombay an attorney.

(3) The members of each such Committee shall be appointed by the Chief Justice or Chief Judge, who shall also nominate one of their number to be president :

Provided that, if the Chief Justice or Chief Judge elects to be himself a member of a Committee, the number of other Judges appointed to be members shall be two, and the Chief Justice or Chief Judge shall be the President of the Committee.

(4) Each member of any such Committee shall hold office for such period as may be prescribed by the Chief Justice or Chief Judge in this behalf ; and whenever any member retires, resigns, dies or ceases to reside in the province in which the Committee was constituted, or becomes incapable of acting as a member of the Committee, the said Chief Justice or Chief Judge may appoint another person to be a member in his stead.

(5) There shall be a Secretary to each such Committee, who shall be appointed by the Chief Justice or Chief Judge and shall receive such remuneration as may be provided in this behalf by the Governor-General in Council or by the Local Government, as the case may be.

The words "the town which is the usual place of sitting of each of the High Courts and Chief Courts referred to in section 122" in sub-sec. (1) were substituted for the words "each of the towns of Calcutta, Madras, Bombay, Allahabad, Lahore and Rangoon" by the Amending Act 13 of 1916. By the Repealing and Amending Act 18 of 1919, the words "of the Chief Court" were substituted for the words "Chief Courts."

The words and brackets "(in Burma)" in cl. (a) of sub-sec. (2) were substituted for the words and brackets "(in the Punjab or Burma)" by the Repealing and Amending Act 18 of 1919.

124. [New.] Every Rule Committee shall make a report to the High Court established at the town at which it is constituted on any proposal to annul, alter or add to the rules in the First Schedule or to make new rules, and before making any rules under section 122 the High Court shall take such report into consideration.

Committee to report to High Court.

The provisions as to Rule Committees apply to Chartered High Courts and the Chief Court of Lower Burma as regards rules to be made under s. 122. Rules under that section can only be made after those Courts have taken the opinion of the Rule Committee attached to them.

125. [New.] High Courts, other than the Courts specified in section 122, may exercise the powers conferred by that section in such manner and subject to such conditions as the Governor-General in Council may determine:

Power of other High Courts to make rules.

Provided that any such High Court may, after previous publication, make a rule extending within the local limits of its jurisdiction any rules which have been made by any other High Court.

The rules to be made under this section should not be inconsistent with the provisions in the body of this Code. See s. 128, and contrast s. 129.

As to sanction, see s. 126.

126. [New.] Rules made under the foregoing provisions shall be subject to the previous approval of the following authorities, namely:—

Rules subject to sanction.

(a) if the rule is made by a High Court established under the Indian High Courts Act, 1861, or the Government of India Act, 1915, to the approval of the authority prescribed by the proviso to section 107 of the latter Act for rules made under that section;

(b) if the rule is made by any other High Court, to the approval of the Local Government.

The word "approval" in the section was substituted for the word "sanction" wherever it occurred in the section by the Amending Act 13 of 1916.

The words and figures "or the Government of India Act, 1915," were inserted in the section by the Amending Act 13 of 1916. The words and figures "the proviso to section 107 of the latter Act" were substituted for the words and figures "section 15 of that Act" also by the Amending Act 13 of 1916.

Sanction.—This section requires, in the case of rules to be made by Chartered High Courts, the same sanction as is required by s. 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915, the object being that the rule-making power should correspond with the power conferred under section 107 of that Act. That section empowers the Chartered High Courts to make and issue general rules for regulating the practice and proceedings of Courts subject to their appellate jurisdiction, subject to the previous approval, in the case of the High Court of Calcutta, of the Governor-General in Council, and in other cases of the local Government.

127. [New.] Rules so made and approved shall be published in the Gazette of India or in the local official Gazette, as the case may be, and shall from the date of publication or from such other date as may be specified have the same force and effect, within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the High Court which made them, as if they had been contained in the First Schedule.

The word "approved" was substituted for the word "sanctioned" by the Repealing and Amending Act 24 of 1917, sch. I.

128. [New.] (1) Such rules shall be not inconsistent with the provisions in the body of this Code, but, subject thereto, may provide for any matters relating to the procedure of Civil Courts.

Matters for which rules may provide.

(2) In particular, and without prejudice to the generality of the powers conferred by sub-section (1), such rules may provide for all or any of the following matters, namely :—

(a) the service of summonses, notices and other process by post or in any other manner either generally or in any specified areas, and the proof of such service ;

(b) the maintenance and custody, while under attachment, of live-stock and other moveable property, the fees payable for such maintenance and custody, the sale of such live-stock and property and the proceeds of such sale ;

- (c) procedure in suits by way of counter-claim, and the valuation of such suits for the purposes of jurisdiction ;
- (d) procedure in garnishee and charging orders either in addition to, or in substitution for, the attachment and sale of debts :
- (e) procedure where the defendant claims to be entitled to contribution or indemnity over against any person whether a party to the suit or not (x) .
- (f) summary procedure—
 - (i) in suits in which the plaintiff seeks only to recover a debt or liquidated demand in money payable by the defendant, with or without interest, arising—
 - on a contract, express or implied ; or
 - on an enactment where the sum sought to be recovered is a fixed sum of money or in the nature of a debt other than a penalty ; or
 - on a guarantee, where the claim against the principal is in respect of a debt or a liquidated demand only ; or such rules not inconsistent with the Letters Patent establishing it to regulate its own procedure in the exercise of its original civil jurisdiction as it shall think fit, and nothing herein contained shall affect the validity of any such rules in force at the commencement of this Code.

The italicized words were inserted in the section by the Amending Act 13 of 1916.

Rules as to original civil procedure of Chartered High Courts.—Rules made under s. 122 must not be inconsistent with the provisions in the body of this Code. Under this section any Chartered High Court may make rules to regulate its own procedure in the exercise of its original civil jurisdiction. Such rules may not be consistent with the provisions in the body of the Code, but they must not be inconsistent with the Letters Patent establishing it.

130. [S. 652, second para.] A High Court not established under the Indian High Courts Act, 1861, or the Government of India Act, 1915, may, with the previous approval of the

The words and figures “or the Government of India Act, 1915,” were inserted in the section by the Amending Act 13 of 1916. The words “or section 107 respectively of those Acts” were substituted for the words “of that Act” also by the Amending Act 13 of 1916.

The word “approval” was substituted for the word “sanction” by the Repealing and Amending Act 24 of 1917, sch. I.

PART XI.

Miscellaneous.

182. [S. 640.] (1) Women who, according to the customs and manners of the country, ought not to be compelled to appear in public shall be exempt from personal appearance in Court.

Exemption of certain women from personal appearance.

(2) Nothing herein contained shall be deemed to exempt such women from arrest in execution of civil process in any case in which the arrest of women is not prohibited by this Code.

See notes to O. 26, r. 1, under the head "Persons exempted from attending Court."

183. [S. 641.] (1) The Local Government may, by notification in the local official Gazette, exempt from personal appearance in Court any person whose rank, in the opinion of such Government, entitles him to the privilege of exemption.

Exemption of other persons.

(2) The names and residences of the persons so exempted shall, from time to time, be forwarded to the High Court by the Local Government and a list of such persons as reside within the local limits of the jurisdiction of each Court subordinate to the High Court shall be kept in such subordinate Court.

(3) Where any person so exempted claims the privilege of such exemption, and it is consequently necessary to examine him by commission, he shall pay the costs of that commission, unless the party requiring his evidence pays such costs.

See O. 26, r. 1.

184. [New.] The provisions of sections 55, 57 and 59 shall apply, so far as far as may be, to all persons arrested under this Code.

Arrest other than in execution of decree.

This section is new. It supplies an omission.

135. [S. 642.] (1) No Judge, Magistrate or other judicial officer shall be liable to arrest under civil process while going to, presiding in, or returning from, his Court.

S. 135.

Exemption from arrest
under civil process.

(2) Where any matter is pending before a tribunal having jurisdiction therein, or believing in good faith that it has such jurisdiction, the parties thereto, their pleaders, mukhtars, revenue agents, and recognized agents, and their witnesses, acting in obedience to a summons, shall be exempt from arrest under civil process other than process issued by such tribunal for contempt of Court while going to or attending such tribunal for the purpose of such matter, and while returning from such tribunal.

(3) Nothing in sub-section (2) shall enable a judgment-debtor to claim exemption from arrest under an order for immediate execution or where such judgment-debtor attends to show cause why he should not be committed to prison in execution of a decree.

Alterations in the section :—

1. The words "other than process issued by such tribunal for contempt of Court" in sub-s. (2) have been added to give effect to a Calcutta decision (y).

2. Sub-section (3) is new. It has been substituted for the words "except as provided in section 337A, sub-section (5), and sections 256 and 643" which occurred at the commencement of sub-section (2) in the Code of 1882.

Grounds of exemption from arrest.—The exemption here conferred is not for the personal benefit of the individual, but for the furthering of public interests and the better administration of justice. In other words, the exemption is not the privilege, of the person attending the Court, but that of the Court which he attends. If, therefore, a witness does not believe bona fide that his attendance was required, there is no privilege (z). For the same reason where a writ of attachment for contempt of Court has been issued against a party to a suit, he cannot claim privilege from arrest while proceeding to Court for the purpose of attending the hearing of the suit (a).

While going to or attending and while returning from Court.—A party to a suit is exempt from arrest under this section while going to or attending the Court before which the suit is pending, and while returning from such Court. The following are the leading cases bearing on this part of the section :—

(1) Where a plaintiff who was a native of Patna, and who had instituted a suit in the High Court of Madras, left Patna on receiving a letter from his solicitors that his presence was required, and arrived at Madras on 24th October, and the suit having come on for hearing on the 27th of October was adjourned till the 25th of December, and he was arrested in execution of a decree against him on the 10th of November, it was held by the High Court of Madras that he was privileged from arrest (b). It is difficult to conceive how it can be said of the plaintiff in this case that he was going to, or attending or returning from the Court at the time of his arrest. This decision has been disapproved by the Allahabad High Court (c).

(2) A, residing in Bombay, goes to Benares to prosecute an application to set aside an ex parte decree passed against him by the Benares Court, and puts up at a Dak bungalow in Benares. On the date fixed for the hearing of the application A attends the Court when his application is heard and dismissed. He then leaves the Court, returns to the Dak bungalow, and thence proceeds to the railway station where he is arrested while actually seated in the train in execution of the ex parte decree. It is found on evidence that A had taken a ticket for Allahabad when arrested. On the above facts the High Court of Allahabad held that A's arrest was legal. The Court said: "In the present case [A] had left the Court and had returned to the place where [he] was staying in Benares; he had then left that place and [was] actually on his way to Allahabad which is not his home. In these circumstances we cannot hold that he, at the time of arrest, was returning from a tribunal within the meaning of section 135" (d).

(3) The exemption from arrest continues during such period as is reasonably occupied in going to, attending at, and returning from the place of trial (e). But if there is a deviation, the privilege is forfeited. It is not a deviation sufficient to forfeit the privilege if the shortest road home is deviated from, and a less crowded and more convenient road adopted (f).

(4) A debtor who is released from jail under an order of the Court on the ground that the order under which he was committed was illegal, may be arrested under civil process immediately after he is released. He is not privileged from arrest as returning from Court. It does not follow, because imprisonment followed on an order which was illegal, that he should be treated when released from jail as returning from Court (g).

"Parties."—A defendant in a summary suit under O. 37 [Code of 1882, chapter 39] is privileged from arrest, though he has not obtained leave to defend the suit (h).

Civil process.—This section only applies to witnesses and parties arrested under writs issued by Courts to which the Code applies. Hence the section does not apply where a party is arrested under a writ issued from a Small Cause Court. There being no provision in the Small Cause Court Act corresponding to this section, questions as to exemption from arrest in the case of persons arrested under writs issued from Small Cause Courts must be governed by the principles of the English law on the subject. These are very much the same as those set forth in the present section (i).

136. [S. 648.] (1) Where an application is made that any person shall be arrested or that any property shall be attached under any provision of this Code not relating to the execution of decrees, and such person resides or such property is situate outside the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court to which the application

136, 137.

(2) The District Court shall, on receipt of such copy and amount, cause the arrest or attachment to be made by its own officers, or by a Court subordinate to itself, and shall inform the Court which issued or made such warrant or order of the arrest or attachment.

(3) The Court making an arrest under this section shall send the person arrested to the Court by which the warrant of arrest was issued, unless he shows cause to the satisfaction of the former Court why he should not be sent to the latter Court, or unless he furnishes sufficient security for his appearance before the latter Court or for satisfying any decree that may be passed against him by that Court, in either of which cases the Court making the arrest shall release him.

(4) Where a person to be arrested or moveable property to be attached under this section is within the local limits of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal or at Madras or at Bombay, or of the Chief Court of Lower Burma, the copy of the warrant of arrest or of the order of attachment, and the probable amount of the costs of the arrest or attachment, shall be sent to the Court of Small Causes of Calcutta, Madras, Bombay or Rangoon, as the case may be, and that Court, on receipt of the copy and amount, shall proceed as if it were the District Court.

137. [S. 645.] (1) The language which, on the commencement of this Code, is the language of any Court subordinate to a High Court shall continue to be the language of such subordinate Court until the Local Government otherwise directs.

(2) The Local Government may declare what shall be the language of any such Court and in what character applications to and proceedings in such Court shall be written.

Sub-section (3) is new.

138. [S. 185A.] (1) The Local Government may, by notification in the local official Gazette, direct with respect to any Judge specified in the notification or falling under a description set forth therein, that evidence in cases in which an appeal is allowed shall be taken down by him in the English language and in manner prescribed.

139. [S. 197.] In the case of any affidavit under this Code—

- (c) any officer appointed by any other Court which the Local Government has generally or specially empowered in this behalf.

(2) Every such assessor shall receive such fees for his attendance, to be paid by such of the parties as the Court may direct or as may be prescribed.

141. [S. 647.] The procedure provided in this Code in regard to suits shall be followed, as far as it can be made applicable, in all proceedings in any Court of civil jurisdiction.

Miscellaneous proceedings.

This section does not apply to proceedings in execution.—S. 647 of the Code of 1882, as it stood when that Code was first enacted, ran as follows;—

“The procedure herein prescribed shall be followed, as far as it can be made applicable, in all proceedings in any Court of civil jurisdiction other than suits and appeals.”

The question arose under that section whether the words “proceedings other than suits and appeals” included proceedings in execution; in other words, whether that section had the effect of rendering the provisions of the Code relating to suits applicable to proceedings in execution of a decree. On the one hand, it was held by the High Courts of Allahabad (j) and Bombay (k), that that section applied to applications to execute decrees, so that the procedure relating to suits was to be applied to applications for execution. On the other hand, it was held by the High Court of Calcutta that that section did not apply to proceedings in execution (l). In this state of authorities the Legislature intervened, and an Explanation was added into the section by the Civil Procedure Code Amendment Act 6 of 1892, which ran as follows:—

“Explanation.—This section does not apply to applications for the execution of decrees which are proceedings in suits.”

The effect of the above Explanation was to supersede the Allahabad and Bombay rulings above referred to, and to give legislative sanction to the Calcutta decision.

In the meantime one of the Allahabad cases referred to above, namely, the case of Fakir-ullah v. Thakur Prasad (m), was taken up to the Privy Council, and that tribunal held, in the year 1894, that independently of the Explanation, s. 647 did not apply to applications for execution, but only to original matters in the nature of suits, such as proceedings in probates, guardianships, and so forth, thus overruling the Allahabad and Bombay cases (n). This decision, if it had been passed three years earlier, would have rendered the Explanation unnecessary. Now that we have got the Privy Council decision, and the rule firmly established that s. 647 does not apply to proceedings in execution, the Explanation is unnecessary, and it has accordingly been omitted in the present section (o). At the same time two alterations have been made in the section, namely, (1) the words “in regard to suits” have been added, and (2) the words “other

S. 141. than suits and appeals" have been omitted. In so doing the Legislature has now done what it could have done equally well in the year 1892.

The reason why the words "other than suits and appeals" which occurred at the end of s. 647 have been omitted in the present section is this. S. 647 applied to proceedings "other than suits and appeals." The High Court of Allahabad held that applications for the execution of decrees were proceedings "other than suits and appeals" and that s. 647 applied therefore to such applications (p). On the other hand, the High Court of Calcutta held that applications for the execution of decrees were not proceedings "other than suits and appeals" they being proceedings in suits, and that s. 647 did not therefore apply to such applications (q). The Legislature adopted the view of the Calcutta High Court, and enacted by way of Explanation to the section that the "section does not apply to applications for the execution of decrees which are proceedings in suits." It would have been a shorter cut if the Legislature had amended s. 647 by deleting the words "other than suits and appeals", as it was those words that gave rise to the conflict, instead of adding into the section an Explanation which certainly was not happily worded. What the Legislature omitted to do in the year 1892 has been done in 1908.

This section, we have said, does not apply to proceedings in execution; that is to say, the procedure provided in the Code in regard to suits does not apply to applications for execution of decrees. We proceed to note the decisions on the subject:—

1. The provisions of s. 11 relating to res judicata in regard to suits do not apply to applications for the execution of decrees. But though these provisions do not in terms apply to applications for execution, they are governed by principles analogous to those of res judicata. See notes to s. 11, p. 64 above

2. The provisions of O. 2, r. 2 [Code of 1882, s. 43] do not apply to applications for execution. Hence where a decree awards two distinct reliefs, an application to enforce one relief is no bar to a subsequent application to enforce the other relief, though both reliefs have been awarded by the same decree (r).

3. The provisions of O. 9 [Code of 1882, ss. 96 to 109] do not apply to applications for execution. Hence if the applicant fails to appear at the hearing of the application, the Court cannot dismiss the application under O. 9, r. 8 [Code of 1882, s. 102], though it may do so under its inherent power (s). And where in the exercise of this power an application for execution is dismissed, the Court has no power to restore it to the file under O. 9, r. 9 [Code of 1882, s. 103] (t) for that rule does not apply to execution proceedings. But though the Court has no power to restore to the file an application which has once been dismissed for default, such dismissal is no bar to a fresh application for execution (u).

4. The provisions of O. 17, rr. 2-3 [Code of 1882, ss. 157-158] do not apply to applications for execution. Hence an order dismissing an application for default is no bar to a fresh application for execution (v).

5. The provisions of O. 23, r. 1 [Code of 1882, s. 373] do not apply to applications for execution. Hence the withdrawal of an application, though it be without the leave of the Court, is no bar to a fresh application for execution (w). See now O. 23, r. 4.

"Proceedings in any Court of civil jurisdiction."—The proceedings spoken of in this section refer to original matters in the nature of suits, such as proceedings in probate, guardianship and so forth, and do not include execution (x). An application under s. 18 of the Religious Endowments Act, 1863, is a proceeding of this nature. Hence it must be verified as required by O. 6, r. 15 of the Code (y). A petition by a company to the High Court under the Indian Companies Memorandum of Association Act, 1895, for the confirmation of a special resolution altering the Memorandum of Association of the Company is also a proceeding of the kind contemplated by this section. Therefore where the petition was dismissed, and the company applied for leave to appeal to the Privy Council, the case was dealt with by the Court under s. 595 of the Code of 1882, now s. 109 (z). An application for the appointment of a Common Manager under s. 93 of the Bengal Tenancy Act 8 of 1885 is a proceeding of the kind contemplated by this section; a receiver therefore may be appointed under O. 40, r. 1, pending the application (a). Disciplinary proceedings taken under s. 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act 18 of 1879 are "not proceedings in any Court of civil jurisdiction" within the meaning of this section; therefore the procedure provided by s. 24 of the Code should not be followed in those proceedings (b). An application under para. 17 of Schedule II to file an agreement to refer to arbitration comes within this section; hence an applicant may under that para join several causes of action in one and the same application as provided by O. 2, r. 3 below (c).

The procedure provided in this Code.—This section extends the procedure provided in this Code in regard to suits to proceedings in civil Courts. It does not confer any substantive right upon any party to such proceedings not expressly given elsewhere by the Code, e.g., a right of appeal [s. 96] (d). Nor does it confer upon any Court entertaining such proceedings a power not expressly given elsewhere by the Code, e.g., the power to refer questions to the High Court [s. 113] (e).

Application for restitution.

restitution or otherwise, cause such restitution to be made as will, so far as may be, place the parties in the position which they would have occupied but for such decree or such part thereof as has been varied or reversed and, for this purpose, the Court may make any orders, including orders for the refund of costs and for the payment of interest, damages, compensation and mesne profits, which are properly consequential on such variation or reversal.

(2) No suit shall be instituted for the purpose of obtaining any restitution or other relief which could be obtained by application under sub-section (1).

The old section.—S. 583 of the Code of 1882 ran as follows:—

“When a party entitled to any benefit (by way of restitution or otherwise) under a decree passed in an appeal under this chapter desires to obtain execution of the same, he shall apply to the Court which passed the decree against which the appeal was preferred; and such Court shall proceed to execute the decree passed in appeal, according to the rules hereinbefore prescribed for the execution of decrees in suits.”

The new section.—Sub-sec. (1) of the present section is s. 583 so recast as to give legislative recognition to the practice founded on that section.

Sub-sec. (2) is new See notes below under the head “Sub-section (2): bar of suit,” and under the head “Where a decree is varied or reversed.”

Restitution.—The word “restitution” in this section means restoring to a party what he has lost in execution of a decree passed against him on the decree being varied or reversed in appeal. The granting of restitution is not discretionary. The principle of the doctrine of restitution is that on the reversal of a decree in appeal the law raises an obligation in the party to the suit who received the benefit of the erroneous decree to make restitution to the other party for what he has lost (f). The decree of reversal necessarily carries with it the right to restitution of all that has been taken under the erroneous decree; and the Court in making restitution is bound to restore the parties, so far as they can be restored, to the same position they were in at the time when the Court by its erroneous action had displaced them from it (g).

The doctrine of restitution contemplates the case where property has been received by a decree-holder in execution of a decree, and the decree or part thereof is subsequently varied or reversed on appeal by the judgment-debtor. In such a case, the procedure to be adopted by the judgment-debtor is to apply under this section to the Court of first instance for restitution of the property and for consequential relief. On such application being made, the Court shall cause restitution to be made to the judgment-debtor (the successful appellant). The restitution to be made must be such as will, so far as may be, place the parties in the position which they would have occupied but for the decree appealed from or such part thereof as has been varied or reversed (h). This principle applies with equal force whether restitution has or has not been directed in the appellate decree (i). For the purpose of making such restitution as aforesaid, the Court may make any orders, including orders for the refund of costs (j), and for the payment of interest (k), damages (l), compensation and mesne profits (m), which are properly consequential on such variation or reversal. In directing restitution it is to be noted that the parties must be placed in the same position as they were previously in irrespective of any other rights accruing to any of them during the litigation (n). Where an order is made against a party for restitution, but restitution is not made the order may be enforced by sale of his property (o).

The decree is subsequently reversed in appeal. B is entitled on an application under this section to restitution of the property [or of the timber or of the money], though there may be no direction for restitution in the decree of the appellate Court: Munshi Dinesh Proshad v. Shanker (1904) 9 Cal. W. N. 381; Balvantrav v. Sadrudin (1889) 13 Bom. 45; Bhagwan v. Ummat-ul-Hasnain (1896) 18 All. 262.

(2) A obtains a decree against B for Rs. 5,000, and recovers the amount in execution. In Rodger v. Comptoir d'Escompte de Paris (p), which is the leading case on the subject, Lord Cairns, in delivering the judgment of the Privy Council, observed as follows: "It is contended on the part of the respondents here [that is, A in the present illustration], that the principal sum being restored to the present petitioners [that is B in the present illustration], they have no right to recover from them any interest. It is obvious that, if that is so, injury, and very grave injury, will be done to the petitioners. They will, by reason of an act of the Court, have paid a sum which, it is now ascertained, was ordered to be paid by mistake and wrongfully. They will recover that sum after a lapse of a considerable time, but they will recover it without the ordinary fruits which are derived from the enjoyment of money. On the other hand, these fruits will have been enjoyed, or may have been enjoyed, by the person who by mistake and by wrong obtained possession of the money under a judgment which has been reversed. So far, therefore, as principle is concerned, their Lordships have no doubt or hesitation in saying that injustice will be done to the petitioners and

These observations apply equally to mesne profits which form the subject of the next illustration.

(3) A obtains a decree against B for possession of certain immoveable property and in execution of the decree obtains possession of the property. The decree is subsequently reversed in appeal. B is entitled to possession of the property together with mesne profits during the period of dispossession: see the cases cited in foot-note (m) on p. 311. If the property has in the meantime been let out by A to tenants, B is entitled to remove any tenant who refuses to vacate: Rohni Singh v. Hodding (1894) 21 Cal. 340. And it would seem that even if the property was sold by A, B would be entitled to possession against the purchaser: Dorasami v. Annasami (1900) 23 Mad. 306.

Splitting of claim for restitution.—A obtains a decree against B for possession of an immoveable property, and recovers possession of the property pursuant to the decree. B appeals from the decree, and the decree is reversed in appeal. B then applies for restitution of the property, and the property is restored to him. Subsequently B applies for mesne profits during which A was in possession of the property. Is B debarred from claiming mesne profits on the ground that he ought to have included the claim for mesne profits in the application for restitution of the property? No; the provision of O. 2, r. 2, do not apply to applications for restitution (q). Similarly, a judgment-debtor who applies for and obtains restitution of a sum of money on reversal by the appellate Court of the decree pursuant to which he had paid the sum to the decree-holder is not precluded from making a fresh application for recovery of interest for the period during which the decree-holder had the use of the money (r).

Inherent power to grant restitution.—The power of a Court to grant restitution is not confined to the cases covered by the provisions of this section. It extends also to cases which do not come strictly within this section. The reason is that a Court has an inherent right irrespective of this section to order restitution (s).

In the exercise of their inherent power the Courts have applied the principle of this section to cases which were not strictly within the terms of the section. Thus where A sued B to establish his right to a fund in Court, and B was allowed to draw the money on giving an undertaking to the Court to repay it if A succeeded in the suit, and A succeeded in establishing his title, it was held that though the undertaking given by B did not provide for the payment of interest, the Court had inherent power to order B to repay the money with interest (t). See notes below under the head "Where a decree is varied or reversed."

Who may apply for restitution.—"Any party entitled to any benefit by way of restitution or otherwise" may apply under this section.

(1) The expression "any party" is not confined to parties to the appeal in which the decree has been reversed or modified. It includes every person against whom the decree appealed from was passed, though he was not a party to the appeal, provided the appeal is in effect and substance in favour of such person (u). This would especially be the case where the decree appealed from proceeds on a ground common to all the plaintiffs or to all the defendants (v): see :O. 41, r. 4. A obtains a decree against B and C. The decree proceeds on a ground common to both B and C. B alone appeals from the decree. The decree is reversed in appeal. C is entitled to claim restitution under this section, though he was not a party to the appeal.

(2) Further, the expression "any party" includes the transferee of a decree passed in appeal. A obtains a decree against B for Rs. 5,000. B appeals from the decree. Pending the appeal A realizes from B Rs. 5,000 in execution. The decree is subsequently reversed in appeal. B assigns the decree passed in appeal (in his favour) to C. C is entitled, as transferee of B's decree, to the benefit of that decree and he may apply under this section for an order directing A to pay to him what B would be entitled to, namely, Rs. 5,000 and interest (w).

Against whom restitution may be claimed.—

(1) Transferee of decree reversed in appeal.—In two Allahabad cases decided under the old section it was held that restitution could not be claimed by application under that section against the transferee of a decree reversed in appeal, though the transferee had obtained the full benefit of the decree by execution, unless he was joined as a party to the appeal (x). The point of the decision may be explained by an illustration. A obtains a decree against B, and assigns the decree to C. C applies for execution of the decree against B, and obtains payment of the decretal amount. B appeals from the decree, and the decree is reversed in appeal. It was held under the old section that B could not claim restitution against C by summary process under that section unless C was joined as a party to the appeal (y). Those decisions might perhaps be supported on the ground that where a party sought restitution under the old section, he had to proceed by an application to execute the decree passed on appeal, and that a decree could not be executed against persons not parties to the appeal. The language of the present section is much wider, and it is submitted that the Court has power under this section to order C to make restitution to B on an application by the latter in that behalf. See also s. 146. [It is worth noting that according to the same High Court, B could not claim restitution against C even by way of suit, the reason given being that B could have no cause of action in such a case against C. But this decision has been dissented from by the High Court of Madras (z)].

(2) Auction-purchaser.—Restitution cannot be obtained under this section against a bonâ fide purchaser for value at an auction sale held by a Court which had jurisdiction to sell the same (a). It is otherwise, however, where the decree-holder himself is the purchaser. See notes to s. 65, "Effect of reversal of decree upon sale," p. 182 above.

(3) Surety.—This section applies only to the parties or their representatives and does not apply to sureties. Hence restitution cannot be claimed under this section against a surety (aa).

Sub-section (2): bar of suit.—This sub-section is new. It provides in express terms that where restitution could be obtained by application under this section no separate suit shall be brought in respect of it. The decisions under the Code of 1882 were not uniform, it having been held in some cases that a separate suit for restitution was barred, and in others that it was not (b).

Under s. 583 of the Code of 1882, proceedings for restitution had to be commenced by an application for execution of the appellate decree. This was required by the language of that section. The section further directed that the appellate decree should be executed "according to the rules prescribed for the execution of decrees in suits." That gave rise to the question whether the rule contained in s. 244 [now s. 47] which provided that all questions relating to execution should be determined by the Court executing the decree and not by a separate suit, was one of the rules referred to in s. 583. It was held in some cases that it was, and that a separate suit for restitution was therefore barred. In other cases it was held that it was not, and that a separate suit could be maintained for restitution. The present section simplifies matters by omitting all reference to execution. The position of the section has also been changed, it being transferred from the chapter headed "Of appeals from original decrees" to Part IX headed "Miscellaneous." A separate suit is now barred by the express terms of the section, and the application for restitution is no longer one for execution of the appellate decree. The Court is empowered to make such order as it deems proper for restitution, and the order if not obeyed, may be enforced as a decree (bb) [see s. 36].

Where a decree is varied or reversed.—The old section applied only where the decree of reversal was a decree passed in first appeal, or where, by virtue of s. 587 [now s. 108], it was one passed in second appeal. It was held not to apply where restitution was claimed on the reversal of a decree in appeal to the Privy Council (c), or in review (d). This was because the words of that section were, "When a party entitled to any benefit by way of restitution or otherwise under a decree passed in an appeal under this chapter," that is, chapter 41 relating to appeals from original decrees.

As regards the present section there is a difference of opinion. According to one view, the section applies in all cases where a decree is varied or reversed, regardless of the Court by which it is varied or reversed (e). According to another view, the section does not apply unless the decree is varied or reversed by a Court superior to the one that passed it. This view is based on the ground that the words "Court of first instance" in this section are used to distinguish the Court which is to grant the restitution from some other Court which has varied or reversed the decree (f). According to the former view, restitution may be ordered under this section when an ex-parte decree is set aside under O. 9, r. 13, though it be by the Court that passed it (g). According to the latter view, restitution cannot be ordered under this section (h), though it may be granted by the court in the exercise of its inherent jurisdiction under s. 151 (hh). The former view, it is submitted, is correct. The words "Court of first instance" do not control the operation of the general words "when a decree is varied or reversed." But however that may be, there is no doubt that to attract the application of this section there must be a "decree" which is varied or reversed. Thus where A obtained a decree against B, and in execution of the decree purchased certain property belonging to B and took possession of it, and the sale was subsequently set aside and possession restored to B, it was held in an application by B for mesne profits that there being no "decree" that was set aside, this section did not apply, but that the Court may in the exercise of its inherent power direct A to pay mesne profits to B during the period A was in possession of the property (i).

See notes above, "Inherent power to grant restitution."

Jurisdiction of Court under this section.—Suppose the damages claimed in lieu of restitution exceed the pecuniary limits of the jurisdiction of the Court to which an application is made under this section. Has the Court power to award those damages? Yes (j).

Ss.

Limitation.—An application for restitution under s. 583 of the Code of 1882 was held to be one by way of execution (k). It has been held by the High Court of Bombay that an application for restitution under the present section is an application in execution of a decree and that it is governed by art. 182 of sch. I of the Limitation Act [applications for execution of decrees of Civil Courts]. For the same reason it has been held by that Court that s. 6 of the Limitation Act [exclusion of period of minority] applies to applications under this section (l). On the other hand, it has been held by the High Court of Patna that a proceeding under this section is not an execution proceeding, but a miscellaneous proceeding to which the rules applicable to execution proceedings in substance apply, and that it is therefore governed by art. 181 of sch. I of the Limitation Act [applications for which no period of limitation is prescribed] (m). A similar view has been taken by the Chief Court of the Punjab (n). This view, it is submitted, is the correct view. See notes above “Sub-sec. (2): bar of suit.”

Appeal.—The determination of a question under this section is a decree and appealable as such (o): see s. 2, cl. (2), definition of “decree.” But the question must be one directly covered by the section, and not one incidentally connected with or collateral to the decision of any such question. Thus a decision that an application under this section is time-barred is a decision on a question merely collateral to the question of limitation and hence it is not a decree and not appealable as such (p).

S, 145. Provided that such notice as the Court in each case thinks sufficient has been given to the surety.

The old section.—The corresponding s. 253 of the Code of 1882 ran as follows :—

“Whenever a person has before the passing of a decree in an original suit, become liable as surety for the performance of the same or of any part thereof the decree may be executed against him to the extent to which he has rendered himself liable in the same manner as a decree may be executed against a defendant:

“Provided that such notice in writing as the Court in each case thinks sufficient has been given to the surety.”

The new section.—The present section differs from the old section in the following respects :—

1. The old section applied only to surety-bonds for the performance of a decree. It did not apply to surety-bonds for the fulfilment of a condition imposed upon a person under an order of the Court [see cl. (c) of the present section]. It was also doubtful whether the old section applied to suretyships for the restitution of property taken in execution of a decree [see cl. (b) of the present section]. The present section applies not only to surety-bonds for the performances of a decree, but also to surety-bonds referred to above, as also to bonds for the payment of money under an order of the Court. See notes below.
2. The present section applies to suretyships for the performance of any decree whether original or appellate [see cl. (a)]. As to the old section it was doubtful whether it applied to original decrees only or applied also to appellate decrees.

Object of the section.—This section provides that where a person has become liable as surety for the performance of a decree or for any of the purposes specified in cls. (b) and (c), the party for whose benefit security has been given may enforce the security by executing the decree or order against the surety in the same manner as if the surety was a party to the decree or order and was directed by the decree or order to perform the obligation undertaken by him. It is no longer necessary to institute a regular suit to enforce the security as it was in some cases under the old section. The present section provides a summary remedy in execution, and dispenses with the necessity of a separate suit to the extent to which the surety has rendered himself personally liable.

Security for the performance of “any” decree :—

1. Ex parte decree.—A obtains an ex parte decree against B. The decree is set aside under O. 9, r. 13 [Code of 1882, s. 108] on C standing security for the performance of any decree that may be passed against B on a re-hearing. The suit is reheard and a decree is passed against B, A may enforce the security by executing the decree against C (q). A separate suit is not necessary.

2. Appellate decree.—The summary procedure contemplated by this section applies to suretyships for the performance of any decree, whether it be an original or an appellate decree. Under the old section there was a conflict of decisions as to whether the summary remedy provided by that section applied at all to suretyships for the performance of appellate decrees it being held by the High Court of Calcutta that it did not (r) and by the other High Courts that it did (s). The present section makes it clear that the summary procedure contemplated by this section applies to security given for the performance of appellate decrees as well. The rules providing for security for the performance of appellate decrees are rules 5 and 6 of Order 41, corresponding to ss. 545 and 546 of the Code of 1882. An illustration will make the point clear. A obtains a decree against B and applies for execution. B appeals from the decree and applies for stay of execution under O. 41, r. 5. Execution is stayed on C standing security for the due performance of any decree that may be passed against B in appeal. A decree is eventually passed by the appellate Court against B. A may enforce the security against C by executing the appellate decree against him as if C was a party to the decree. According to the Calcutta decisions under the old section, A's remedy was by way of suit only against C.

Security for restitution of property taken in execution of a decree.—

A obtains a decree against B for possession of certain lands. B appeals from the decree. Pending the appeal A applies for execution of the decree. The Court allows execution on C standing surety for the restitution of the lands to B in the event of the decree being reversed in appeal, or for payment to B of the value of the property [O. 41, r. 6, Code of 1882, s. 546]. The decree is eventually reversed in appeal. B may enforce the security by executing the appellate decree against C. According to the Calcutta decisions under the old section, B could only enforce the security by a separate suit (t).

Security for the payment of money.—The following are some of the sections and rules providing for security for the payment of money:—

S. 55, sub-s. (4) security on behalf of a judgment-debtor who is arrested in execution of a decree and who expresses his intention to apply to be declared an insolvent].

O. 25, r. 1 [security for costs].

O. 38, r. 2 [security in cases of arrest before judgment].

O. 38, r. 5 [security in cases of attachment before judgment].

O. 41, r. 10 [security for costs of respondent in first appeal].

O. 45, r. 7 [security for costs of respondent in appeal to the King in Council].

Security for fulfilment of any condition imposed on any person.—

The summary remedy provided by the old section applied only where the security given was for the performance of a decree and for no other purpose. Thus where a defendant produced certain promissory notes in Court, and the plaintiff objected to their return to the defendant, but they were returned to him on C standing surety for their production when required, it was held that the plaintiff could not, on non-production of the notes, proceed against C by execution, the reason given being that the security was not given for the performance of a decree, and that his remedy was by way of suit against C (u). Under the present section the security may be enforced by execution against C.

Though the language of this section is considerably wider than that of the old section, the section applies only when the Court passes an order or decree which is intended to be an order or decree enforceable through execution by one or some of the parties to a suit or other proceeding against another party or other parties

S. 145. thereto. A bond, therefore, passed by a surety under O. 32, r. 6 (2), cannot be enforced by summary process under this section; it can only be enforced by a suit (v).

A is committed to jail in execution of a decree obtained against him by B. A applies to be released from jail to enable him to make an application in insolvency with a view to his protection from arrest. A is released from jail on C standing surety for the production of A on a particular day. The insolvency application fails, and it thereupon becomes incumbent upon C to produce A before the Court. If C fails to do so, it is B that is entitled to the security money, for his rights were interfered with, and not the Government (w).

"To the extent to which he has rendered himself personally liable."

This section does not apply where a surety has not rendered himself personally liable, but has given only a charge upon his property (ww). A obtains a decree against B for Rs. 2,500. C executes a surety bond by which he renders himself personally liable for the amount of the decree, and by way of further security hypothecates certain property. B fails to pay the amount of the decree. The decree against B may be executed as if it was a personal decree by attachment and sale of C's equity of redemption in the hypothecated property (x). But if prior to A's application for execution the equity of redemption was sold by C, the decree could not be executed by attachment and sale of the hypothecated property. If A wants to realize the amount of his decree by sale of the hypothecated property, he should proceed by a regular suit to enforce the charge as provided by s. 90 of the Transfer of Property Act. This result follows from the word "personally" in this section (y). The point is that where a surety, besides giving his personal undertaking, mortgages his property for the due performance of the decree, the decree-holder is not entitled to bring the property to sale under this section as mortgaged property. There is nothing, however, to preclude the decree-holder from giving up the mortgage and attaching and selling the property under this section as if it was not mortgaged at all (z).

Notice to surety.—When a decree is sent by the Court which passed the decree to another Court for execution, the notice required by this section may be given by the latter Court (a). For form of notice, see App. H., form No. 13.

This section does not bar a regular suit against a surety.—As to the old section it was held that it gave an additional, not an exclusive, remedy against a surety, and that it did not prevent the decree-holder from bringing a regular suit on the surety-bond to enforce the security (b). Nor is the present section any bar to a regular suit (c). It simply enables a party for whose benefit security has been given to enforce the surety-bond against the surety by way of execution to the extent to which the surety has rendered himself personally liable, and no more. If the party for whose benefit security has been given proceeds against the surety in execution, the surety is to be deemed for the purposes of appeal a party within the meaning of s. 47. That is to say, if an order is made in execution enforcing a claim against the surety, the surety may appeal from the order as if he was a party to the suit in which the decree or order sought to be executed was passed (d). In this respect the section gives effect to certain rulings under the old section (e). But the reference to s. 47 does not import into this section the provision therein contained which bars a separate suit.

Proceeding by or against representatives.—The proceeding contemplated by the section includes an appeal. The expression “claiming under” is wide enough to cover cases of devolution, etc., mentioned in O. 20, r. 10. A sues B to establish his right to certain property. Pending the suit B mortgages the property to C. The suit is decided in A’s favour. B does not appeal from the decree. C, as a person claiming under B, may appeal from the decree (g).

See notes to O. 9, r. 13, under the head “Application by legal representative of deceased defendant.” Other cases to which the section applies have been considered in their proper place.

Consent or agreement by persons under disability.

Rules of the Supreme Court, O. 16, r. 21.—This section is new. It is taken bodily from O. 16, r. 21, of the Rules of the Supreme Court with slight alterations.

“Any person under disability.”—The section applies to consent given on behalf of persons under disability, such as minors and lunatics. See O. 32 below.

“As to any proceeding.”—These words do not refer to the conduct of a suit or appeal. A next friend or guardian ad litem has undoubtedly the conduct of a suit or appeal in his hands. But if he does anything in the action beyond the mere conduct of it, e.g., consents not to appeal, the person under disability is not bound by it unless it is done with the express leave of the Court (h).

“Express leave.”—The leave must be express. In this respect the present section differs from the English rule.

“Act prescribed or allowed by this Code.”—The present section empowers the Court to extend any time fixed by it even after the expiry of the period originally fixed. It is legislative recognition of the rule laid down in the Bombay case of Bhagwan Das v. Haji Abu Ahmed (i), and the cases on which the same was based (j). In the Bombay case it was held that it was competent to the Court to extend the time fixed under s. 54 of the Code of 1882 [now O. 7, r. 11] even after the expiry of the time originally granted. It must, however, be noted that the section applies only where time is fixed for the doing of an act prescribed or allowed by this Code. “Code” includes rules, and prescribed means “prescribed” by the rules [see s. 2, cls. (1) and (16)]. See, for instance, the following rules:—

1. O. 6, r. 18 (amendment of pleadings).
2. O. 7, r. 11 (b) [requiring plaintiff to correct valuation of suit].
3. O. 7, r. 11 (requiring plaintiff to supply requisite stamp paper, where the plaint is written upon paper insufficiently stamped).
4. O. 8, r. 9 (requiring written statement or additional written statement from a party).
5. O. 21, r. 17 (amendment of application for execution).
6. O. 25, r. 2 (security for costs of suit).
7. O. 41, r. 10 (security for costs of appeal).

Act directed or allowed by a decree of Court.—This section does not apply where time is allowed [for doing an act by a decree of Court (k)]. It was accordingly held by the Allahabad High Court in Saranjan v. Ram Behal (l), that a Court has no power under this section to extend the time fixed by its decree under O. 20, r. 14, for payment of purchase money in a suit for pre-emption. The Allahabad decision has been approved by the Madras High Court (m). The High Court of Patna has, however, held that the Court has power under this section to extend the time fixed by a decree passed under O. 20, r. 14 (n). The attention of the Patna Court was not drawn to the Allahabad decision. In a later case, however, the Allahabad High Court held that where an ex parte decree is set aside on condition that the defendant should pay a certain sum of money to the plaintiff within a certain time, and such payment is not made, the Court has power under this section to enlarge the time for payment. As to Saranjan's case the Court observed that it related to a decree in a suit for pre-emption (o). In a recent case, however, where a decree was passed in favour of the plaintiff conditional upon her paying an extra court-fee of Rs. 20 within a week, but the amount was not paid within that period, the High Court of Allahabad held that the Court had no power under this section to extend the time, but that the plaintiff might proceed by an application for a review under s. 114 read with O. 47, r. 1. The Court said: “There is no distinction between a pre-emption decree and any other decree which embodies certain conditions and provides for the suit being dismissed if those Appeal.—No appeal lies from an order under this section. The order is not a decree, nor is it one of the appealable orders mentioned in s. 104 (w).

the time being in force relating to court-fees has not been paid, the Court may, in its discretion, at any stage, allow the person by whom such fee is payable, to pay the whole or part, as the case may be, of such court-fee; and upon such payment the document, in respect of which such fee is payable, shall have the same force and effect as if such fee had been paid in the first instance.

Scope of the section.—This section is new. It is an enabling section. It empowers the Court to allow a party to make up the deficiency of court-fees payable on plaints, memoranda of appeal, applications for review of judgment, etc., even after the expiration of the period of limitation prescribed for the filing of these documents. The section enables a defective document to be retrospectively validated if the insufficiency of the stamp is subsequently made up with the leave of the Court. It must, however, be noted that the power to make up the deficiency of court-fees is subject to the discretion of the Court and is not claimable as of right by a party (x). See notes below "Appeals and applications for review of judgment."

S. 149. Appeals and applications for review of judgment.—As to these it was provided by s. 582A of the Code of 1882 as follows :—

“If a memorandum of appeal or application for a review of judgment has been presented within the proper period of limitation, but is written upon paper insufficiently stamped, and the insufficiency of the stamp was caused by mistake on the part of the appellant or applicant as to the amount of the requisite stamp, the memorandum of appeal or application shall have the same effect and be as valid as if it had been properly stamped : provided that such appeal or application shall be rejected unless the appellant or applicant supplies the requisite stamp within a reasonable time after the discovery of the mistake to be fixed by the Court.”

The above section was introduced into the Code of 1882 by Act 4 of 1892 to supersede a Full Bench ruling of the Allahabad High Court. That ruling was to the effect that if a memorandum of appeal is not, when tendered, properly stamped, it is not at that time a memorandum of appeal and the subsequent affixing of the proper stamp cannot have a retrospective effect so as to validate the original presentation unless it has been done by order of the Court, and such order can only be made where the defective memorandum has been received through a mistake on the part of the Court or its officers, and not where the insufficiency of the stamp was caused by a mistake on the part of the appellant (y).

“S. 582A applied only to appeals and applications for a review. S. 582A has been omitted in this Code, and the present section has been enacted which is quite general in its terms. It applies to all documents chargeable with court-fees under the Court-fees Act, such as plaints, memoranda of appeal or of cross-objections, applications for review of judgment, and written statements pleading a set-off or counter-claim. At the same time the words “and the insufficiency of the stamp was caused by mistake on the part of the appellant or applicant as to the amount of the requisite stamp,” which occurred in s. 582A, have been omitted in the present section. There is therefore no reason to restrict the concession provided for by this section to cases where there is a bond fide misunderstanding of the law as to valuation as it was under s. 582A. It has accordingly been held by the High Court of Bombay that the fact that an appellant has no funds with which to pay the requisite stamp is a good ground for admitting the memorandum of appeal, though presented on the last day of limitation, and for extending the time under this section to pay the requisite stamp (z). According to the Patna High Court, the Court should not give time to make good the deficiency if a litigant has deliberately and to suit his own convenience paid an insufficient court-fee. Time, according to that Court, may be given when the amount of the court-fee payable is open to doubt, or the amount of the court-fee cannot be ascertained by the Court till the record is received, or it appears that he has made an honest attempt to comply with the law (a). The Lahore High Court has taken a similar view (aa).

The present section, as stated above, applies to all documents chargeable with court-fees, such as plaints, memoranda of appeal, applications for review, etc. As regards plaints, it is well settled that in the case of a plaint insufficiently stamped the Court is bound under O. 7, r. 11 (c) [s. 54 of the Code of 1882] to give time to the plaintiff to make good the deficiency, even if the plaintiff has deliberately and without any excuse paid an insufficient court-fee, provided the plaint is presented within the period of limitation. As regards appeals, however there is a difference of opinion.

The High Court of Bombay (b) has held that a memorandum of appeal stands on the same footing as a plaint, and that just as in the case of a plaint insufficiently stamped the Court is bound to give time to the plaintiff to make good the deficiency, so in the case of a memorandum of appeal insufficiently stamped the Court is bound to give time to the appellant to make good the deficiency, the reason given being that O. 7, r. 11, cl. (c), is made applicable to appeals by s. 107 (2) [s. 582 of the Code of 1882]. As to the present section, the Court said in effect that it should be read subject to the provisions, in the case of plaints, of O. 7, r. 11 (c), and in the case of appeals, of O. 7, r. 11 (c) coupled with s. 107 (2). On the other hand, it has been held by the High Court of Patna (c), that the Court is not bound in the case of a memorandum of appeal insufficiently stamped to give the appellant time to make good the deficiency, that it may allow time if the amount of the court-fee payable is open to doubt, or the amount of the fee cannot be ascertained by the Court till the record is received, or it appears that the appellant has made an honest attempt to comply with the law, but that it should not allow time if the appellant has deliberately and to suit his own convenience paid on his appeal insufficient court-fee. According to that Court, the present section should not be construed in such a way as to nullify the express provisions of s. 4 or s. 6 of the Court Fees Act 7 of 1870 (d). A similar view has been taken by the Lahore High Court (dd). The view taken by the High Court of Bombay has also been dissented from by the Madras High Court (e).

Inherent powers of Court.—The Code of Civil Procedure is not exhaustive (g). The Court has therefore in many cases, where the circumstances require it, acted upon the assumption of the possession of an inherent power to act ex debito justitiæ and to do that real and substantial justice for the administration, for which alone it exists (h). The law cannot make express provisions against all inconveniences so that their dispositions shall express all the cases that may possibly happen, and it is therefore the duty of a Judge to apply them not only to what appears to be regulated by their express provisions, but to all the cases to which a just application of them may be made and

S. 151. which appear to be comprehended either within the express sense of the law or within the consequences that may be gathered from it (i). At the same time it is to be remembered that this section does not invest the Court with jurisdiction over matters which are excluded from its cognizance. Thus a Court cannot under this section entertain a suit relating purely to caste questions, such a suit not being one of a civil nature (j): see s. 9 above. Inherent jurisdiction must be exercised subject to the rule that if the Code does contain specific provisions which would meet the necessities of the case in question, such provisions should be followed and the inherent jurisdiction should not be invoked (k). And, further, no order should be made under this section unless it is necessary for the ends of justice or to prevent abuse of the process of the Court (l). But where the ends of justice do require it, the Court has an inherent power to make such order as it may deem proper. It has thus been held that although the Code contains no express provision on the matters hereinafter mentioned the Court has an inherent power—

- (a) to consolidate suits and appeals (m) including appeals to His Majesty in Council (n);
- (b) to postpone the hearing of suits pending the decision of a selected action (o);
- (c) to stay on the ground of convenience cross-suits (o);

(dd) to interfere where its decree is being executed in a manner manifestly at variance with the purport and intent of that decree (d);

(ee) to stay execution of a decree obtained by A against B pending not only the decision of a suit by B against A, but the decision of an appeal by B against A from a decree passed against B in B's suit (e). See O. 21, r. 29.

Prevent abuse of process of Court.—A Court has inherent jurisdiction to stay any suit which is an abuse of the process of the Court (f). See notes to O. 16, r. 1, "Whether witness summons may be refused." See also the undermentioned case (g).

Where the Court is bound to grant an application and has no discretion to refuse it, it has no power to dismiss it on "so treacherous a ground of decision as an 'abuse of the process of the Court' " (h).

Appeal.—No appeal lies from an order made under this section (i). But though no appeal lies, the High Court has power under s. 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915, to correct subordinate Courts if they have wrongly exercised their inherent powers (j). *

152. [New. R. S. C., O. 28, r. 11. Cf. S. 206.] Clerical or arithmetical mistakes in judgments, decrees or orders, or errors arising therein from any accidental slip or omission, may at any time be corrected by the Court either of its own motion or on the application of any of the parties.

Amendments of judgments, decrees or orders.

Amendment of decrees and orders.—This section has been taken from O. 28, r. 11, of the Rules of the Supreme Court.

There are two and only two cases in which the Court can amend or vary a decree or order after it is drawn up and signed, namely:—

- (i) under its inherent powers, when the decree or order does not correctly state what the Court actually decided and intended; and
- (ii) under this section, where there has been a clerical or arithmetical mistake, or an error arising from an accidental slip or omission.

(j) Braya Bhusan v. Sri Chandra (1919) 4 Pat. L. J. 20.

If a decree or order is sought to be amended or varied in any other case, it can only be done by a review of judgment under O. 47, r. 1, or by an appeal under s. 96 (k). It is doubtful whether a decree or order can be varied by consent of parties after it is drawn up and signed (l).

Inherent power to amend decrees and orders.—Every Court has an inherent power to vary or amend its own decree or order so as to carry out its own meaning. In so doing it does nothing but exercise a power to correct a mistake of its ministerial officer by whom the decree or order was drawn up (m). It only insists that the decree drawn up in the office of the Court should correctly express the judgment given by the Court (n). "It would be perfectly shocking if the Court could not rectify an error which is really the error of its own minister" (o). "I cannot doubt," said Lord Penzance in Laurie v. Lees (p) "that under the original powers of the Court independent of any order that is made under the Judicature Act, every Court has the power to vary its own orders which are drawn up mechanically in the office of the Court—to vary them in such a way as to carry out its own meaning; and where, language has been used which is doubtful, to make it plain. I think that power is inherent in every Court." In Hatton v. Harris (q), Lord Watson said: "When an error of that kind has been committed, it is always within the competency of the Court, if nothing has intervened which would render it inexpedient or inequitable to do so, to correct the record in order to bring it into harmony with the order which the Judge obviously meant to pronounce".

It will be seen from the above that the Court has no power to vary or amend its decree where it is in conformity with the judgment (r), not even if the judgment is erroneous in law (s) though the error be apparent on the face of the judgment (t).

The power of a Court to set right its own decree and to bring it into conformity with the judgment [see O. 20, r. 6] has also been recognized in Indian decisions (u).

Illustrations.

(1) A sues B for Rs. 5,000 and interest. The judgment is for Rs. 4,500 with-out more. The decree is drawn up in accordance with the judgment. A then applies to amend the decree by adding an order for payment of interest. The application must be refused, for the decree is not at variance with the judgment. If A is aggrieved by the decree, the proper course for him is to apply for a review of judgment or to appeal from the decree: Hasan v. Sheo Prasad (1893) 15 All. 121; Abdul v. Chunia (1886) 8 All. 377.

(2) A and B enter into an agreement for partition of certain properties. B fails to convey to A the properties come to A's share. A sues B for specific performance of the agreement and a decree is passed declaring only that "A is entitled to specific performance of the agreement." The usual form is to declare that "the agreement ought to be specifically performed, and the Court doth order and decree that the same be specifically performed [i.e., both by A and B]." The decree may be amended so as to put it in the usual form: Karim Mahomed v. Rajooma (1888) 12 Bom. 174. [In the above case the amendment was necessary, for the decree as drawn up did not contain

(3) A sues B and C for Rs. 5,000. The judgment awards Rs. 5,000 to A "as prayed" (i.e., as against B and C). The decree is drawn up so as to render the amount payable by B alone. The decree may be amended and brought into conformity with the judgment: Chathappan v. Pydel (1892) 15 Mad. 403; Pherozsha v. Sun Mills, Ltd. (1898) 22 Bombay 370.

"Accidental omission."—This section enables the Court to correct errors arising from an accidental omission. Thus where directions as to costs were inadvertently omitted, the decree was set right by adding the directions (v). Similarly where the date from which payments ordered to be made were to run was inadvertently omitted, the decree was perfected by adding the date (w).

"Accidental slip."—A bonâ fide error as to the amount of interest due to the defendant may be corrected under this section (x). And so also an error as to the period for which an injunction is to continue (y).

At any time.—A decree may be amended under this section at any time, although the time for appealing from the decree has expired (z). Under the corresponding English rule, an error in a decree was in one case amended after 39 years (a), and in another case after 19 years (b). In a Bombay case, an application was made to the High Court to rectify a decree in the exercise of its inherent powers 10 years after the date of the decree, and the application was allowed (c). But no amendment should be allowed by the Court either under this section or in the exercise of its inherent powers if it is inexpedient or inequitable to do so, as where third parties have acquired rights under the erroneous decree without a knowledge of the circumstances which would tend to show that the decree was erroneous (d).

Effect of amendment.—An amendment under this section does not revive the decree nor furnish a fresh starting point of limitation for executing the decree (e).

Amendment of appellate decree.—The Court to amend a decree is the Court that passed it. Where an appeal is preferred from a decree of a Court of first instance the appellate Court may—

(1) dismiss the appeal under O. 41, r. 11, sub-r. (1) [Code of 1882, s. 551] without issuing any notice to the respondent, or it may

(2) confirm, reverse or vary the decree of the Court of first instance [O. 41, r. 32, Code of 1882, s. 577].

In case (1), it has been held by the High Courts of Calcutta, Madras and Allahabad that it is the appellate Court alone that can amend the decree (f). On the other hand it has been held by the Bombay High Court that it is the Court of the first instance, and not the appellate Court, that can amend the decree (g). See notes to s. 36 above.

In case (2), it is the appellate Court alone that can amend the decree (h).

The same principles apply to decrees passed in second appeal.

S. 152.

Revision.—A decision under this section granting an application for amendment is an order and not a decree. The decision may therefore be the subject of revision under s. 115, but it cannot be the subject of an appeal (i). It has been so held by the High Courts of Calcutta, Allahabad and Bombay in cases under the corresponding s. 206 of the Code of 1882. A different view has been taken by the High Court of Madras. According to that Court, where a decree is amended, the aggrieved party has the right to appeal from the decree as amended. Hence if no appeal is preferred within the period of limitation, he cannot afterwards apply for a revision of the order allowing the amendment (j).

Where a case is one of “accidental slip” within the meaning of this section, but the Court which passed the decree refuses to amend it on the ground that the case does not fall under this section, the refusal amounts to a failure to exercise a jurisdiction vested in the Court within the meaning of s. 115, and the High Court has power to interfere in revision (k).

Does not apply.—Where the order as drawn up represents the real decision of the Court, the Court has no jurisdiction to rehear or alter it (l). “Even when the order has been obtained by fraud, the Court has no jurisdiction to rehear it. If such a jurisdiction existed it would be most mischievous” (m).

Consent-decree.—Where a decree founded on a compromise is inaccurate or does not embody the true terms of the compromise, the only remedy is by an independent suit to set aside the decree either on the ground of mistake or fraud or some other ground ejusdem generis with it (n).

Successive applications for amendment.—Res judicata.—See notes to s. 11, under the head “Applications for amendment of decree,” on p. 65 above.

Code of 1882, s. 206.—The third paragraph of s. 206 of the Code of 1882 ran as follows:—

“If the decree is found to be at variance with the judgment, or if any clerical or arithmetical error be found in the decree the Court shall, of its own motion or on that of any of the parties, amend the decree so as to bring it into conformity with the judgment or to correct such error: Provided that reasonable notice has been given to the parties or their pleaders of the proposed amendment.”

The above paragraph enabled the Court to amend its decree in the following two cases, namely:—

- (1) Where the decree was at variance with the judgment; and
- (2) Where any clerical or arithmetical error was found in the decree.

The present section corresponds with the second part of the above paragraph. The first part of the paragraph which empowers the Court to amend its decree so as to bring it into conformity with the judgment has been omitted. An application to amend a decree so as to bring it into conformity with the judgment must now be made to the Court in the exercise of its inherent power. This power has been saved by s. 151.

Ss. 153, 154. 153. [New. R. S. C., O. 28, r. 12.] The Court may at any time, and on such terms as to costs or otherwise as it may think fit, amend any defect or error in any proceeding in a suit; and all necessary amendments shall be made for the purpose of determining the real question or issue raised by or depending on such proceeding.

R. S. C., O. 28, r. 12.—This section is new. It is taken from the Rules of the Supreme Court, O. 28, r. 12. The words "in a suit" after the word "proceeding" do not occur in the English rule.

Scope of the section.—O. 6, r. 17, is confined to amendments of "pleadings;" and s. 152 to correcting errors in "judgments, decrees or orders." The present section confers a general power on the Court to amend defects and errors in "any proceeding in a suit" and to make "all necessary amendments" for the purpose of determining the real question at issue between the parties to the suit. This power is vested in the original as well as the appellate Court (o). In Australian Steam Navigation Co. v. Smith and Sons (p), their Lordships of the Privy Council said: "Their Lordships are strong advocates for amendment whenever it can be done without injustice to the other side and even where they have been put to certain expense and delay, yet if they can be compensated for that in any way, it seems to their Lordships that an amendment ought to be allowed for the purpose of raising the real question between the parties."

"Any proceeding in a suit."—The following are some of the cases in which the corresponding English rule has been applied:—

Answers to interrogatories.—Where it was admitted by the defendant, a solicitor, in answer to interrogatories, that his partner has paid into the banking account of the firm money received by the latter for investment, the defendant was allowed to amend the answer it being shown that the admission had been made by mistake (q). In another case where the defendant charged the plaintiff (his manager) with misconduct, and the plaintiff exhibited interrogatories of which the substance was to ask the defendant to specify the acts of misconduct on which he relied, it was said by Thesiger, L.J., that if the defendant answered the interrogatories, and it was subsequently discovered by him that there were other acts of misconduct on which he could rely, there was nothing to prevent his being allowed to amend his answers to the interrogatories (r). See as to interrogatories, O. 11, rr. 1-11, below.

Notice of motion.—A notice of motion in an action for the rescission of an agreement for the sale of land was allowed to be amended at the hearing by asking for the appointment of a receiver (s).

"Any present right of appeal."—There is a conflict of decisions as to the meaning of the words "any present right of appeal" which occur in this section. According to the Chief Court of the Punjab, the words "any present right of appeal" refer to a right which had actually come into existence at the commencement of this Code by virtue of the decree or order sought to be appealed from having been passed before this Code came into force (t). According to the Madras High Court, those words refer to a right which had become vested in a litigant before this Code came into force (u). Thus there are cases in which a second appeal lay under the old Code from certain orders made in execution (the orders being treated as decrees), while no such appeal lies under the present Code. According to the Chief Court of the Punjab, no second appeal would lie in such a case from the order made in first appeal unless the latter order was made while the old Code was in force. According to the Madras High Court, a second appeal would lie if the first appeal from the order made by the Court of first instance was preferred when the old Code was in force, though the order made in first appeal was not made until after the new Code came into force (v). Similarly there are cases in which an appeal was allowed from certain orders under the old Code from which no appeal is allowed under the present Code. According to the Chief Court of the Punjab, no appeal would lie from the order in such a case unless the order was made when the old Code was in force (w). According to the Madras High Court, it would seem that an appeal would lie if the suit in which the order was made was instituted when the old Code was in force. See s. 96, sub-s. (3), and ss. 97 and 104. See also notes to s. 1.

THE FIRST SCHEDULE.

ORDER I.

Parties to Suits.

1. [S. 26, R. S. C., O. 16, r. 1.] All persons may be joined in one suit as plaintiffs in whom any right to relief in respect of or arising out of the same act or transaction or series of acts or transactions is alleged to exist, whether jointly severally or in the alternative, where, if such persons brought separate suits any common question of law or fact would arise. O. 1, r. 1.

Who may be joined as plaintiffs.

Scope of the Order.—This order deals with joinder of parties, and, to a certain extent, with joinder of causes of action (x). O. 2, r. 3, deals exclusively with joinder of causes of action. Rule 4 of this Order is to be read with rule 1.

General rules.—Before considering the present rule it may be as well to note the general rules relating to the joinder of parties and of causes of action. According to the Code the essentials of a suit are—(1) opposing parties, (2) a subject in dispute, (3) a cause of action, and (4) a demand of relief (y) [see O. 7, r. 1]. All these essentials must concur in every suit properly framed. Order 1 deals with the joinder of parties. Order 2 deals with the frame of suits. In framing a suit the following three kinds of “misjoinder” must be guarded against:—

(i) Misjoinder of plaintiffs.—Where there are more plaintiffs than one, the provisions of the present rule should be followed. This rule relates to the joinder of plaintiffs. It provides in effect that two or more persons may be joined as plaintiffs, in one suit if the right to relief alleged to exist in each plaintiff arises from the same act or transaction and there is a common question of law or of fact. If not, they cannot be joined as plaintiffs in one suit, and they must bring separate suits. If two or more persons are joined as plaintiffs in one suit in a case not contemplated by O. 1, r. 1, the result is a misjoinder of plaintiffs. The objection on the ground of misjoinder of plaintiffs should be taken at the earliest possible opportunity; if not, it will be deemed to have been waived [O. 1, r. 13]. Where such objection is taken, and the Court finds that it is valid, the Court should not dismiss the suit [O. 1, r. 9], but the plaint may be amended [O. 6 r. 17] by striking out the name of such persons as have been improperly joined as plaintiffs [O. 1, r. 10, sub-r. (2)], and the suit should then be proceeded with [O. 1, r. 9]. In other words, an objection on the ground of misjoinder of plaintiffs is not fatal to the suit (z).

(ii) Misjoinder of defendants.—Where there are more defendants than one the provisions of rule 3 of this Order should be followed. That rule relates to the joinder of defendants. It provides in effect that two or more persons may be joined as defendants in one suit if the right to relief alleged to exist against each of them arises from the same act or transaction and there is a common question of law or of fact. If not, they cannot be joined as defendants in one suit and separate suits must be brought against them. If two or more persons are joined as defendants in one suit in a case not covered

O. 1, r. 1. by O. 1, r. 3, the result is a misjoinder of defendants. As in the case of plaintiffs, so in the case of defendants, the objection on the ground of misjoinder should be taken at the earliest possible opportunity; if not, it will be deemed to have been waived (O. 1, r. 13). Where such objection is taken, and the Court finds that it is valid, the Court should not dismiss the suit (O. 1, r. 9), but the plaint may be amended (O. 6, r. 17) by striking out the names of such persons as have been improperly joined as defendants [O. 1, r. 10, sub-r. (2)], and the suit should then be proceeded with (O. 1, r. 9). In other words, an objection on the ground of misjoinder of defendants is not fatal to the suit.

(iii) Misjoinder of causes of action.—As to the meaning of “cause of action,” see notes to s. 20 under the head “cause of action,” p. 86 above. A misjoinder of causes of action may be coupled with a misjoinder of plaintiffs or it may be coupled with a misjoinder of defendants. There may again be a misjoinder of claims founded on several causes of action. Accordingly, this subject may be considered under the following three heads:—

(a) Misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action.—Where in a suit there are two or more plaintiffs and two or more causes of action, the plaintiffs should be jointly interested in all the causes of action. If the plaintiffs are not jointly interested in all the causes of action, the case is one of misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action. O. 2, r. 3, read with O. 1, r. 1, forbids such a misjoinder. The objection on the ground of misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action should be taken at the earliest possible opportunity (O. 2, r. 7). As to the procedure to be followed in the case of misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action, see notes to O. 2, r. 3, “Procedure in case of misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action.” See also s. 99 above.

(b) Misjoinder of defendants and causes of action: Multifariousness.—Where in a suit there are two or more defendants and two or more causes of action, the suit will be bad for misjoinder of defendants and causes of action, if different causes of action are joined against different defendants separately (O. 2, r. 3 and O. 1, r. 3). Such a misjoinder is technically called multifariousness. The objection on the ground of multifariousness should be taken at the earliest possible opportunity (O. 2, r. 7). As to the procedure to be followed in the case of multifariousness, see notes to O. 2, r. 3, under the head “Procedure in case of multifariousness.” See also s. 99 above.

(c) Misjoinder of claims founded on several causes of action.—See O. 2, rr. 4-5.

Non-joinder of parties.—Where a person who is a necessary party to a suit is not joined as a party to the suit, the case is one of non-joinder. A suit should not be dismissed on the ground of non-joinder (a). The objection for non-joinder should be taken before the first hearing (O. 1, r. 13), and the plaint may be amended by adding the omitted party either as plaintiff or as defendant, bearing in mind that no person can be added as a plaintiff, though he may be added as a defendant, without his consent (a). See O. 1, rr. 9 and 10 (2).

Relation of this rule to O. 2, r. 3.—O. 2, r. 3, is to be read subject to the provisions of this rule (b).

Changes effected in the law.—We now turn to rule 1 of Order 1. Before considering it in detail, we may observe that under the corresponding s. 26 of the Code of 1882, all persons could be joined in one suit as plaintiffs, provided that the right to relief, alleged to exist in each plaintiff, arose from the same cause of action. The present rule is much wider. It is a reproduction, almost verbatim, of O. 16, r. 1 of the

(a) Mahabala v. Kunhanna (1898) 21 Mad. 373.

(b) Ramendra Nath v. Brajendra Nath (1918) 45 Cal. 111.

English rules. It enables several plaintiffs, though they have separate causes of action, to join in one suit, if—

- (1) the right to relief, alleged to exist in each plaintiff, arises out of the same act or transaction; and
- (2) there is a common question of law or fact.

The expression “act or transaction” used in this rule is more comprehensive than the expression “cause of action” used in the old section; for the same act or transaction may give rise to different causes of action, as when several persons are injured by the same act of negligence on the part of a railway company. Under the old section such persons could not join as plaintiffs in one suit, the causes of action being different. Under the present rule, it seems, they can, as the right to relief arises out of the same act.

“All persons may be joined as plaintiffs in whom the right to any relief claimed is alleged to exist, whether jointly, severally or in the alternative, in respect of the same cause of action.”

The decisions on the meaning of “cause of action” in the old section were not uniform. In some cases it was held that the expression “cause of action” meant facts constituting the infringement of a right plus facts constituting the right itself (c), while in others it was held that it referred to facts constituting the infringement of the right, but not necessarily also those constituting the right itself (d).

The following are some of the cases decided under the old section. It was held in those cases that the plaintiffs could not all join in one suit and that they should bring separate suits. Under the present rule, it is submitted, the plaintiffs may in each one of the following cases all join in one suit:—

1. In Aldridge v. Barrow (e), the defendant, the editor and proprietor of a newspaper, published articles which referred to the “Calcutta Police,” without naming individuals. The plaintiffs, six of the members of the Calcutta Police Force, jointly sued the editor for damages, alleging that the articles were directed against them, and that they constituted a libel. Here the libel was in the same words, and in the same documents, but of different persons. It was held that the plaintiffs could not all be joined in one suit. The Court said: “It is true that the injury may have been caused by one act of the defendant, as, for instance, in the case of a railway accident causing injury to several passengers, or, as is here alleged, of a collective libel on several individuals. The cause of action of the persons injured will none the less remain separate and distinct. There cannot in such cases be said to be one or the same cause of action.”

2. In Rajjo Kuar v. Debi Dial (f), several creditors, to each of whom separate debts were owing by the same debtor, jointly sued the debtor to avoid a deed of gift executed by the debtor in favour of his daughter, on the ground that it was made fraudulently with intent to defeat their claims. The Court held that they could not join as plaintiffs in one suit, on the ground that the causes of action were separate and distinct.

(f) (1896) 18 All. 432.

O. 1, r. 1. 3. In Varajlal v. Ramdat (g), A and B were assaulted by C at an interview in C's house. A and B jointly sued C for damages for assault. It was held that the assault on A and that on B constituted two distinct causes of action, and the suit was therefore bad for misjoinder of plaintiffs. The Court said, "We may go further and say that as the blows on each plaintiff were inflicted at the same time and place and must be proved by the same evidence, it would be more convenient if the law permitted the trial of the two suits together than that it should be necessary to try them separately. But this is a matter for the consideration of the Legislature."

4. In Ali Serang v. Beadon (h), thirteen firemen, who were engaged on board a steamer, were all arrested under one warrant on a charge of desertion, and they were all tried together and sentenced to one month's imprisonment. The term of imprisonment expired on 5th May, but they were not released on that date. Thereupon all the thirteen brought a suit against the superintendent of the jail for damages for wrongful detention. It was held that the causes of action were distinct and separate and could not be joined in one suit.

5. In Ramanuja v. Devanayaka (i), several trustees of a temple were removed from the office of trustee by the District Temple Committee. A suit by the trustees for a declaration that their removal was without just cause was held to be bad for misjoinder, on the ground that the dismissal of each trustee gave rise to a distinct cause of action.

New Rule.—In all the cases cited above, it was held that the plaintiffs having distinct causes of action, they could not join in one suit, and that the proper course for them was to bring separate suits. The present rule is intended to meet those cases. In such cases, therefore, as the above, the plaintiffs may now all join in one suit. The present rule enables several persons to join as plaintiffs in one suit, though their causes of action may be separate and distinct, provided that—

- (1) the right to relief, alleged to exist in them, arises out of the same act or transaction or series of acts or transactions: and
- (2) the case is of such a character that, if such persons brought separate suits, any common question of law or fact would arise.

Both these conditions should be fulfilled to enable two or more persons to join as plaintiffs in one suit. The two conditions are not alternative (j).

Illustrations.

(1) A publishes a series of books under the title of "The Oxford and Cambridge Publications" so as to induce the belief that the books are publications of the Oxford and Cambridge Universities or either of them. The Universities may join as plaintiffs in one suit to restrain A from using the title, because the publication and the belief induced are common questions of fact arising out of the same series of transactions (k).

(2) A, a shareholder in a company, sues B, C and D, the directors, to recover damages on his own behalf for fraudulently inducing him to purchase shares by declaring an illegal dividend; and he joins in the same suit a claim on behalf of himself and all other shareholders (see r. 8 below) for repayment by the defendants to the company of the amount of the dividend paid out by them. A is not entitled to join both causes of action in one suit, because the right to relief claimed in his personal capacity and the right to relief claimed by him as representing the shareholders do not arise out of the same transaction or series of transactions (l).

(3) Four persons, each of whom separately took debentures on the faith of certain statements in a prospectus issued by the directors of a company, joined as co-plaintiffs in one suit against the directors, claiming damages for misrepresentations contained in the prospectus. Held that as the several causes of action arose out of the same transaction, and the case would involve common questions of fact, the suit was properly framed (m).

(4) In a suit instituted by A, B and C jointly for an injunction against D, E and F, it is alleged that all three defendants, as officers of several associations of workmen, conspired to prevent all persons, not belonging to the associations, from obtaining employment in place of the members of the associations. To constitute the overt acts alleged to have been committed in furtherance of the conspiracy, it is averred that D, E and F caused A, B and C to be molested, that E used threatening language to A, and that F assaulted C. It is proved that D was not a party to the conspiracy. As the claim arises out of the same series of transactions, and involves the common question of fact and law whether the overt acts were committed in furtherance of the conspiracy, A, B and C may join in the suit, notwithstanding that an injunction is granted against D and F only (n). See r. 4 (a) below.

The illustrations given above are all English cases decided under the new English rule 1 of Order 16. That rule came into operation on the 26th of October, 1896. The present rule is in the main a reproduction of the English rule. The old English rule corresponded with s. 26 of the Code of 1882, except that the words "in respect of the same cause of action" did not occur in that rule. But though these words did not occur in that rule, it was held that two or more persons could not join as plaintiffs in one suit unless the cause of action was the same. Thus it was held that several shippers of different shipments of cotton on the same ship for the same voyage could not jointly sue the shipowner for damages for short delivery, the causes of action being distinct and separate (o). For the same reason it was held that persons injured by the same act of negligence could not join in one action as plaintiffs for damages against the wrong-doer (p). But since the test under the new English rule as well as the present Indian rule is no longer the identity of the cause of action, but the identity of the act or transaction, such a joinder of plaintiffs as that in the above cases would now be perfectly legitimate both in England and India (q).

Plaintiffs having different interests.—Under the old section there was a conflict of decisions as to whether, where the plaintiffs were entitled to different interests in a property, they could join in one suit to recover possession of the property from a third party if the ground on which the relief was claimed was common to all the plaintiffs. According to the Allahabad decisions, they could not (r); according to the Madras and Calcutta decisions, they could (s). Under the present rule, there is no doubt that such persons may be joined in one suit as plaintiffs.

Illustrations.

A succeeds to B's estate by inheritance, and assigns a portion thereof to C. D is in possession of the estate, and disputes A's right of succession to it. A and C may under the present rule jointly sue D for recovery of possession of the portions of the estate to which they are entitled, as their claims in respect thereof are based on a common ground. It does not matter that A claims by right of inheritance and C under an assignment from A. Both the conditions required by the rule are present in the case.

Further, having regard to the comprehensive language of this rule, there is no objection to plaintiffs suing in a double capacity, if the conditions prescribed by this rule are complied with. Thus where plaintiffs were trustees of a house part of which was lot out by them and the rest occupied by them as tenants, and they sued both as trustees and tenants for an injunction to restrain the defendant from committing a nuisance, it was held that there was no objection to their suing as trustees to protect the reversion and as tenants to enjoy the property free from the nuisance (t).

"Any right to relief."—The words "any right to relief" are wider than the words "the right to any relief" which occurred in the old section (u).

"Severally."—Where a right to relief in respect of the same act or transaction is alleged to exist in two or more persons severally, they may join as plaintiffs in one suit or they may at their option bring separate suits. The rule does not require that they should join as plaintiffs in one suit. A Hindu priest raises a masonry structure upon a certain platform round a sacred tree, on which every member of the community has an individual right to perform religious rites. Here every member of the community has individually a cause of action, and any one member may therefore sue the priest for the removal of the structure. But it is not necessary that all the members should join as plaintiffs in one suit. They may so join if they choose, but the law does not say that they should all so join (v). The same rule applies when two or more persons are entitled to the same relief in the alternative: see notes below, under the head "in the alternative." The rule, however, is different when two or more persons are jointly entitled to the same relief in respect of a transaction. In that case all persons so entitled must join as plaintiffs in one suit. Thus if A, B and C, are joint-owners of a property, they must all be joined as plaintiffs in a suit to recover the property (w). So in a suit to recover ancestral property, all the members of the joint family should sue together (x). If any one of them does not consent to join as plaintiff, he may be joined as defendant [r. 10, sub-r. (2)]. The proper course is first to ask him to join as plaintiff, and if he refuses, to join him as defendant. But the suit should not be dismissed merely because he is joined as a defendant without being first called upon to join as plaintiff (y).

"Jointly."—A Hindu dies leaving a widow, an adopted son, and a separate brother. A dispute arises between the widow and the adopted son on the one hand and the brother on the other as regards certain lands. The widow and the adopted son allege that the lands form part of the estate of the deceased. The brother, on the other hand, alleges that the lands belong to him. If the widow does not dispute the adoption, a suit may be brought by her and the adopted son as co-plaintiffs against the brother to recover the property from him, for the plaintiffs are jointly interested in disproving the defendant's title (z). But what if the adoption is not admitted by the widow, and she asks the Court to decide the question of adoption as between her and the adopted son, and prays that if the adoption is proved, the property may be delivered to the adopted son, or that it may be delivered to her, if the adoption is not proved? In such a case, it has been held by the High Court of Madras, that a suit by the widow and the adopted son as co-plaintiffs to recover the property from the brother is defective on the ground of misjoinder of plaintiffs, for the plaintiffs having antagonistic claims, it cannot be said that the right to relief exists jointly in them (a). See notes above, "Severally." As to joint Hindu families, see Mayne's Hindu Law, 8th ed., para. 298.

"In the alternative."—If in the case put above, the adoption is disputed, not by the widow, but by the brother, a suit may be brought by the widow and the adopted son as co-plaintiffs against the brother, claiming in the alternative to recover the property for the widow, if the adoption is not valid, or for the adopted son, if the adoption is valid (b). Here there is no misjoinder of plaintiffs, for the validity of the adoption is not disputed by a co-plaintiff as in the preceding case, but by the defendant. See O. 1, r. 4. (a) below.

Appeal.—See notes to O. 1, r. 3, "Appeal."

2. [New. R. S. C. O. 16, r. 1.] Where it appears to the Court that any joinder of plaintiffs may embarrass or delay the trial of the suit, the Court may put the plaintiffs to their election or order separate trials or make such other order as may be expedient.

Power of Court to order separate trials.

This rule contemplates the case where a suit has been brought by several plaintiffs, in respect of the same act or transaction, but where the causes of action are so distinct that it may not be convenient to dispose of them at one trial (c). In such a case the Court may put the plaintiffs to their election as to which of them should proceed with the suit or order separate trials or make such other order as may be expedient. A suit by several creditors joining as co-plaintiffs in a creditor's action, or a suit by several market gardeners claiming certain preferential rights as to stands in the market, is not a suit where the joinder could embarrass or delay the trial (d).

3. [S. 28, Cf. R. S. C., O. 16, r. 4.] All persons may be joined as defendants against whom any right to relief in respect of or arising out of the same act or transaction or series of acts or transactions is alleged to exist, whether jointly, severally or in the alternative, where if separate suits were brought against such persons any common question of law or fact would arise.

- O. 1, r. 3. This rule is the converse of rule 1. It deals with joinder of defendants. See notes to O. 1, r. 1, "Misjoinder of defendants," on p. 333 above. Rule 4 of this Order is to be read with this rule.

Relation of this rule to O. 2, r. 3.—O. 2, r. 3, is to be read subject to the provisions of this rule (e).

The old section.—The corresponding s. 28 of the Code of 1882 ran as follows :—

"All persons may be joined as defendants against whom the right to any relief is alleged to exist, whether jointly, severally or in the alternative, in respect of the same matter."

In some cases under that section it was said that the expression "same matter" was equivalent to "same cause of action." In other cases it was observed that it was equivalent "to same act or transaction."

New Rule.—Under the present rule all persons may be joined as defendants against whom any right to relief in respect of the same act or transaction is alleged to exist, where if separate suits were brought against such persons, any common question of law or fact would arise. See notes to O. 2, r. 3, "Joinder of defendants and causes of action."

Illustrations.

1. A, riding in an omnibus belonging to B, is injured by a collision between the omnibus and a cart belonging to C. A sues B and C for damages for personal injury charging the defendants jointly with joint negligence, and, alternatively charging separate negligence against each defendant. The suit is not bad for misjoinder of defendants, because the injury to the plaintiff arose from the same transaction or series of transactions and the case involves common questions of fact (f). It is otherwise, if the injury arises from distinct acts as in the next illustration.

2. A sued B for damage done to his house by B's negligence. B denied negligence, and alleged that the damage was caused by the negligence of C. Thereupon A applied for an order to join C as defendant. Held that the order could not be made. Collins, L.J., said: "When we analyse this case, we find we are dealing with it upon the assumption that the two acts which were done, the one by [B] and the other by [C], are entirely disconnected torts, each of them a separate injury—if it be injury at all—quite distinct one from the other. The one was done recently by [B] by excavation, and the other at a much earlier date by [C, a water company] by allowing water from its main to weaken the soil in front of the plaintiff's property" (g).

3. M mortgages certain property to X. After X's death, A claiming to be the adopted son of X sues M on the mortgage, and a consent decree is passed in the suit. Subsequently B, alleging that she is the sister and heir of X, sues A and M (1) for a declaration that the adoption of A was not validly made, and (2) that the consent-decree (to which she was not a party) is not binding on her. Held by the High Court of Bombay that the suit is bad for misjoinder (h). This decision, it is submitted, is wrong, and it has been dissented from by the Calcutta High Court (i).

4. The mere fact that the relief claimed against the several defendants differs in detail is no ground for objection that the suit is bad for misjoinder of defendants, provided that the suit against the defendants is in respect of the same act or transaction. A applies for shares in a Company on the faith of a prospectus. The shares are allotted to him, and he pays up Rs. 5,000 thereon. A then sues the Company and the directors alleging that the prospectus was false and calculated to mislead, claiming as against the Company cancellation of the allotment to him of his shares and the return of Rs. 5,000 with interest, and as against the directors Rs. 5,000 by way of damages. Here the relief claimed against the Company is rescission and repayment of the purchase-money with interest, and that claimed against the directors is damages. The fact that the relief claimed against the two sets of defendants differs in detail does not render the suit bad for misjoinder of defendants, for the suit is in respect of one transaction, namely, the issue of a false and fraudulent prospectus. "In substance the shareholder has one grievance, call it a cause of action or what you like; and in substance he has one complaint, and all the persons he sues have, according to him, been guilty of conduct which gives him a right to relief in respect of that one thing which they have done, namely, the issuing of a prospectus." "The remedy . . . is different as against the several defendants, but not so much in substance as in form" (j). See r. 5 below.

5. A is an exporter of frozen meat. B is the owner of a line of steamers. By a contract between A and B, B agrees to carry from Argentine to Europe frozen meat in steamers belonging to him or in other suitable steamers. It is subsequently agreed that frozen meat should be shipped by A on a steamer called the Devon procured by B and belonging to C. Meat is accordingly shipped on the Devon, and the master of the Devon signs a bill of lading in respect of it and hands it to A. A sues B and C in respect of damage to the meat alleged to have been caused by the unseaworthiness of the Devon claiming against B on the terms of the before-mentioned contract and against C upon the bill of lading. The suit is not bad for misjoinder of defendants (k).

6. A sues B, C, D, E and F, for the recovery of certain documents of title and the goods covered thereby and in the alternative for damages. It is alleged in the plaint that the goods belonged to A, that B obtained from A the documents of title relating thereto by fraud and made them over to C; that C, knowing that B had no title either to the documents or to the goods, wrongfully dealt with them and sold the goods to D and E; that D and E wrongfully claimed to retain the goods and the documents of title; and, lastly, that one of the documents of title, namely, a railway receipt, was pledged by B to F, though the goods covered by it were in the possession of D. The suit is not bad for misjoinder of defendants and causes of action (l). "The foundation of the case, on which the rest of it depends, is the alleged fraud of B. If such fraud is proved, the question is, did the defendants who all claim under B obtain any title? If the plaintiff fails to prove fraud on the part of B, the case fails against all the defendants. If he proves fraud, it may be that the defendants may have a different answer by way of defence; but that does not make the case any the less one of a common question of law and fact. The same act or transaction which concerns all the parties is the alleged fraud of B, and this involves a common question of law or fact. All defendants have derived title from a person who is alleged to have obtained the goods by means of fraud. By reason of this the possession of all is alleged to be wrongful . . . should it, however, be convenient, the Court may [Umabai v. Vithal (m)] direct the successive trial of the

No misjoinder where some reliefs merely ancillary.—Where the relief claimed against some of the defendants is merely ancillary to the relief claimed against others, the suit is not bad for misjoinder, provided the suit is not in respect of distinct causes of action. A and B are co-sharers of certain land in the occupation of C and D, A is entitled to two-thirds of the land and B to one-third. A sues B, C and D, asking, as against C and D that they may be ejected from his share of the land, and as against B that the land may, if necessary, be partitioned between him and B. The suit is not bad for misjoinder, for though the relief claimed as against C and D is for possession, and that claimed as against B is for partition, the latter relief is auxiliary to the principal relief which is for possession. The inclusion of B in this suit is merely as that of a person properly a party to the proceeding in the circumstances of the case, and not as a litigant against whom a separate claim having no necessary connection with the ejectment of C and D is made. B, in fact, is a necessary party to the suit, for an actual division between A and B is essential to the ejectment of C and D (o). See r. 5 below.

"All persons."—A ship is a "person" within the meaning of this rule, so that a suit may be instituted against a ship as a defendant (p). The secretary of a club could not, unless he has specially accepted a personal liability, be sued personally on a contract entered into on behalf of the members of the club, nor could the members of a club collectively be sued through their secretary (q).

"Any right to relief."—The words "any right to relief" are wider than the words the right to any relief which occurred in the old section (r).

"Jointly."—(1) B and C simultaneously assault A in pursuance of a conspiracy A may sue B and C in one suit for damages: see Varajlal v. Ramdat (1902) 26 Bom. 259, 264. Cf. O'Keefe v. Walsh [1903] 2 I. R. 681.

(2) A obtains a lease of certain lands from B (landlord), and enters into possession of the lands. B then lets the land in separate portions to C, D and E. Subsequently B, C, D and E forcibly dispossess A of the land. A may sue B, C, D and E in one suit for ejectment. The plaintiff being entitled to claim possession of the land as a whole, the mere fact that C, D and E hold specific and distinct portions of the land under different demises from B, does not make the suit bad for misjoinder of defendants: Nundo v. Banomali (1912) 29 Cal. 871; Raghunath v. Sarosh (1899) 23 Bom. 266.

Joint wrong-doers.—Joint tort-feasors may be sued jointly or severally. Thus where more persons than one are concerned in the commission of a wrong, the person wronged has his remedy against all or any one or more of them at his option. But if the person wronged elects to sue only one of several joint tort-feasors, he cannot afterwards bring a suit against the rest even though the judgment may remain unsatisfied (s).

"Severally."—(1) Certain property held by A is sold under the Madras Rent-Recovery Act in separate lots for arrears of rent, and purchased by B, C and D respectively. A sues B, C and D to set aside the sale on the ground that proper notice of sale was not given. The suit is not bad for misjoinder of defendants, merely because the property was sold to different purchasers. "The proceeding under which the various items [of the property] were sold was one, and the ground upon which the validity of the sale was impugned is the same in each case" (t). To use the words of the present rule, the right to relief claimed is in respect of the same act or series of acts, and there is a common question of fact and law. O. 1, r. 3.

(2) A suit is brought by a reversionary heir, on the death of a Hindu widow, to recover from A, B and C three separate properties sold by the widow to A, B and C respectively by three separate deeds of sale, on the ground that the sales were made without legal necessity. According to the Madras decisions the suit is not bad for misjoinder (u); according to the Bombay and Allahabad decisions, it is (v). These were decisions under the old section. The question under the present rule would be whether if separate suits were brought against A, B and C, any common question of law or fact would arise. In a recent case under the old Code similar to the one above their Lordships of the Privy Council said: "Their Lordships think it is at least very doubtful whether, upon the strictest construction to be placed upon the Procedure Code, it can properly be said that there was any misjoinder in this case" (w). In a case under the new Code, where the suit was brought by a reversioner claiming a third share of the estate against another reversioner who was in possession of some of the property, and against three other persons two of whom were purchasers and one a mortgagee from the widow, it was held by the Allahabad High Court that under the new Code in any event it was not a case of misjoinder of defendants (x).

"In the alternative."—(1) A executes a lease of his land to B for a period of two years. At the end of the first year A sells the land to C. C demands rent for the second year from B. B alleges payment of the whole rent for two years to A in advance. C may sue A and B, praying for a decree against A, if it be found that B paid the rent to A as alleged, or, in the alternative, against B, if it be found that B did not pay the rent to A: Madan Mohun v. Holloway (1886) 12 Cal. 555; Mowji v. Kuverji (1907) 31 Bom. 516.

(2) A purchases certain land from B, and enters into possession. Subsequently ho is dispossessed by C who claims to be the owner of the land. A may sue B and C, praying for a decree against B for a refund of the purchase-money if it is found that C is the owner, or a decree, in the alternative, against C for possession if it is found that C is not the owner: Serajul Huq v. Abdul Rahman (1902) 29 Cal. 257.

(3) A, alleging that his agent B lent Rs. 1,000 to C, and that C had denied receipt of the money from B, sues B and C, praying for a decree against B, if it is found that the amount was not paid to C, or, in the alternative, against C if it is found that the amount was paid to him. The suit is properly framed, for the "transaction" in respect of which the relief is claimed is the same: Meyappa v. Periannan (1906) 29 Mad. 50; Arnnabhella v. Venkataswami (1884) 7 Mad. 123.

(4) A mortgages his property to B. B assigns the mortgage to C who gives notice of the assignment to A, and demands payment from A of the amount secured by the mortgage. A says he paid Rs. 200, part of the mortgage-debt, to B, before the

The suit is not bad for misjoinder of defendants, for the right to the relief claimed is in respect of the same transaction : Aiyathurai v. Muhamad Meera (1908) 31 Mad. 252; Kovvuri v. Tallapragadha (1910) 35 Mad. 39. See notes, "New Rule," ill. (4), p. 337 above.

Costs where relief is claimed against defendants in the alternative.—

Where a suit is brought by A against B and C in the alternative, and a decree is passed against B with costs, but the suit as against C is dismissed, the Court has jurisdiction in a proper case to order B (the unsuccessful defendant) to pay in addition to the costs payable by him to A (the plaintiff) the costs of C (the successful defendant). The rule has thus been stated by Vaughan Williams, L.J. : "The proper way is—do not join any defendant unreasonably; if the facts are such that it is reasonable to join them both and reasonable to be in a state of uncertainty as to which of the two is the really guilty one, then it is part of the reasonable costs of the action that the costs of the action which you have launched against one of those defendants, and who has succeeded in defending himself, should be borne by the man who is to blame" (y). In Child v. Stenning (z), Jessel, M.R., dealing with a similar question said : "It appears to me on principle that he who was the person who caused the litigation, or whose error or representation caused it, ought to be the person to pay the costs of it."

A, representing that he is B's agent, enters into a contract with C on B's behalf. C demands performance of the contract from B. B denies that he employed A as his agent and refuses to perform the contract. C sues A and B for damages and claims relief against them in the alternative. The Court finds that A untruly represented himself to be B's agent. A decree is passed against A for damages, but the suit against B is dismissed with costs. If the Court is of opinion that C reasonably (a) took proceedings against B, the Court may direct the costs payable by C to B to be included in the damages payable by A to C (b).

Appeal.—An appeal lies under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent from an order refusing to allow the plaintiff to proceed in one suit against several defendants on the ground of misjoinder and giving time to the plaintiff to elect against which of the defendants he would proceed. Such an order is a "judgment" within the meaning of cl. 15, for it is in substance a decision that the suit will not lie as framed, with the result that if the plaintiff insists on his alleged rights, the suit will be dismissed (c).

Court may give judgment for or against one or more of joint parties.

- (b) against such one or more of the defendants, as may be found to be liable, according to their respective liabilities. O. 1, rr. 4-6.

Cl. (a) of this rule is to be read with rule 1 above, and cl. (b) with rule 3 above.

5. [New. R. S.C., O. 16, r. 5.] It shall not be necessary that every defendant shall be interested as to all the relief claimed in any suit against him.

Defendant need not be interested in all the relief claimed.

This rule is to be read with rule 3 above. It provides in effect that where a suit is brought against several defendants, the mere fact that every defendant is not interested in all the relief claimed in the suit is no ground for objection that the suit is bad for misjoinder of defendants. See notes to rule 3 above, and cases under the head "In the alternative," on p. 343 above.

6. [S. 29, R. S., C. O. 16, r. 6.] The plaintiff may, at his option, join as parties to the same suit all or any of the persons severally, or jointly and severally, liable on any one contract, including parties to bills of exchange, hundis and promissory notes.

Joinder of parties liable on same contract.

Several liability on a contract.—This rule is confined to suits on contracts. The liability on a contract may be either (1) several, or (2) joint and several, or (3) joint. A and B, each for himself, agrees to pay Rs. 5,000 to C. Here A and B are severally liable on the contract. C may therefore bring one suit against A and B, or he may bring a separate suit against A and a separate suit against B. These suits may be brought simultaneously, or they may be brought successively one after the other. But if the suit is brought against A, and a decree is obtained against him, and the decree is satisfied, C cannot subsequently sue B on the bond. But if the decree remains unsatisfied, he (C) is not precluded from suing B.

Joint and several liability on a contract.—The legal consequences of a joint and several liability on a contract are the same as those of several liability. Thus if A and B pass a bond to C for Rs. 5,000, and the bond provides that A and B should jointly and severally pay the amount to C, C may sue A and B jointly, or he may sue them separately, as in the case where the liability is several.

Joint liability on a contract.—The present rule does not provide for the case of a joint liability arising on a contract or negotiable instrument. The reason is that so far as liability on a contract is concerned, s. 43 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, makes all joint contracts joint and several. It allows a promisee to sue one or more of several joint promisors as he chooses, and excludes the right of a joint promisor to be sued along with his co-promisors (d). A partnership firm consisting of two persons, A and B, purchases from C goods worth Rs. 5,000. The liability of partners is joint, and A and B are therefore jointly liable to pay the price to C. But under s. 43 of the Contract Act C may sue either A or B at his option. It is not incumbent upon C to make both A and B defendants. If C sues A alone, and a decree is passed against A, he cannot, according to English law, afterwards sue B, though the decree against A may remain unsatisfied. The reason is that there is in the case of a joint contract a single cause of action which can only be once sued on. The same view has been taken by the High Courts of Calcutta, Madras and Bombay. On the other hand, it has been held by the High Court of Allahabad, that the effect of s. 43 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, is to make all joint contracts joint and several. Therefore, where C obtained a judgment against A upon a joint bond executed by A and B, and the judgment remaining unsatisfied, he sued B for the same money, it was held by the Allahabad Court that the suit against B was not barred. See Pollock and Mulla's Indian Contract Act, notes to s. 43, under the head "Effect of decree against some only of joint promisors."

It may be added here that if in the case put above C sues A alone, A may apply under O. 1, r. 10 (2), to have B joined as a defendant, and the Court may make such order as it thinks proper. In England it has been held that in an action on a joint contract against one only of the joint contractors the Court has jurisdiction, without obtaining the consent of the plaintiff, to make an order requiring the plaintiff to add the other joint contractor as a co-defendant, and that where the defendant has set up a reasonable case of joint contract, he has, in the absence of special circumstances showing that it should not be made, a prima facie right to an order requiring the plaintiff to add that person as a co-defendant (e).

"Parties to bills of exchange."—A draws a bill of exchange upon B payable to C or order. The bill is accepted by B. C then endorses the bill to D, D endorses it to E, and E to F. If the bill, while in the hands of F, is dishonoured, F may at his option sue A (the drawer), or B (the acceptor), or C (the endorser), or D (the endorser), or E (the endorser), or F may bring one action against all or any of them (f).

7. [New. R. S. C., O. 16, r. 7.] Where the plaintiff is in doubt as to the person from whom he is entitled to obtain redress, he may join two or more defendants in order that the question as to which of the defendants is liable, and to what extent, may be determined as between all parties.

When plaintiff in doubt from whom redress is to be sought.

Scope of the rule.—This rule applies only where the plaintiff is in doubt as to the person from whom he is entitled to obtain redress. It does not enable a plaintiff to join separate causes of action against different defendants in one action in a case where he could not do so under r. 3 above (g). Thus if damage is caused to A's house, and he is in doubt as to whether it was caused by excavation works carried on by a County Council or by a Water Company allowing water from its mains to weaken the soil in front of the house, A cannot join the Council and the Company in one action, for these are two distinct torts. It does not matter that the resulting damage is the same in each case; for it is not the damage that constitutes the cause of action, but the injuria or the wrong done by a tort-feasor (h). In such a case the present rule does not apply. The following, however, is a case to which the rule has been held to apply. M, purporting to act as agent for C, enters into a charter-party with B for loading B's vessel with a cargo. The cargo is not loaded, and B sues M for damages, alleging that M had no authority to enter into the charter-party as agent for C. Subsequently B finds, upon discovery of documents, that it is probable that C did give authority to M to bind him [C] with the charter-party, and applies to add C as a defendant. The case is one within this rule and C may be added as a defendant (i).

See notes to O. 1, r. 3, under the same head on p. 344 above.

8. [S. 30 ; S. 32, fourth para. Cf. R. S. C., O. 16, r. 9.]

One person may sue or defend on behalf of all in same interest.

(1) Where there are numerous persons having the same interest in one suit, one or more of such persons may, with the permission of the Court, sue or be sued, or may defend, in such suit, on behalf of or for the benefit of all persons so interested. But the Court shall in such case give, at the plaintiff's expense, notice of the institution of the suit to all such persons either by personal service or, where from the number of persons or any other cause such service is not reasonably practicable, by public advertisement, as the Court in each case may direct.

(2) Any person on whose behalf or for whose benefit a suit is instituted or defend under sub-rule (1) may apply to the Court to be made a party to such suit.

Object of the rule.—This rule is an exception to the general rule that all persons interested in a suit ought to be made parties thereto (j). Convenience requires that, in suits where there is a community of interest amongst a large number of persons, a few should be allowed to represent the whole (k), so that trouble and expense may be saved (l).

Application of the rule.—The provisions of this rule apply only if (1) the parties are numerous, (2) they have the same interest, and (3) the necessary permission is obtained and notice given.

“Numerous parties.”—Where the number of defendants was thirty it was held to be numerous (m). It has been held by the High Court of Madras that a suit cannot be brought under this rule on behalf of the general public (n). Following this decision the High Court of Calcutta held in an earlier case that this rule did not apply unless the parties were capable of being ascertained, and a suit could not therefore be brought under this rule on behalf of the Hindu community, as “the whole Hindu community is incapable of ascertainment” (o). This decision was dissented from by the same

- O. 1, r. 8. Court in a later case, where it was held that it was not necessary to the application of this rule that the parties should be capable of being ascertained (p).

"Same interest."—It is essential that the parties should have the same interest in the suit. Thus where there are numerous legatees under a will, any one legatee may sue the executors on behalf of himself and the other legatees for a discovery of the estate of the deceased come into their hands, as they have all the same interest in having the will proved (q). Similarly, where a person dies leaving numerous creditors, any one creditor may sue on behalf of himself and the other creditors, as they all have the same interest in making out the estate of the deceased as large as possible (r). On the same principle of the community of interest, any one rayat of a village may sue the proprietor of the village for himself and the other rayats for a declaration as against the proprietor of their general rights (s). Likewise, any one tax-payer may bring a suit against a Municipality on behalf of himself and the other tax-payers to restrain the Municipality from misapplying its funds (t).

In Templeton v. Russell (u), a case under the corresponding English rule, it was held that the rule only applies to persons who have or claim some beneficial proprietary right which they are asserting or defending in the suit. But this meaning of the word "interest" was disapproved by the House of Lords in Bedford (Duke of) v. Ellis (v). In the last-mentioned case Lord Macnaghten said: "It seems to me that there is no reason whatever for so restricting the rule. . . . Given a common interest and a common grievance a representative suit was in order if the relief sought was in its nature beneficial to all whom the plaintiff proposed to represent. To limit the rule to persons having a beneficial proprietary interest would be opposed to precedent, and not, I think, in accordance with common sense. Take the case of a creditors' suit which perhaps was the earliest instance of plaintiffs being allowed to sue in a representative character. It can hardly be suggested that a creditor has a proprietary interest in the real or personal estate of his deceased debtor." Thus the disciples of a mutt have sufficient "interest" within the meaning of this rule to maintain a representative suit to declare alienations made by the mahant invalid and have the property alienated handed over to the Mahant (w).

The expression "same interest" should be distinguished from the expression "same transaction." What is required under this rule is that the parties should have the same interest; it is not sufficient that their interests arise from the same transaction. Therefore, where goods of several persons are shipped under separate bills of lading, the mere fact that the goods of all the persons are lost by the same cause does not entitle any one or more of them to bring a representative suit on behalf of themselves and others against the owner of the ship (x). But they may all join in one suit under O. 1, r. 1.

When a caste is divided into two parties, one party being in favour of instituting a suit [e. g., a suit for accounts against the treasurer], and the other consisting of a fairly good number being against it, it is not permissible to any member of the party favouring the suit to institute a suit under this rule on behalf of himself and all other members of the caste. The reason is that it cannot be said in such a case that all the members have the same interest (y).

Different interests.—Where, however, the parties have not a common interest, they must all be on the record; thus it is a recognized principle that in a partition suit all co-parceners must be brought before the Court (z). Similarly in a suit for contribution brought by a promisor, all the promisors bound to contribute must be brought before the Court (a).

Where the plaintiff represents an association or group of persons.—Where the plaintiff fills a representative character, the provisions of this rule may be availed of. Thus the secretary of an association cannot sue alone in respect of a matter in which the association is interested even if he is authorised so to do by a resolution of the members of the association. The suit must be brought by all the members of the association, or by the secretary on his own behalf and on behalf of the other members under this rule (b). So, if the treasurer of an association misappropriates the funds of the association, no one member can sue alone to recover the amount misappropriated, though he may be authorised so to do by a resolution of the association. The suit must be brought by all the members, or by any one member on his own behalf and on behalf of the other members (c). But no suit can be brought under this rule if the association is divided into two parties, one party being for the suit and the other against it. In such a case it cannot be said that the two parties have the same interest in the suit "within the meaning of this rule (d).

Fraudulent transfer.—A suit to set aside a deed of gift or of trust on the ground that it is in fraud of creditors must be brought by or on behalf of all the creditors. Such a suit cannot be entertained if it is brought by only some of the creditors (e).

Suit by a member of a community in his own right.—This rule is an enabling rule. It does not debar a member of a community from maintaining a suit in his own right, though the act complained of is injurious to the whole community. Thus, if Mahomedans belonging to a particular sect are not allowed to use a mosque for prayer, any member of the sect entitled to use the mosque may sue as plaintiff to enforce the right. It is not necessary that the suit should be brought by him on behalf of himself and all other members of the sect entitled to use the mosque. Similarly, any member of a community may bring a suit to set aside unauthorized alienations of endowed property or of property belonging to the community, or for the removal of encroachments upon such property (f), or for maladministration of property belonging to the community (g).

At what stage of the suit leave should be obtained.—The proper course is to obtain permission before the suit is instituted, but there is nothing in the rule that if it is not so done, it cannot be granted afterwards. Permission under this rule may therefore be granted even after the institution of the suit (h).

Whether the leave should be express.—It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that the leave to sue need not be express: it is enough if it can be

O. 1, r. 8. gathered from the proceedings (i). On the other hand, there is a dictum of Stuart, C.J., in the Allahabad case of Hiralal v Bhairon (j), that the leave to sue must be express.

Leave must be granted to definitely named persons.—Where this was not done, the suit was dismissed by the High Court of Calcutta (k). The other Courts would probably grant fresh leave in such a case. See notes above, "At what stage, of the suit, etc."

"May be sued."—This rule applies not only to the case of numerous plaintiffs having the same interest, but also to the case of numerous defendants having the same interest. Thus where the inhabitants of a village assert a right of way over land belonging to the plaintiff, the plaintiff may, with the permission of the Court, sue any one or more of the inhabitants on behalf of them all (l). The consent of the defendants on the record is not necessary for this purpose (m).

"May defend."—When there are numerous defendants having the same interest, any one of them "may be sued" on his behalf and on behalf of others. But where this is not done, and all the defendants are on the record, any one defendant "may defend" the suit on behalf of himself and the rest with the permission of the Court.

Who should apply for permission.—(1) Where a plaintiff intends to sue on behalf of himself and others, it is the plaintiff that should apply for the permission. (2) Similarly where a plaintiff intends to sue one defendant for himself and others, it is the plaintiff that should apply for the permission. (3) Where numerous defendants having the same interest are all sued, and they are all on the record, and if any one defendant is appointed by the other defendants to defend the suit on behalf of all, it is that defendant that has to apply for the permission.

Notice and the object of it.—Where a person sues, or is sued, or defends, a suit, on behalf of himself and others, any decree that may be passed in the suit is binding upon them all (s. 11, Explanation VI), unless the decree has been obtained by fraud or collusion (Evidence Act, 1872, s. 44). It is therefore necessary that notice of the suit should be given to all the parties who would be bound by the decree, for otherwise a person might be concluded by a suit of which he never may have heard. It is, however, open to any one of the parties, whose name does not stand on the record and who would be bound by the decree under the provisions of this rule and sec. 11, to apply to the Court under sub-rule (2) to be made a party to the suit, and the Court will add him as a party, provided he satisfies the Court that his interest will be seriously prejudiced if he is not joined as a party (n).

Court shall give notice by personal service or by public advertisement.—These words show that it is the duty of the Court to cause service of the notice or cause an advertisement to be published. It is the duty of the plaintiff, however, to move the Court for that purpose. But if he omits to do so, his suit should not be dismissed on account of the failure of the Court to perform the duties imposed upon it by this rule (o).

Title of suit.—The title of the suit in such cases is as follows [see Appendix A, Pleadings, (1) Titles of suits]:—

A, B, on behalf of himself and all other creditors of X. Y. 	} Plaintiff.
vs.
C. D. 	} Defendant.

Decree in a representative suit.—The general rule of law is that in suits where one person is allowed to represent others as defendants in a representative capacity, any decree passed can bind those others only with respect to the property of those others which he can in law represent, and no personal decree can be passed against them, although the party on record eo nomine may be made personally liable. This is the principle to be applied to suits to which O. 1, r. 8, is applicable (p). It has consequently been held that an injunction in a decree in this class of cases is not binding on those who are not actually parties on the record (q).

Costs in a representative suit.—As to costs in a representative suit, see the observations of Marton, J., in the undermentioned case (r).

Abatement of suit.—Where a suit is brought under this rule by A on behalf of himself and 29 others, two of whom are C and D who never applied to the Court to be made parties under sub-r. (2), the death of C or D does not cause the suit to abate (s).

9. [S. 31, R. S. C., O. 16, r. 11.] No suit shall be defeated by reason of the misjoinder or non-joinder of parties, and the Court may in every suit deal with the matter in controversy so far as regards the rights and interests of the parties actually before it.

Misjoinder and non-joinder.

Misjoinder r non-joinder of parties.—A misjoinder or non-joinder of parties is not fatal to the suit (t). Where there is a misjoinder of parties, the name of the plaintiff or the defendant who has been improperly joined, may be struck out under r. 10, sub-r. (2) below, and where there is a non-joinder of persons who are necessary parties to the suit, they may be added as parties under the same rule.

As to the stage at which objections as to misjoinder or non-joinder of parties should be taken, see r. 13 below.

Limitation.—This rule should be read subject to the provisions of s. 22 of the Limitation Act, 1908 (u). It is provided by that section that where, after the institution of a suit, a new plaintiff or defendant is substituted or added, the suit shall, as regards time, be deemed to have been instituted when he was so made a party.

10. [Ss. 27, 32, 33, R. S. C., O. 16, rr. 2, 11, 39.] (1) Where a suit has been instituted in the name of the wrong person as plaintiff or where it is doubtful whether it has been instituted in the name of the right plaintiff, the Court may at any stage of the suit, if satisfied that the suit has been instituted through a bona fide mistake, and that it is necessary for the determination of the real matter in dispute so to do, order any other person to be substituted or added as plaintiff upon such terms as the Court thinks just.

(2) The Court may at any stage of the proceedings either upon or without the application of either party, and on such terms as may appear to the Court to be just, order that the name of any party improperly joined, whether as plaintiff or defendant, be struck out, and that the name of any person who ought to have been joined, whether as plaintiff or defendant, or whose presence before the Court may be necessary in order to enable the Court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in the suit, be added.

(3) No person shall be added as a plaintiff suing without a next friend or as the next friend of a plaintiff under any disability without his consent.

(4) Where a defendant is added, the plaint shall, unless the Court otherwise directs, be amended in such manner as may be necessary; and amended copies of the summons and of the plaint shall be served on the new defendant and, if the Court thinks fit, on the original defendant.

(5) Subject to the provisions of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, section 22, the proceedings as against any person added as defendant shall be deemed to have begun only on the service of the summons.

SUB-RULE (1).

Sub-rule (1) is the equivalent of s. 27 of the Code of 1882. It corresponds to R. S. C., O. 16, r. 2.

Scope of sub-rule (1).—Sub-rule (1) contemplates cases in which a suit is brought by a plaintiff, and he subsequently finds out that he cannot get the full relief he seeks without joining some other person as co-plaintiff (v), or, where it is found that some other person, and not the original plaintiff, is entitled to the relief claimed. In the former case, the application (which must be made by the original plaintiff) will be for adding, and in the latter for substituting that other person as plaintiff. But the Court must be satisfied before the application is granted that the amendment has become necessary through a bona fide mistake on the part of the original plaintiff. The mistake may be either one of fact (w) or of law (x). Where the Court of first instance takes one view of the law and the Court of Appeal takes another, that in itself is evidence of a bona fide mistake (y).

(y) [1902] K. B. 485, at p. 486. supra.

Cases in which amendment has been allowed.—(1) The Official Assignee O. 1, r. 10. of Madras constitutes A. B., Official Assignee of Bombay, his attorney to institute a suit on his behalf in Bombay. * A. B., instead of suing as “constituted attorney of the Official Assignee of Madras,” sues by mistake as “Official Assignee of Bombay.” The plaint may be amended under sub-rule (1) by substituting the former description for the latter: Sardarmal v. Arandayal (1897) 21 Bom. 205.

(2) A Hindu appoints A guardian of the property of his minor son under his will. There is no executor appointed under the will. A, believing that his appointment as guardian has the effect of constituting him executor of the will by implication, sues B to recover certain property belonging to the estate of the deceased. The Court finds that A is not executor by implication. The plaint may be amended by substituting the son as plaintiff: Seshamma v. Chennappa (1897) 20 Mad. 467. [In this case the amendment was allowed in second appeal.]

(3) A sues B for work done under a contract. B contends that the contract has been assigned by A to C, and A therefore has no right to sue. A admits the assignment, but says that the assignment is not absolute but by way of charge only, and that he has therefore a right to sue. It is found that the assignment to C is absolute and that there was a bona fide mistake on the part of A in believing that the assignment was by way of charge only. The plaint may be amended by substituting C as plaintiff: Hughes v. Pump House Hotel Co. [1902] 2 K. B. 485.

In the last-mentioned case, B objected to the amendment on the ground that, it having been found that the assignment was an absolute one, A had no cause of action at the time the action was brought, but the objection was overruled. Cozens-Hardy, L.J., said: “It is said that the rule does not apply when it is shown that the plaintiff has no right of action, but there are abundant authorities to the contrary effect.” The cases cited in the judgment in that case clearly show that the plaint would have been allowed to be amended, if that was the application, by adding C as plaintiff. This interpretation of O. 16, r. 2, of the English Rules, which corresponds in wording with sub-rule (1) of this rule, would seem to be opposed to the view taken by the High Court of Bombay. It would seem that the Bombay Court would not allow an amendment if the original plaintiff had no right of action at the time the suit was brought (z). But this view, it is submitted, is not correct, and one of the cases cited by that Court in support of its view affirms the contrary (a). In a recent case, the High Court of Madras expressly held that the fact that the original plaintiff has no cause of action does not take away the jurisdiction of the Court to order the substitution of another person as plaintiff (b).

Cases in which amendment not allowed.—It would seem that no amendment should be allowed under sub-rule (1), if the rights in dispute between the new plaintiff and the defendant would not be the same as those in dispute between the original plaintiff and the defendant. A suit is brought by an importer of “Roskopf Patent” watches for infringement of trade-mark, alleging that he has got the exclusive right to use the trade-mark in India. The trade-mark belongs to the manufacturer, and not to the importer. The importer is subsequently advised that he cannot sue on the manufacturer's trade-mark, and he thereupon applies that the manufacturer may be either added or substituted as plaintiff. If the manufacturer is made a party, his claim will raise questions as to how far he is entitled to the trade-mark in the country of its origin, and

O. 1, r. 10. consequently in India. That would be a case wholly different from that of the importer. Can the manufacturer be made a party under these circumstances? The question arose in a Bombay case (c). Batty, J., said that the point was one on which there seemed to be considerable room for doubt. Eventually the application was refused on the ground that it was made too late.

Upon such terms as the Court thinks fit.—Liberty to amend may be given upon the terms that the plaintiff should pay to the defendant his costs of the suit upto and including the order of amendment, and that the new plaintiff should only be entitled to such relief as he could have claimed if the suit had been commenced at the date on which he was added as a party (d).

Consent.—No person can be added or substituted as plaintiff under sub-rule (1) without his consent. Thus a company cannot be made a plaintiff in a suit without its consent (e). See sub-rule (3).

Limitation.—Section 22 of the Limitation Act provides that when after the institution of a suit, a party is substituted or added as a plaintiff or defendant, the date of substitution or addition is to be deemed, as regards that party, as the date of institution. It has been held that this provision of the law relates only to the addition of parties under sub-rule (2), and not under sub-rule (1). The result is that a party may be substituted or added under sub-rule (1) even after the period of limitation. Thus where an agent sued in his own name, and subsequently, at a time when a new suit would have been barred by limitation, his principals were substituted as plaintiffs, it was held that the suit being the same, the change of parties did not affect the question of limitation (f).

SUB-RULES (2) to (5).

Sub-rules (2), (3) and (5) correspond to s. 32 of the Code of 1882 and to R. S. C., O 16, r. 11. Sub-rule (4) corresponds to s. 33 of the Code of 1882.

Old section.—Under the old section 32 there was a distinction between the power of the Court to strike out parties and the power to add parties. Under that section the power to strike out parties could only be exercised on the application of a party, and that too if the application was made on or before the first hearing. But the power to add parties could be exercised by the Court at any time, and even without any application. Under sub-rule (2), the power to strike out as well as to add parties may be exercised by the Court at any stage of the proceedings, and even without any application by a party.

“At any stage of the proceedings.”—The power to strike out or add parties may be exercised at any stage of the proceedings. Thus fresh parties were added in one case after a decree had been passed and a reference made to the Commissioner to take accounts and sell the property (g). In another case fresh parties were added after a suit had been reinstated under s. 108 of the Code of 1882 [now O. 9, r. 13] (h). In a Calcutta case a fresh party was added in a suit for partition after the preliminary decree had been passed and the Commissioner had made his report, but before the drawing up of the final decree (i). Under the corresponding English rule it has been held that the Court has jurisdiction to allow amendment even after final judgment, so long as anything remains to be done in the action, though it be only assessment of damages (j).

Parties when added.—A person may be added as a party to a suit in the O. 1, r. 10. following two cases only :—

(1) when he ought to have been joined as plaintiff or defendant, and is not so joined, or

(2) when, without his presence, the questions in the suit cannot be completely decided.

There is no jurisdiction to add a party in any other case (k). Thus a person should not be added as a defendant merely because he would be incidentally affected by the judgment (l).

Parties cannot be added so as to introduce quite a new cause of action.—A purchased goods from B by sample. The bulk did not correspond with the sample, and A thereupon sued B for damages. B contended that he had purchased the goods in question from X by sample, and applied that X should be added as a party to the suit, as the question between him (B) and X was the same as the question between him (B) and A (viz., whether the goods were according to the sample), so as to relieve him (B) from the necessity of bringing a fresh suit against X in the event of the Court holding that the goods were not according to the sample. Held, refusing B's application, that X was not a person who "ought" to be joined as a party to the suit, nor was his presence necessary to decide "the questions involved in the suit." In this case A had nothing to do with X, and to add X as a party would be to introduce a new cause of action which existed only as between B and X. The Court would then have to inquire into the circumstances under which B's agreement with X was entered into, an inquiry with which A had nothing to do (m).

Parties cannot be added so as to alter the nature of the suit.—A sued for his share of the estate of a deceased relative. On an application to have other persons interested in the said estate added as parties to the suit, it was held that the Court could not add them as parties, as to do so would be to alter the nature of the suit by converting it into a general administration suit (n).

A defendant may be made a plaintiff.—A brought a partnership suit for accounts against 12 defendants. He then settled with most of the defendants, and applied to the Court for leave to withdraw the suit or that the suit might be dismissed. Two of the defendants objected to the dismissal of the suit, and applied that they might be made plaintiffs, and that the plaintiff might be made a defendant and the suit proceeded with. The Court granted the application (o).

Striking out name of party "improperly joined."—The impropriety referred to in this rule is in introducing a party who has no connection with the relief claimed in the plaint (p).

"Who ought to have been joined."—Sub-r. (2) provides for the addition of (1) necessary parties and (2) of proper parties. Necessary parties are parties "who ought to have been joined," that is, parties necessary to the constitution of the suit without whom no decree at all can be passed (q). Proper parties are those whose presence enables the Court to adjudicate more "effectually and completely" (r) see next paragraph].

O. 1, r. 10. Thus all co-sharers are necessary parties to a suit for partition and they should all be joined as parties to the suit. Similarly, in a suit to recover trust property, all the trustees must be joined as parties [O. 31, r. 2]. But the Official Assignee is not a necessary party in a suit against an insolvent (s) [see O. 22, r. 10, notes "Assignment of interest," ills. (3) and (4)]. In a suit to set aside an order for rateable distribution all persons interested in the distribution must be parties to the suit (t); see s. 73. See notes below, "Limitation Act."

"Whose presence before the Court may be necessary."—A person may be added as a defendant to a suit, though no relief may be claimed against him, provided his presence is necessary for a complete and final decision of the questions involved in the suit (u). Such a person is called a proper party as distinguished from a necessary party. Thus if a suit is brought by a legatee against an executor for a legacy, but the estate is not sufficient to pay all the legacies in full, the executor may apply under sub-rule (2) that the other legatees may be made parties, so that if any rateable abatement is requisite, the extent of such abatement may be ascertained in a manner binding on all the legatees (v). See notes above, "Who ought to have been joined."

"Questions involved in the suit."—This refers to questions as between plaintiffs and defendants, and not to questions which may arise between co-plaintiffs or between co-defendants inter se (w).

Improper addition of plaintiff or defendant.—Sub-rule (2) does not enable a Court to override the effect of O. 2, r. 3. Hence if the joinder of a person as plaintiff would result in a misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action, or the joinder of a person as defendant would result in a misjoinder of defendants and causes of action, the application should be refused (x).

Joint contractors.—See notes to O. 1, r. 6, "Joint liability on a contract."

Consent of person added as plaintiffs.—If any person who ought to have been joined as plaintiff does not consent to join as plaintiff, he may be made a defendant in the suit. The proper course is first to require him to join as plaintiff, and if he refuses to join as plaintiff, then to join him as defendant. But the suit should not be dismissed merely because he is joined as defendant without being first called upon to join as plaintiff (y).

Limitation Act, sec. 22, provides amongst other things that when, after the institution of a suit, a party is added as a plaintiff or defendant, the date of addition is to be considered as regards that party as the date of the institution of the suit. It has been held under this section that where necessary parties are not joined within the period of limitation, the suit must be dismissed. Necessary parties mean parties necessary to the constitution of the suit (z), that is, persons whose joinder is necessary to enable the court to award such relief as may be given in the suit as framed (a). Thus in a suit by one of several joint promisees the other promisees are necessary parties for no relief can be given to one of them. The suit is not perfectly constituted unless all the co-promisees join, for the plaintiff can only enforce his claim in conjunction with them. If in such a suit the other promisees are not joined within the period of limitation, the suit must be dismissed (b). Similarly where A, B and C were three partners, and A sued B only for a partnership account, and C was added as a defendant after the period of limitation, the suit was dismissed (c). On the same ground, where a member of a joint Hindu family sued in his own name for a joint debt without making the other members parties to the suit, and the defendant raised an objection on the ground of non-joinder, and the period of limitation had by that time expired, it was held that it was too late to join the other members as co-plaintiffs, as the claim was at that date time-barred, and the suit was accordingly dismissed (d). And the suit must likewise be dismissed, even if the Court of its own motion adds the other members as plaintiffs in circumstances such as those mentioned above. The mere fact that the Court of its own motion orders that the name of any person be added as a party does not render the provisions of s. 22 inapplicable to the case (e). There is nothing in sub-rule (2) which frees the Court, when acting of its own motion, from the restrictions of the Limitation Act; in other words, a Court, acting under sub-rule (2), is bound by the provisions of s. 22 of the Limitation Act (f). On the other hand, when a suit can be, and is, constituted without joining certain persons as parties, and they are subsequently added as parties for the benefit of the defendants to ensure them against further litigation, the suit should proceed though they are added as parties after the expiry of the period of limitation and the Court should award such relief as may be given in the suit as framed: to such a case the provisions of s. 22 do not apply (g). It has similarly been held that that section does not apply when a person is added as a party merely to enable the Court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon the questions involved in the suit without any relief being claimed against him (h). It has also been held that that section does not apply where a person is joined as a defendant in a suit, and the Court subsequently orders that he may be added as a plaintiff (i). In a case before the Privy Council, where relief was claimed against a debtor's estate, but no one of the defendants was impleaded as representing the estate, and subsequently, though after the expiration of the period of limitation prescribed for the suit, one of the defendants [i.e., a person already a party to the suit] was impleaded as sebit and as representing the estate, it was held that s. 22 of the Limitation Act did not apply to the case (j).

Appeal.—No appeal lies under this Code from any order made under this rule. But where the name of a defendant is struck out under this rule on the ground that the plaint does not disclose any cause of action against him, the order operates as a decree and is appealable as such (jj).

11. [S. 32, 6th para. Cf. R. S. C., O. 16, r. 39.] The Court may give the conduct of the suit to such person as it deems proper.

rr. 12, 13

12. [S. 35.] (1) Where there are more plaintiffs than one, any one or more of them may be authorized by any other of them to appear, plead or act for such other in any proceeding; and in like manner, where there are more defendants than one, any one or more of them may be authorized by any other of them to appear, plead or act for such other in any proceeding.

Appearance of one of several plaintiffs or defendants for others.

(2) The authority shall be in writing signed by the party giving it and shall be filed in Court.

13. [S. 34.] All objections on the ground of non-joinder or misjoinder of parties shall be taken at the earliest possible opportunity and, in all cases where issues are settled, at or before such settlement, unless the ground of objection has subsequently arisen, and any such objection not so taken shall be deemed to have been waived.

Objections as to non-joinder or misjoinder.

Scope of the rule.—This rule refers to two kinds of objections, the one for non-joinder of parties and the other for misjoinder of parties. These objections must be taken at the earliest possible opportunity, and, in all cases where issues are settled, at or before such settlement, otherwise the objection will be deemed to have been waived (k). It is for the plaintiff to join all necessary parties to the suit and to exclude unnecessary parties. Where the plaintiff fails in this, it is for the defendant to raise the necessary objection.

“Unless the ground of objection has subsequently arisen.”—These words are new. When the ground of objection has arisen subsequent to the settlement of issues, the objection may be taken even after the settlement of issues. In fact, it was so held under the old section though the words “unless the ground of objection has subsequently arisen” did not occur in that section. Thus if a co-parcener or a reversioner or a remainderman is born after the settlement of issues in a suit to which he is a necessary party, the defendant may object to his non-joinder, though it be after the settlement of issues, if the plaintiff does not take steps to join him as a party to the suit. Thus in a partition suit all co-parceners must be joined as parties, even though some of them may be born after the institution of the suit. Similarly, where a woman who is a party to a suit is married after the settlement of issues, and the nature of the suit is such that the husband is a necessary party to it, the plaintiff should take steps to have the husband made a party to the suit, otherwise the defendant may object for non-joinder of the husband, though it be after the settlement of issues (l).

As to misjoinder of causes of action, see O. 2, r. 7.

ORDER II.

Frame of Suit.

1. [S. 42.] Every suit shall as far as practicable be framed so as to afford ground for final decision upon the subjects in dispute and to prevent further litigation concerning them. O. 2,
rr. 1, 2.

Frame of suit.

From this rule read with rule (2) below, the intention of the Legislature appears to be that as far as possible all matters in dispute between the parties relating to the same transaction should be disposed of in the same suit (m).

2. [S. 43.] (1) Every suit shall include the whole of the claim which the plaintiff is entitled to make in respect of the cause of action; but a plaintiff may relinquish any portion of his claim in order to bring the suit within the jurisdiction of any Court.

Suit to include the whole claim.

(2) Where a plaintiff omits to sue in respect of, or intentionally relinquishes, any portion of his claim, he shall not afterwards sue in respect of the portion so omitted or relinquished.

Relinquishment of part of claim.

(3) A person entitled to more than one relief in respect of the same cause of action may sue for all or any of such reliefs; but if he omits, except with the leave of the Court, to sue for all such reliefs, he shall not afterwards sue for any relief so omitted.

Omission to sue for one of several reliefs.

Explanation.—For the purposes of this rule an obligation and a collateral security for its performance and successive claims arising under the same obligation shall be deemed respectively to constitute but one cause of action.

Illustration.

A lets a house to B at a yearly rent of Rs. 1,200. The rent for the whole of the years 1905, 1906 and 1907 is due and unpaid. A sues B in 1908 only for the rent due for 1906. A shall not afterwards sue B for the rent due for 1905 or 1907.

v. Thiruvengadam (1908) 31 Mad. 385 394-396.

O. 2, r. 2. Changes in the section.—The words “obtained before the first hearing” after the words “the leave of the Court” [see sub-rule (3)] have been omitted. The words “and successive claims arising under the same obligation” have been added into the Explanation. The illustration has been expanded as so to comprise the case of rent due for a period subsequent to the one for which the suit is brought.

Cause of action.—For the definition of cause of action see notes to s. 20, “Cause of action,” p. 86 above.

Splitting of claim.—The object of the rule is, to use the language of r. 1, “to prevent further litigation.” For that purpose the rule provides that every suit shall include the whole of the claim which the plaintiff is entitled to make in respect of the same cause of action. He shall not be entitled to split his cause of action into parts, and bring separate suits in respect thereof. If he omits to sue in respect of, or intentionally relinquishes, any portion of the entire claim arising from the same cause of action, he will be precluded from suing in respect of the portion so omitted or relinquished, though he may allege in his plaint that he intends bringing a second suit for the portion omitted (n). But a plaintiff will not be said to have omitted to sue in respect of a portion of his claim, within the meaning of this rule unless he was, at some time prior to the suit, aware or informed of the claim or of the facts which would give him a cause of action (o). If the plaintiff was aware of the claim, and omitted to sue in respect thereof, he could not afterwards sue in respect thereof, though the omission was accidental or involuntary (p). For the definition of cause of action, see notes to s. 20, “Cause of action,” p. 86 above.

Illustrations.

(1) A owes B Rs. 2,200. B may relinquish Rs. 200 to bring his suit within the jurisdiction of a Presidency Small Cause Court, and may sue A in that Court for Rs. 2,000. Here the relinquishment being intentional, B cannot afterwards sue A for Rs. 200, the portion relinquished. But if the suit is transferred, on A's application, to the High Court, B may add Rs. 200 to his claim, the High Court having jurisdiction over the entire claim: Ramlall v. Bhajahari (1895) 1 C. W. N. 32.

(2) A Mahomedan wife sues her husband to recover property belonging to her including Government paper of the value of Rs. 10,000, and a decree is passed in her favour. She afterwards sues the husband to recover from him Government paper of the value of Rs. 500, alleging that she omitted to include the same in the previous suit by an oversight. The suit is barred, for she was aware of her claim when she brought the previous suit: Buzloor Ruheem v. Shumsoonnissa (1867) 11 M. I. A. 551.

(3) Where a promissory note is payable by instalments, and two or more instalments have become due, and the holder of the note sues only for one of the instalments and omits to sue for the other instalments, he cannot afterwards sue for those instalments: Mackintosh v. Gill (1874) 12 B. L. R. 37.

(4) A accompanies B, a pleader, to Hardwar, as B's medical attendant, for which Rs. 1,300 become due to him as his fees. B passes a promissory note to A for Rs. 700, and agrees as for the balance of Rs. 600 to do certain legal work for A. B dies without doing the legal work undertaken by him. A sues C, B's son, upon the promissory note, and a decree is passed for him. He then brings another suit against C to recover the Rs. 600, alleging that the legal work which B had agreed to do for him had not been done. The suit for the recovery of Rs. 600 is barred: Preonath v. Bishnath (1907) 29 All. 256. The above decision has been dissented from by the High Court of

(5) Set-off.—A sues B for Rs. 200. As against the said claim, B claims to set off Rs. 200, being part of a sum of Rs. 1,200 alleged to be due to him by A, but omits to counterclaim from A the balance of Rs. 1,000. B cannot afterwards sue A to recover Rs. 1,000: Nawbut v. Mahesh (1905) 32 Cal. 654.

(6) Continuous account.—When a tradesman has a bill against a party for any amount in which the items are so connected together that it appears that the dealing is not intended to terminate with one contract, but to be continuous, so that one item if not paid shall be united with another and form one continuous demand, the whole together forms but one cause of action and cannot be divided: Bonsey v. Wordsworth (1856) 18 C. B. 325, 334; Kedar Nath v. Denobundhu (1915) 42 Cal. 1043.

(7) Omission of portion of a claim in a suit against one of several promisors.—The omission of a portion of a claim in a suit against one of several promisors is no bar to a subsequent suit against another promisor in respect of the portion so omitted. A lets a house to B and C at a yearly rent of Rs. 1,200. The rent for the whole of the years 1905, 1906 and 1907 is due and unpaid. A sues B in 1908 for the rent due for 1907. A cannot afterwards sue B for the rent due for 1905 or 1906, but he can sue C for the rent due for those two years (g). See the illustration to the present rule.

Explanation to the Rule :—

A. Obligation and collateral security for its performance.—The Explanation to the present rule is not intended to be an illustration of the foregoing provisions, but a substantive enactment, making an obligation and a collateral security for its performance (which would otherwise be two independent causes of action) one cause of action for the purposes of the rule (r). See notes below, "Exceptions to the rule against splitting of reliefs."

B. Successive claims arising under the same obligation constitute a single cause of action.—The words "successive claims arising under the same obligation" have been added into the Explanation, and the illustration to the rule has been expanded, to give effect to a Calcutta decision where it was held that a claim in respect of all arrears of rent constitutes a single cause of action (s). The illustration shows that if rent has become due for the years 1905, 1906 and 1907, the landlord can bring only one suit for the whole of the rent in arrears, and that if he sues for the rent due for a particular year only, he will be precluded from suing for the rent due for the other years. It must, however, be noted that though this rule precludes the landlord from bringing a fresh suit for rent not included in the former suit, it does not prevent him from adopting any other remedy the law gives him to recover the rent. Thus though in the case put in the illustration the landlord cannot sue for the rent due for the year 1905 or 1907, he can distrain for the rent due for those years (t). See also ill. (7) above.

Interest due on a mortgage or on a promissory note, maintenance, malikana, &c., are other instances of "successive claims arising under the same obligation."

Distinct causes of action.—If the cause of action in the subsequent suit is different from that in the first suit, the subsequent suit is not barred (u). What the

When the question is whether the cause of action in the subsequent suit is identical with that in the first suit, one great criterion is whether the same evidence will maintain both actions (w). For the definition of cause of action, see notes to s. 20, "Cause of action," p. 86 above.

(1) A, claiming as his father's heir, sues B for possession of certain lands. He then sues C, also as his father's heir, for possession of another plot of land. The second suit is not barred, for the causes of action in the two suits are entirely distinct, and, moreover, the suits are against different individuals: Dampanaboyina v. Addala (1902) 25 Mad. 736; Narayan v. Shamrao (1903) 27 Bom. 379.

(3) A sues B for specific performance of an agreement for the sale to him of B's land, and obtains a decree. In execution of the decree A is put in possession of a portion only of the land as it is found that the rest of the land did not belong to B, but to B's son. A subsequent suit by A against B for recovery of an aliquot portion of the price to the extent of the son's share is not barred under this rule, the cause of action being entirely distinct: *Venkatarama v. (5) A suit to eject a tenant holding under a lease is no bar to a subsequent suit against him for rent under the same lease: Subraya v. Rathnavelu (1909) 32 Mad. 330.

(6) The dismissal of a suit for a declaration of title on the ground that the plaintiff was not in possession is no bar to a subsequent suit for possession: Darbo v. Kesho Rai (1879) 2 All. 356; Sarsuti v. Kunj Behari Lal (1883) 5 All. 345; Jivunti Nath v. Shub Nath (1882) 8 Cal. 819; Mohan Lal v. Bilaso (1892) 14 All. 512. Similarly the dismissal of a suit for an injunction to restrain the defendant from interfering with the plaintiff's possession of certain land on the ground that the plaintiff was not in possession is no bar to a subsequent suit for possession: Bande Ali v. Gokul Misir (1911) 34 All. 172.

(7) A sues B upon a promissory note, but the action fails owing to a material alteration in the note. A is not precluded from subsequently suing B on the original cause of action, i.e., from suing B to recover the consideration for which the note was given. The two causes of action are quite distinct: Payana v. Pana Lana (1913) 41 I. A. 142; Beni Ram v. Ram Chandar (1914) 36 All. 560. See also Bhag Bhari v. Gujar Mal (1917) Punj. Rec., no. 63, p. 230.

dispossessed A of his moiety, sues B for damages for demolition of the structures and appropriation of the materials. A decree is passed in the suit for A. Subsequently A, alleging that after the demolition of the structures B had been occupying the entire property to the exclusion of A by denying A's title thereto, sues B for a declaration of title to one moiety of the land and for separate possession thereof. Here the cause of action is the act of dispossession, and it being the same in both the suits, the second suit is barred under this rule: Khardah Company Ltd. v. Durga Charan (1919) 46 Cal. 640. O. 2, r. 2.

For other cases see foot-note (x).

First suit for possession, subsequent suit for mesne profits.—There is a conflict of decisions as to whether a suit for possession of land is a bar under this rule to a subsequent suit for mesne profits of such land accrued due prior to the institution of the suit for possession (y). The Courts that have held that a suit for possession is no bar to a subsequent suit for mesne profits proceed on the ground that the cause of action for possession is not the same as the cause of action for mesne profits. These Courts therefore have also held that a suit for mesne profits is no bar to a subsequent suit for possession (z). But a suit for possession, it has been held, is no bar to a suit for mesne profits accrued due subsequent to the suit for possession (a). See O. 20, r. 12.

First suit for interest due on a mortgage, second suit for principal.—Where the principal secured by a mortgage has become due, and the mortgagee sues for interest only, the suit for interest is a bar to a subsequent suit for principal (b), unless there is a separate covenant for the payment of interest secured in a separate manner, e. g., a covenant enabling the mortgagee to sue for overdue interest without calling in the principal after the date fixed for the payment of principal (c).

First suit for produce payable under a mortgage, second suit for possession.—By a mortgage bond it is provided that the mortgagor should pay a share of the produce of the mortgaged land to the mortgagee every year, and that in default the mortgagee should have the right to take possession of the land. A suit by the mortgagee in 1897 for the value of the produce of the land for 1896 is a bar to a subsequent suit for possession on the mortgagor's failure to pay the produce for subsequent years. The mortgagee ought to have claimed possession in the first suit (d). The correctness of this decision is open to question.

Properties held under separate titles.—A plaintiff is not bound to include in the same suit separate properties held by different persons under different titles (e). But he is bound to do so if the properties are held by the same defendant though under different titles (f).

Different causes of action arising from the same transaction.—This rule does not require that when several causes of action arise from one transaction, the

O. 2, r. 2. plaintiff should sue for all of them in one suit. What the rule lays down is that where there is one entire cause of action, the plaintiff cannot split the cause of action into parts so as to bring separate suits in respect of those parts. As observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Payana v. Pana Lana (g), the rule "is directed to securing the exhaustion of the relief in respect of a cause of action, and not to the inclusion in one and the same action of different causes of action, even though they arise from the same transaction." This may be illustrated by the English case of Brunsdon v. Humphrey (h). In that case A's cab came into collision with B's van. The collision caused (1) damage to A's cab, and (2) bodily injury to A. A sued B for damage done to his cab, and B paid into Court the amount claimed. Subsequently A brought another action against B for the bodily injury sustained by him. B pleaded that A was precluded from bringing a separate action for the bodily injury. The Court held that A was not so precluded. In this case the transaction that occasioned damage to the cab and bodily injury to A was the same, but the cause of action in respect of damage to the cab was distinct from that for injury to the person. A, therefore, had the option to join in one action the claim for damage to the cab and that for injury to the person, or to bring two distinct actions in respect of the two causes of action. So long as the causes of action are distinct, it is competent to a party to bring as many actions as there are causes of action even though all the causes of action may arise from the same transaction. But A cannot bring one action for damage to one part of the cab, and then another action for damage to another part of the cab, for this would be to split the cause of action. Nor can he for the same reason bring one action for damages for bodily injury to certain limbs of his body and subsequently another action for injury to other limbs. Upon the same principle, where A agreed to purchase 10 bales of yarn from B, and took delivery of 7 bales, but failed to pay the price of those bales, and as regards the remaining 3 bales refused to take delivery thereof, it was stated by Garth, C.J., in Anderson v. Kalagarla (i), that a suit by B against A to recover damages for failure to take delivery of the three bales was not a bar to a subsequent suit by B to recover from A the price of the 7 bales. The learned judge held that a claim for the price of goods sold was a cause of action of a different nature from a claim for damages for the non-acceptance of goods, and the fact that both the claims arose under the same contract did not constitute them one and the same cause of action. Wilson, J., expressed a different opinion, stating that the claims having arisen under the same contract, the cause of action was but one, and that the subsequent suit was therefore barred. The opinion of Wilson, J. was followed in Duncan v. Jeetmull (j), which also was a case of breach of one and the same contract. These two cases show that all existing breaches of the same contract must be joined in the same suit; but they have been held not to apply to the case where there are two separate contracts, though contained in the same instrument (k). Thus where it is expressly provided by an indent that each monthly shipment and item should be treated as a separate contract, the plaintiff is entitled to bring a separate suit for damages (l) in respect of each shipment. See notes below, "He shall not afterwards sue in respect of the portion so omitted."

In this connection we may mention a point which was left open by their Lordships of the Privy Council, namely, whether a mortgagee who holds several mortgages on the same property can treat them, with respect to the provisions of this rule, as separate causes of action, or whether he must bring one suit on all the mortgages (m). This question has since been decided by the Indian Courts, as to which see notes to s. 11 O. 2, r. 2. under the head, "Application of the above rules to suits on mortgage," p. 44 above.

"Where a plaintiff omits to sue in respect of any portion of his claim."

This rule refers to a case where a suit has been filed and the plaintiff omits in such suit to sue in respect of a portion of the claim (n). It does not apply where no suit has been filed at all, as where a plaint is returned to the plaintiff for presentation to the proper court and the plaintiff does nothing further in the matter (o), nor does it apply where a suit is filed and subsequently withdrawn without the leave of the Court under O. 23, r. 1, below (p).

"He shall not afterwards sue in respect of the portion so omitted."—It has been held by the Calcutta High Court that the present rule refers to a case where there has been a suit in which there has been an omission to sue in respect of portion of a claim and a decree has been passed in that suit. So long as no decree is passed, a second suit in respect of the portion so omitted is not barred. It follows from this that where a suit brought in respect only of a portion of a cause of action has not been heard and decided, the Court may allow the plaint in the suit to be amended by adding the omitted portion of the claim (q). Similarly if such a suit is withdrawn under O. 23, r. (1) (2), with liberty to bring a fresh suit, the plaintiff may include in the fresh suit the portion that was omitted in the suit withdrawn by him (r).

A sues B in respect of a portion only of a cause of action. Pending this suit A brings another suit against B in respect of the remaining portion of the same cause of action. According to the Calcutta decision cited above neither suit is a bar to the other so long as no decree is passed in either suit. It is open, therefore, to A to rectify his error in bringing two suits in respect of the same cause of action by applying for leave to amend the plaint in either suit by adding the omitted portion which forms the subject-matter of the other suit, and then withdrawing the other suit under O. 23, r. 1 (1). The Courts however, have gone further and held that if in such a case A is allowed to withdraw from either suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit under s. 23, r. 1 (2), he is entitled to bring a fresh suit by virtue of the leave granted to him, though the other suit has been carried to a decision (s).

Omission to sue for one of several reliefs.—Where a person is entitled to more than one relief in respect of the same cause of action, he may sue for all the reliefs, or he may sue for one or more of them and reserve his right with the leave of the Court to sue for the rest (t). If no such leave is obtained, he will be precluded from afterwards suing for any relief so omitted (u). But if the right to the relief in respect of which a further suit is brought did not exist at the date of the institution of the former suit, the subsequent suit is not barred (v). The leave of the Court must be obtained at the time of the institution of the suit. The leave, if granted, is good even if the pecuniary value of the relief allowed to be omitted from the suit exceeds the pecuniary limits of the Court granting the leave (w).

rent, and (2) also for possession of the land on the ground that the lease has become void, and he may sue for both these reliefs. If he sues for rent only, and does not reserve his right with the leave of the Court to sue for possession, he cannot afterwards sue for possession: Subbaraya v. Krishna (1883) 6 Mad. 159. Similarly if he sues for possession only, and does not reserve his right with the leave of the Court to sue for arrears of rent, he cannot afterwards sue for the rent: Kashinath v. Nathoo (1914) 38 Bom. 444.

(2) A agrees to sell his land to B. B sues A for specific performance of the agreement, and obtains a decree. B then sues A for possession of the land. Is the suit for possession barred under this rule? Yes, according to the decision in Narayana v. Kandasami (1899) 22 Mad. 24, the reason given being that the right to possession arises coincidentally with the right to the execution of conveyance. No, according to the decision in Krishnammal v. Soundataraja (1913) 38 Mad. 698, the reason given being that the right to possession accrues only on the execution of the deed of conveyance.

(3) On 1st March, 1905, A enters into an agreement with B for the sale of his lands to B, the sale to be completed on 1st August 1905. It is agreed that B should pay part of the purchase-money on the date of the agreement, and that A should, on such payment being made, put B in possession of the land. B pays part of the purchase-money and A puts him in possession. The sale is not completed on 1st August owing to certain differences between the parties. On 15th August, A forcibly removes B from the land, and enters into possession. Thereupon B sues A for possession, but omits to sue for specific performance of the agreement for sale. B cannot afterwards sue A for specific performance: Rangayya v. Nanjappa (1901) 24 Mad. 491, 28 I. A. 221, with facts slightly varied.

(4) The dismissal of a suit for a declaration of title under s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877, on the ground that the plaintiff not being in possession ought to have prayed for possession also, but had omitted to do so, is not a bar under the present rule to a subsequent suit for a declaration of title and for possession, though based on the same title; the reason given is that the cause of action in the second suit is not in such a case entirely the same as that in the first suit: Jibunti v. Shile Nath (1882) 8 Cal. 819; Nonoo Singh v. Anand (1885) 12 Cal. 291; Mohan Lall v. Bilaso (1892) 14 All. 512; Sayed Suleman v. Bontala (1913) 38 Mad. 247.

Exceptions to the rule against splitting of reliefs —

1. Order 34, rule 14.—Sub-rule (3) provides that where a person entitled to more than one relief in respect of the same cause of action omits, except with the leave of the Court, to sue for all such reliefs, he cannot afterwards sue for any relief so omitted. According to this sub-rule, if a mortgagee sues the mortgagor on the personal covenant to repay the mortgage-debt, and omits to sue for sale of the mortgaged property, he cannot afterwards sue for sale unless he has reserved his right to do so with the leave of the Court. To this, however, there is an exception, being that contained in O. 34, r. 14. The latter rule may be stated thus: a mortgagee sues the mortgagor to recover the mortgage-debt from the mortgagor personally, and obtains a decree. He then applies for the attachment and sale of the mortgaged property in execution of the decree. The mortgaged property may be attached, but it cannot be sold in execution proceedings. The only mode of bringing it to sale is by instituting a fresh suit for sale. O. 34, r. 14, says that the mortgagee may institute such a suit notwithstanding anything contained in O. 2, r. 2 (x). The suit will be one under s. 67 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882. It must, however, be noted that though O. 34, r. 14, allows a mortgagee to split his remedies, it does not allow him to split his claim (y).

rr. 2, 3.

2. Order 34, rule 6.—The effect of this rule is that where a mortgagee has obtained a decree for sale of the mortgaged property, and the property is sold, but the net sale proceeds are not sufficient to pay the mortgage-debt, he may subsequently apply for a decree for the balance, notwithstanding anything contained in O. 2, r. 2, although a claim to such relief has not been included in his suit (z). This, however, is not strictly an exception, for no separate suit has to be brought for a decree for the balance.

3. Deccan Agriculturists' Relief Act, 1879 (as amended by Act XXII of 1882), s. 15 A.—The effect of the said section is to allow a mortgagor to split his remedies by providing in effect that if he sues the mortgagee for an account, he will not be precluded from suing him subsequently for redemption (a).

Summary of the above notes:—

- (a) One and the same transaction may give rise to several distinct causes of action, and a plaintiff may bring as many suits as there are causes of action.
- (b) One and the same cause of action may give rise to several reliefs, but a plaintiff may not bring separate suits in respect of those reliefs except with the leave of the Court.
- (c) Not more than one suit can be brought in respect of a single cause of action, in other words, a plaintiff cannot split a cause of action.

Amendment of plaint.—See notes above, “He shall not afterwards sue in respect of the portion so omitted.”

Withdrawal of one of two pending suits.—See notes above, “He shall not afterwards sue in respect of the portion so omitted.”

Minors.—The provisions of this rule apply to adults as well as minors. Thus a suit by a minor by his guardian and next friend for rent due for 1903 and 1904 will bar a subsequent suit by the minor, on attaining majority, for the rent due for 1901 and 1902. The acts of a guardian in the conduct of a suit must be upheld, unless it is shown that they were unreasonable or improper (b).

Execution proceedings.—The present rule does not apply to proceedings in execution of a decree. A decree-holder may therefore present successive applications for realizing different portions of his decree. Thus if a decree gives reliefs for possession and costs, there is nothing in the Code which prevents separate and successive applications for execution as regards either of them (c).

3. [S. 45, Cf. R.S.C., O. 18, r. 1.] (1) Save as otherwise provided, a plaintiff may unite in the same suit several causes of action against the same defendant, or the same defendants jointly; and any plaintiffs having causes of action in which they are jointly interested against the same defendant

O. 2, r. 3. or the same defendants jointly may unite such causes of action in the same suit.

(2) Where causes of action are united, the jurisdiction of the Court as regards the suit shall depend on the amount or value of the aggregate subject-matters at the date of instituting the suit.

Scope of the rule.—O. 1, r. 1, deals, as the marginal note to that rule indicates, with joinder of plaintiffs, O. 1, r. 3, deals with joinder of defendants. The present rule deals with joinder of causes of action. It is to be read subject to the provisions of rr. 4 and 5 below, as is shown by the words "save as otherwise provided" (d). It is also to be read subject to the provisions of O. 1, r. 1, and O. 1, r. 3. The frame of a suit may not be supported by this rule, and yet it may be justified by O. 1, r. 1, or O. 1, r. 3 (e). Rules 6 and 7 of this Order are to be read with this rule.

Cause of action.—See notes to s. 20 under the head "Cause of action," on p. 86 above.

One plaintiff, one defendant, and two or more causes of action.—Where there is only one plaintiff, and only one defendant, the rule says that the "plaintiff may unite in the same suit several causes of action against the same defendant," provided, of course, that the provisions of rr. 4 and 5 of this Order, are not contravened. If the causes of action are so disconnected that they cannot be conveniently tried together, the Court may order separate trials under r. 6 below. Those trials, however, will not be distinct suits, but they will be in the nature of sub-suits under the title and number of the principal suit from which they spring (f). In Saccharin Corporation, Ltd. v. Wild (g), the plaintiff corporation, the owners of twenty-three patents for saccharin, sued the defendant for alleged infringement of all the trade-marks. There were thus twenty-three causes of action united in one suit. It was ordered that the suit should be confined in the first instance to any three of the patents which the plaintiffs might select. Collins, M.R., said: "Now, we start here with a writ launched covering twenty three causes of action. Prima facie, in old days, one cause of action was thought to be enough. That was gradually more or less relaxed, and one cause of action was allowed to be coupled with one or two subordinate or necessarily connected causes of action. Then came, by the Rules under the Judicature Acts, a still further relaxation, but always subject to the one underlying principle, namely, that the burden lay on the plaintiff to prove his case, and that no extra burden should be imposed on the defendant through the plaintiff needlessly enlarging the area of dispute. Prima facie, a dozen causes of action cannot be combined in one writ: they must be so intimately connected as to justify their being included in one writ; but when one finds no less than twenty-three, that seems to me to be an outrageous extension of the latitude given by the rules to the plaintiff" (h). Cozens-Hardy, L.J., said: "The action strikes me as almost an abuse of the process of the Court" (i).

Misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action.—Where there are two or more plaintiffs and two or more causes of action, the rule says that "any plaintiffs having causes of action in which they are jointly interested against the same defendant

. . . may unite such causes of action in the same suit." But the rule is to be read subject to the provisions of O. 1, r. 1. The result is that where there are two or more plaintiffs and two or more causes of action, they may be joined in one suit if the right to the relief and the causes of action arise from the same act or transaction and that there is a common question of law or fact, though they may not all be jointly interested in all the causes of action. But if the right to the relief claimed does not arise from the same act or transaction or if there is no common question of law or fact, the plaintiffs cannot all join in one suit unless they are jointly interested in the causes of action as provided by this rule (ii). See notes to O. 1, r. 1, "New Rule," ills. (1) to (4), on p. 338 above.

Where the plaintiffs are not jointly interested in the causes of action united in one suit, the suit is said to be bad for misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action. X sells to Y two plots of land adjoining each other, one of which is claimed by A by adverse possession and the other by B by adverse possession. Under the Code of 1882 A and B could not join together as plaintiffs in one suit against X and Y, for the evidence of adverse possession by A would not be evidence of adverse possession in favour of B and vice versa (j). The same would seem to be the case under this Code.

Procedure in case of misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action :—

Where a plaint is defective by reason of misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action, the Judge to whom the plaint is presented may return it for amendment (O. 6, r. 17).

Where the defect is not noticed when the plaint is presented, but is brought to the notice of the Court at a later stage (see r. 7 below), the Court may—

- (a) grant leave to the plaintiffs to amend the plaint within a time fixed by the Court, and may order that if the amendment is not made within the time prescribed, the suit shall stand dismissed with costs. Where leave is granted to amend, the plaintiffs have got to elect as to which of them should proceed with the suit as filed, and the plaint should then be amended by striking out the names of the other plaintiffs and making consequential amendments (k) [see O. 6, rr. 17, 18]; or,
- (b) order the plaint to be taken off the file, if the case has proceeded no further than the filing of the plaint, and the circumstances are such that the suit cannot be conveniently continued by one plaintiff after amendment (l). This, however, is a rare case.

[Note.—Where leave is granted to amend, the Court may allow the defendant to amend his written statement to meet the case of the particular plaintiff who has elected to proceed with the suit (m).

Where a suit is bad for misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action, it is not proper to dismiss the suit without giving the plaintiff an opportunity of amendment (n). If the suit is dismissed on account of misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action, and the plaintiffs appeal from the decree, the appellate Court may set aside the decree and remand

Where the defendant objects to the frame of a suit on the ground that the suit is bad for misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action, but the objection is overruled, and a decree is passed for the plaintiffs, and the defendant appeals from the decree on the ground that the suit ought to have been held to be bad for misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action, the appellate Court should not interfere with the decree, though it may find that the suit is bad for misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action, unless the misjoinder has affected the merits of the case. Such is the effect of the provisions of s. 99 of this Code which provides inter alia that no decree shall be reversed or substantially varied in appeal on account of any misjoinder of parties or causes of action, where such misjoinder does not affect the merits of the case. The italicized words are new. They did not occur in the corresponding s. 578 of the Code of 1882. They have been added into s. 99 to supersede the practice followed by the Courts under the old Code. Under that Code, where a decree was passed for the plaintiffs in a suit involving a misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action, and an appeal was preferred by the defendant from the decree on the ground that the suit ought to have been held to be bad for misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action, the course adopted by the appellate Court was to reverse the decree in appeal, and remand the case to the lower Court with directions to that Court to return the plaint to the plaintiffs for amendment, so that the plaintiffs might elect which of them should continue as plaintiffs in the suit (p). Such a course would not have been necessary if the Courts had held that a misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action was an irregularity such as could be condoned under s. 578. But it was held that a misjoinder of this kind was outside the scope of that section, and hence the practice followed in appeal of reversing the decree and remanding the case (q). The effect of the provisions of s. 99 is to preclude the appellate Court from reversing a decree on the ground of misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of actions and remanding the case to the lower Court as was done under the old Code, unless the misjoinder has affected the merits of the case.

Misjoinder of defendants and causes of action.—Where there are two or more defendants and two or more causes of action, the rule says that the “plaintiff may unite in the same suit several causes of action against the same defendants jointly.” “Joint interest in the main questions raised by the litigation is a condition precedent to the joinder of several causes of action against several defendants” (r). If the causes of action alleged are separate and the defendants are arrayed in different sets, the suit is bad for misjoinder of defendants and causes of action, technically called multifariousness (s). “There is no provision in the Code allowing distinct causes of action against distinct sets of defendants, that is to say, causes of action in which the defendants are not all jointly interested, to be united in one suit” (t). This rule, however, is to be read subject to the provisions of O. 1, r. 3, which relates to joinder of defendants. Therefore, when there are two or more defendants and two or more causes of action, they may be joined as defendants in one suit if the right to the relief claimed arises from the same act or transaction and there is a common question of law or fact, though they may not all be jointly interested in all the causes of action. But if the right to the relief claimed does not arise from the same act or transaction or if there be no common question of law or fact, the defendants cannot all be joined in one suit unless they are jointly interested in the causes of action as provided by this rule (u). See notes to O. 1, r. 3, "New Rule," 'ills. (4), (5) and (6), p. 341 above. The following are instances of cases in which it was held that the suit was bad for misjoinder of defendants and causes of action :

Suits held to be multifarious.

1. B agrees to sell certain lands to A. A sues B and a third person C alleging that B was willing to execute the deed of sale, but that he was unable to do so, as C held possession of the title deeds under a false claim of an equitable lien upon the lands, and that he had refused to deliver them up. As against B, A claims specific performance of the contract, and as against C he asks for a declaration that he has no lien upon the lands and for delivery up of the title deeds. The suit is bad for misjoinder of defendants and causes of action. The two causes of action are entirely distinct : they do not arise from the same transaction ; nor would their trial involve any common question of law or fact : Luckumsey v. Fazulla (1881) 5 Bom. 177, following De Houghton v. Money (1876) L. R. 2 Ch. App. 166 ; distinguished in Krishnasami v. Sundarappayyar (1884) 18 Mad. 415.

What is laid down in De Houghton v. Money and Luckumsey v. Fazulla is that "if on the face of the plaint, or of the plaintiff's case, it appears that a third party, who was not a party to the contract upon which the suit was brought, had a distinct interest, but which interest is sought to be declared null and void upon some equitable ground, such a claim against the said third party could not be made a fact of the suit. In the case of De Houghton v. Money it was admitted by the plaintiff that there was a conveyance in favour of Money, but it was said that that conveyance was executed under such circumstances as would make it a voidable one ; and in the case of Luckumsey v. Fazulla, it was distinctly admitted by the plaintiff that the third party, who was not a party to the contract, had a distinct interest" (v). It is different, however, where A (purchaser) sues B (vendor) and C (vendor's benamidar), claiming specific performance against B and a declaration against C that C is a mere benamidar. In such a case, the two defendants are identical and there is but one cause of action. There is therefore no misjoinder : Mokund Lall v. Chotay Lall (1884) 10 Cal. 1061, 1068-1069.

2. Seven different salt manufacturers enter into seven different contracts with A to manufacture salt for A, and deliver it in his factory. A, alleging that all the seven persons had failed to deliver salt according to the terms of the agreement with them brings one suit against them for a decree that they might be directed to deliver the salt to him. The suit is bad for multifariousness, for the breach of each contract gives rise to a distinct cause of action, and no one defendant is interested in any of the causes of action arising from the breach of contract with the other defendants : Namasivaya v. Kadir Ammal (1894) 17 Mad. 168.

3. A and B at Madras enter into an agreement to carry on business in partnership at Silangoor, and they send C as their agent to Silangoor to conduct the business there. A, alleging that C had failed to carry out his instructions and to furnish accounts, and that B was colluding with C, sues B and C, claiming dissolution of partnership as against B, and damages for breach of contract as agent as against C. The suit is bad for multifariousness, for there are two distinct causes of action and neither defendant is liable

4. A joint Hindu family, consisting of 3 members A, B and C, owns several properties. A agrees to sell his share to P. A fails to execute the necessary sale-deed. P sues A for specific performance, and includes in the suit a claim for partition and possession against all the members of the family, namely, A, B and C. The suit is bad for misjoinder. The claim for partition cannot be joined with the claim for specific performance, as at the date of the suit the plaintiff had no right to sue for partition not having completed his title by a sale-deed: Wallis, C.J., said: "The other members of the family were no parties to the alleged contract and therefore were not proper parties to the suit in so far as it is a suit for specific performance, and it would in my opinion be a distinct hardship to them to force them to defend a suit for partition which would not lie if the plaintiff failed to prove his contract" Rangayya v. Subramania (1917) 40 Mad. 365 [F. B.]. See ill. (1) above.

In ills. (1) and (3) what were really two suits were combined into one. In ill. (2) what were really seven suits were united in one suit. In all these cases it was held that the suit was bad for misjoinder of defendants and causes of action. The reason why the law forbids a joinder in one suit of distinct causes of action against different defendants each of whom is unconnected with the cause of action against the others, may thus be stated in the words of Peacock, C.J. (u): "Such a joinder . . . complicates the case before the Judge, and renders it exceedingly difficult for him in dealing with the case of each defendant to exclude from his consideration those portions of the evidence which may not be admissible against him, though admissible against one or more of the others. Moreover, it is vexatious and harassing to the different defendants. Such a procedure renders it almost compulsory on all the defendants to be present either in person or by their pleaders, whilst the case is going on against the others in respect of matters in which they are not interested; and, moreover, it is harassing and inconvenient as regards the attendance of the witnesses of the several defendants, as it renders it necessary for the witnesses of each to be present, and to be detained whilst the case of the others is being heard and determined." For further illustrations, see notes to O. 1, r. 3, under the heads "New Rule," p. 340 above, and "Severally," p. 343 above.

Procedure in case of multifariousness (misjoinder of defendants and causes of action).—Where a plaint is defective by reason of misjoinder of defendants and causes of action, the Judge to whom the plaint is presented may return it for amendment (O. 6, r. 17).

Where the defect is not noticed when the plaint is presented, but is brought to the notice of the Court at a later stage (see r. 7 below), the Court may, on the application of the plaintiff, and on such terms as to costs as the Court thinks proper, grant leave to the plaintiff to withdraw from the suit against those defendants who are not interested in the cause of action in respect of which he elects to proceed with liberty to bring a fresh suit or suits against them (x) [O. 23, r. 1], or allow the plaintiff to amend the plaint by striking out the names of those defendants and making consequential amendments (O. 6, r. 17). Where leave to amend is granted to the plaintiff, and the plaintiff does not amend within the time fixed by the Court, he will not be permitted to amend after the expiration of that period, and the suit, it is presumed, will be dismissed, unless the O. 2, r. 3, time is extended by the Court (y). See O. 6, r. 18.

Where the plaintiff's suit is dismissed as being multifarious, and the plaintiff appeals from the decree on the ground that the suit is not multifarious, the appellate Court may confirm the decree if it finds that the suit is multifarious (z).

Where the defendants object to the frame of a suit on the ground that the suit is multifarious, but the objection is overruled, and a decree is passed for the plaintiff, and the defendants appeal from the decree on the ground that the suit ought to have been held to be multifarious, the appellate Court should not interfere with the decree, though it may find that the suit is multifarious, unless the misjoinder has affected the merits of the case. It is so provided by s. 99, which declares inter alia that no decree shall be reversed or substantially varied in appeal on account of any misjoinder of parties or causes of action, where such misjoinder does not affect the merits of the case. The words italicized above are new. They did not occur in the corresponding s. 578 of the Code of 1882. They have been inserted in s. 99 to supersede the practice followed by the Courts under the old Code. Under that Code, where a decree was passed for the plaintiffs in a suit which was bad for multifariousness, and an appeal was preferred by the defendants from the decree on the ground that the suit ought to have been held to be multifarious, the course adopted by the appellate Court was either to reverse the decree of the lower Court and dismiss the plaintiff's suit (a), or to sustain the decree of the lower Court as against a particular set of defendants in respect of the causes of action in which they were jointly interested, and grant permission to the plaintiff to withdraw from the suit against the other defendants with liberty to bring a fresh suit or suits against them (b). Such a course would not have been necessary had the Courts held that a misjoinder of defendants and causes of action was an irregularity such as could be cured by s. 578. But it was held that the section did not apply to a misjoinder of this kind, and that even if it did apply, the misjoinder should be regarded as a defect that must affect the merits of the case within the meaning of that section (c). The insertion of the words "on account of any misjoinder of parties or causes of action" in s. 99 makes it quite clear that the appellate Court should not interfere with a decree at all where the only objection to the decree is that of multifariousness unless the misjoinder has affected the merits of the case.

Two or more defendants and one cause of action.—Every case of multifariousness presupposes more than one cause of action. Hence where there is only one cause of action, there can be no multifariousness.

Suits held not to be multifarious.

1. A, alleging that his brother B mortgaged his (A's) share in his father's property to C without his knowledge and consent, and that C was in possession as mortgagee, sues B and C for a declaration of title to his share of the property, and for possession of the share. The suit is not bad for multifariousness, for there are no two causes of action, but only one, namely, the infringement of A's right of ownership by B. The mortgage and dispossession are both acts evidencing the infringement of A's right: Indur Kuar v. Gur Prasad (1899) 11 All. 33; Mazhar Ali v. Sajjad Husain (1902) 24 All. 358; *Kubra Jan v. - O. 2, r. 3. 2. A sells three properties by private contract to B. After the sale to B, all the three properties are attached in execution of a decree held by C against A, and they are sold in execution to D, E and F, respectively. A suit by B against A (the vendor), C (the decree-holder), and D, E and F (execution-purchasers), to set aside the execution sale, is not bad for multifariousness: Haranund v. Prosunno Chunder (1883) 9 Cal. 763; Gumani v. Ram Charan (1878) 1 All. 555.

Note.—In the Calcutta case cited above, Garth, C.J., said: “The plaintiff has but one object, namely, to establish his private purchase as against the claim in execution; and the defendants who contest his claim have but one defence, which is common to them all, viz., that the plaintiff’s purchase is invalid.”

Unnecessary parties added as defendants.—Where persons who are not necessary parties are joined as defendants, they should be deemed not to be parties at all in considering whether or not the suit is bad for multifariousness. A and B are two co-sharers of a village. A and B sell their respective shares to C by two separate deeds of sale. D, alleging that he is entitled to pre-empt the property, sues A, B and C for pre-emption. Here the suit is not bad for multifariousness, for A and B being vendors, they are not necessary parties to a suit for pre-emption and the suit is against one defendant only, namely, C (d).

Suit for ejectment by the real owner against holders under derivative titles from a trespasser as the common source.—In a suit for possession all persons claiming by derivative titles from a trespasser as the common source may be joined as defendants. A obtains a lease of a piece of land from B, and enters into possession of the land. Subsequently B, ignoring the lease, lets the land in separate portions and by separate leases to C, D and E. A sues B, C, D and E to eject them from the land. The suit is not bad for multifariousness. In this, as in every action of ejectment, there is but one cause of action, namely, dispossession. It is immaterial that C, D and E claim under different titles. The title by which they claim forms no part of the plaintiff’s cause of action (e). It is different, however, if they do not all claim under the same trespasser. Thus if A owns lands, and he is dispossessed of one portion by B, of another portion by C, and of a third portion by D, A cannot bring one suit for possession against B, C and D (f).

Where two or more persons conspire together to commit a wrong, or to commit a breach of several contracts entered into with them separately by the plaintiff, they may all be joined as defendants in one suit.—The reason is that the plaintiff has in such a case but one cause of action against all the defendants, namely, a conspiracy to do the act complained of. Thus if in ill. (2) on p. 371 above the seven salt manufacturers had conspired together not to deliver the salt to A, A could have brought one suit against them all. Similarly, if A and B conspire together to assault C, C may bring one suit against them for damages for assault (g). Upon the same principle where A obtained a decree against B for possession of certain lands in which 86 persons had distinct and separate tenures, and those 86 persons combined together to keep A out of possession and declined to pay the rent to him, it was held that A might join the 86 tenants as defendants in one suit for a declaration of his proprietary right to the lands (h). But separate suits should be brought if there is no collusion or combination between the tenants (i).

Two or more plaintiffs, two or more defendants, and two or more causes of action.—In such a case the plaintiffs must be jointly interested in the causes of action, and the defendants also must be jointly interested in the causes of action. The rule says: "Any plaintiffs having causes of action in which they are jointly interested against the same defendants jointly may unite such causes of action in the same suit." If the plaintiffs are not jointly interested in the causes of action, the suit will be bad for misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action. If the plaintiffs are jointly interested in the several causes of action, but the defendants are not, the suit will be bad for multifariousness. And if neither the plaintiffs nor the defendants are jointly interested in the causes of action, the suit will be bad for a double misjoinder, namely, misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action and misjoinder of defendants and causes of action. Thus if A agrees to sell and deliver salt to B, and C agrees to sell and deliver salt to D, and B and D sue A and C for damages for breach of the contracts entered into with them respectively, the suit is bad for a double misjoinder. Neither plaintiff has any interest in the cause of action of the other, nor has either defendant any interest in the cause of action against the other. But if two contracts are entered into each between B and D of the one part and A and C of the other part, B and D may bring one suit against A and C on the two contracts.

rr. 3, 4.

Jurisdiction.—Where a plaintiff combines several causes of action against the same defendant in one suit, the jurisdiction of the Court as regards the suit depends on the value of the aggregate subject-matters (j). See sub-r. (2).

4. [S. 44, R.S.C., O. 18, r. 2.] No cause of action shall, unless with the leave of the Court, be joined with a suit for the recovery of immoveable property, except—

Only certain claims to be joined for recovery of immoveable property.

- (a) claims for mesne profits or arrears of rent in respect of the property claimed or any part thereof;
- (b) claims for damages for breach of any contract under which the property or any part thereof is held; and
- (c) claims in which the relief sought is based on the same cause of action:

Provided that nothing in this rule shall be deemed to prevent any party in a suit for foreclosure or redemption from asking to be put into possession of the mortgaged property.

Old section.—This rule corresponds with s. 44, C. P. C., 1882, except in the following particulars:—

1. The rule contained in s. 44 applied to (1) suits for the recovery of immoveable property, and to (2) suits to obtain a declaration of title to immoveable property. The words, "or to obtain a declaration of title to immoveable property," have been omitted in this rule, so that the operation of the present rule is confined only to those cases where a cause of action is sought to be joined with a suit for the recovery of immoveable property.

2. Clause (c) of the rule is new. See notes below under the head "Claims in which the relief sought is based on the same cause of action."

3. The proviso to the rule is also new. It is taken from R. S. C., O. 18, r. 2.

Joinder of claims.—This rule deals with what may be called joinder of claims. It declares that no claims other than those specified in the three exceptions shall be joined without the leave of the Court with a suit for the "recovery of immoveable property." The object of the rule is to prevent a joinder with a claim for the recovery of immoveable property of claims of other and dissimilar character. If such latter claims are proposed to be joined with a claim for the recovery of immoveable property, the leave of the Court must first be obtained, and such leave will only be granted if the Court thinks that the two classes of claims can be conveniently disposed of together in one suit. But no leave is necessary where claims are joined in which the relief sought is based on the same cause of action [see cl. (c)].

This rule does not apply to a joinder of several claims all for the recovery of immoveable property. A plaintiff may therefore bring one suit for possession of several immoveable properties without the leave of the Court. Thus if A owns 29 parcels of land, and he is dispossessed of all these parcels by B, A may, without the leave of the Court bring one suit against B for the recovery of all the plots. Here there is a joinder of 29 claims, but they are all claims for the recovery of immoveable property (k). Similarly if A owns two plots of land in respect of which B is entitled to pre-emption, and A sells both the plots to C on the same day by two separate deeds of sale, B may claim pre-emption of both the plots in one suit without the leave of the Court (l). On the same principle, a mortgagee holding two mortgage deeds over separate properties from the same person may join both in one suit for sale or foreclosure, without the leave of the Court (m).

Suit for the recovery of immoveable property.—An action to establish title to immoveable property not claiming possession, is not an action for the recovery of immoveable property within the meaning of this rule so as to require the leave of the Court for its joinder with another cause of action (n). Similarly, an action to restrain trespass on immoveable property is not an action for the recovery of immoveable property (o). A suit for a declaration that an alleged mortgage is not a mortgage and for possession, or in the alternative for an account and for redemption, does not require the leave of the Court under this rule. "In either case he [plaintiff] asks for possession—possession at once if there is no valid mortgage, and possession upon payment of what may be found due if the mortgage is valid" (p). A suit for recovery of a mortgage debt, with an alternative prayer for sale of the mortgaged property, is not a suit for the recovery of immoveable property within the meaning of this rule (q).

Claims in which the relief sought is based on the same cause of action:—

1. Joinder of claims for recovery both of moveable and immoveable property.—This rule is to be read with r. 2 above which directs that every suit shall include the whole of the claim which the plaintiff is entitled to make in respect of the same cause of action (r). Hence there is nothing irregular in seeking to recover immoveable and moveable property in one suit without the leave of the Court, if the cause of action is the same in respect of both. Nay, if the plaintiff in such a case sues to recover only one of the two kinds of property, he will be precluded from suing for the other by virtue of the provisions of r. 2 above. Thus where a Mahomedan died leaving two heirs, A and B, and C purchased from A certain immoveable property which had come to A's share, and from B certain moveable property which had come to B's share, and both the properties were at the time of purchase in the wrongful possession of D, it was held that not only could C sue D for the recovery of both the moveable and immoveable property in one suit without the leave of the Court, but that if he did not do so, he would be precluded from afterwards suing for the property omitted in the first suit (s). In the above case, the cause of action in respect of both the properties was the same, namely, dispossession and refusal to deliver up the property on demand. But if the cause of action is not the same, a claim for the recovery of moveable property may not be joined with a claim for the recovery of immoveable property without the leave of the Court (t). Thus a claim against an administrator for damages for malfeasance under ss. 146 and 147 of the Probate and Administration Act, 1881, cannot be joined with a claim for recovery by the plaintiff of his share of immoveable properties alleged to have been bought by the administrator with moneys belonging jointly to the plaintiff and the administrator (u).

2. A plaintiff may join, without the leave of the Court, in an action for the recovery of immoveable property, other claims, such as a claim for a declaration of title, for an account of the rents and profits, for the appointment of a receiver, and for an injunction to restrain the defendant, from receiving the rents, provided such claims do not amount to a new cause of action, and are "mere machinery" (v).

Proviso to the rule.—The proviso to the rule enables a plaintiff to claim in one suit redemption or foreclosure and possession.

Leave of Court.—Leave should be obtained before the plaint is filed (w). But the leave under this rule is not a condition precedent to jurisdiction, and it may therefore be granted on good cause shown even after the institution of the suit (x). Under the Code of 1882 it was held that an objection that the plaintiff had joined together claims which, under s. 44 of that Code could not be joined together without the leave of the Court, should be taken in the Court of first instance, and that if it was not so taken, it should be regarded as waived, and it should not be entertained by the Court of appeal (y). Under this Code, the objection should be taken at the earliest possible opportunity, and in all cases where issues are settled, at or before such settlement. If it is not so taken, it will be deemed to have been waived (r. 7 below). And even if the objection is taken in time and disallowed, the appellate Court should not interfere with the decree in appeal merely on the ground that claims which ought not to be joined under this rule have been joined in one suit unless the misjoinder has affected the merits of the case (s. 99 above).

Where a claim cannot be joined with a claim for the recovery of immoveable property without the leave of the Court, it is optional with the plaintiff either to obtain the leave and bring one suit in respect of both the claims, or to bring separate suits in respect of each of them. The plaintiff is not confined to the first only of these two courses (z).

Counterclaim.—This rule applies to a counterclaim as well as to an original action (a).

O. 2, Appeal.—No appeal lies from an order under this rule rejecting an application
rr. 4, 5. for leave to join a claim with a claim for the recovery of immoveable property (b).

5. [S. 44, R. S. C., O. 18, r. 5.] No claim by or against an executor, administrator, or heir, as such, shall be joined with claims by or against him personally, unless the last-mentioned claims are alleged to arise with reference to the estate in respect of which the plaintiff or defendant sues or is sued as executor, administrator, or heir, or such as he was entitled to, or liable for, jointly with the deceased person whom he represents.

Scope of the rule.—This rule provides that no claim by a person in his representative character shall be joined in the same suit with claims by him personally, nor shall claims against a person in his representative character be joined with claims against him personally—

- (1) unless the claims by or against him personally arise with reference to the estate which he represents, or
- (2) unless he was entitled to, or liable for, those claims jointly with the deceased person whom he represents.

The object of the rule is to prevent an executor or administrator from intermingling the assets of his testator with his own moneys (c).

Illustrations.

(a) A is a tenant for life of certain property, and B is the remainderman. A gives a lease of the property to C. A dies leaving a will of which B is the sole executor. Some months after A's death, B sues C (1) for arrears of rent due to the estate of A, and (2) for rent due to him personally subsequent to A's death. Here the first claim is by C as executor, and the second claim is by him personally as remainderman. The claim by C personally does not arise with reference to the estate of A of which C is executor. The two claims therefore cannot be joined together in the same suit: Tredegar v. Roberts [1914] 1 K. B. 283.

(b) A dies leaving a will of which B is the executor. By his will A directs B to continue his business. The executor purchases for the purposes of A's business certain goods from C in his own name. C may in such a case sue B for the price of the goods, and he may claim the price against B personally, or, in the alternative, against him as executor. The reason is that the personal claim against B arises with reference to the estate of which he is the executor. But if B purchased certain goods from C as executor in the course of the administration of A's estate, and other goods under a separate contract altogether in his own name and expressly for the purpose of his own business, C cannot join both claims against B in one suit (d).

(c) The second branch of the rule may be illustrated by the following case: A and B jointly purchase goods from C. A dies leaving a will of which B is the executor. Here A and B are jointly liable for the price of the goods. C may therefore sue B for the price in his (B's) personal as well as representative character. If A and B had purchased goods from C under separate contracts, C ought to bring two separate suits against B, one as A's executor to recover the price of goods sold to A, and the other against B personally to recover the price of the goods sold to him (B).

rr. 5, 6.

Heir as such.—An heir may sue or be sued in his personal capacity, or he may sue or be sued in his representative capacity. [See notes to O. 7, r. 4.] The words “claim by an heir as such” in this rule refer to a claim by him in his representative capacity, that is, as representing the estate of the deceased whose heir he claims to be (e).

Illustrations.

1. A Mahomedan dies leaving a widow and daughters by a predeceased wife. The widow sues the daughters (1) for her dower, and (2) for her share of the inheritance in her husband's estate. It is contended on behalf of the daughters that the first claim is by the widow personally, and that the second claim is by her as an heir, and that the two claims cannot be joined in one suit. This contention is not sound, for the second claim cannot be said to have been preferred by an heir as such. That claim is not made by the widow as representing her husband's estate and for the benefit of the estate, but for her own and personal benefit. The two claims may therefore be joined in one suit: Ahmad-ud-din v. Sikander (1896) 18 All. 256.

2. A Hindu widow sues her husband's executors to recover (1) certain ornaments forming part of her stridhana, and (2) her share in her husband's estate. The suit is properly constituted: Hafizaboo v. Mahomed (1907) 31 Bom. 105, dissenting from Ashabai v. Haji Tyeb (1882) 6 Bom. 390; Jankibai v. Shrinivas (1913) 38 Bom. 120 [suit against husband's coparceners for stridhana and maintenance]. See ill. (1) above.

Procedure.—Where two claims which this rule does not allow to be joined are joined in one suit, the practice is to amend the plaint by striking out one of them, and the suit may then be proceeded with (f).

Objection as to misjoinder when to be taken.—See r. 7 below, and s. 99 above.

6. [S. 45, 2nd para. R. S. C., O. 18, r. 1.] Where it appears to the Court that any causes of action joined in one suit cannot be conveniently tried or disposed of together, the Court may order separate trials or make such other order as may be expedient.

Power of Court to order separate trials.

This rule does not apply to cases of misjoinder, but to cases where several causes of action have been properly joined in one suit and the causes of action so joined cannot be conveniently tried together (g). See notes to r. 3 above under the head “One plaintiff, one defendant, and two or more causes of action,” p. 368 above.

- O. 2, r. 7. 7. [New.] All objections on the ground of misjoinder of causes of action shall be taken at the earliest possible opportunity and, in all cases where issues are settled, at or before such settlement, unless the ground of objection has subsequently arisen, and any such objection not so taken shall be deemed to have been waived.

Objection as to misjoinder.

This rule is new. In the absence of any such provision in the Code of 1882 it was held that an objection on the ground of misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action or of misjoinder of defendants and causes of action could be taken for the first time in appeal and even in second appeal. This rule places objections on the ground of misjoinder of causes on the same footing as objections on the ground of non-joinder and misjoinder of parties as regards the time when they should be taken. See O. 1, r. 13.

The misjoinder of causes of action referred to in this rule is not only the misjoinder contemplated by r. 3 above, but that contemplated by rr. 4 and 5 above. See also s. 99.

Additional rule framed by the Chief Court of the Punjab.—See Appendix VII below.

ORDER III.

Recognised Agents and Pleadors.

- O. 3, r. 1. 1. [S. 36.] Any appearance, application or act in or to any Court, required or authorized by law to be made or done by a party in such Court, may, except where otherwise expressly provided by any law for the time being in force, be made or done by the party in person, or by his recognized agent, or by a pleader duly appointed to act on his behalf:

Appearance, etc., may be in person, by recognized agent or by pleader.

Provided that any such appearance shall, if the Court so directs, be made by the party in person.

Appearance.—If a recognized agent, although able to do so, does not conduct the case on behalf of his principal, his mere presence in Court is not an “appearance” in the suit within the meaning of r. 6 or r. 8 of O. 9 (h). See notes to O. 9, r. 9, “Meaning of Appearance.”

Authority.—When a suit is brought by a person professing to act as another person’s agent, the Court has the power to enquire into the agent’s authority (i).

Application for leave to sue in forma pauperis—Such an application cannot be made by a recognized agent (j). See O. 33, r. 3.

rr. 2-4.

(a) persons holding powers-of-attorney, authorizing them to make and do such appearances, applications and acts on behalf of such parties ;

(b) persons carrying on trade or business for and in the names of parties not resident within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court within which limits the appearance, application or act is made or done, in matters connected with such trade or business only, where no other agent is expressly authorized to make and do such appearances, applications and acts.

Alterations made in the rule by the High Court of Bombay under s. 122.—See Appendix IV below, Rules made by the High Court of Bombay.

3. [S. 38.] (1) Processes served on the recognised agent of a party shall be as effectual as if the same had been served on the party in person unless the Court otherwise directs.

Service of process on recognised agent.

(2) The provisions for the service of process on a party to a suit shall apply to the service of process on his recognized agent.

Service of process on recognised agent.—A person holding a power-of-attorney is not bound to accept service of summons ; he may refuse to do so, for he is not bound to act under the power (k).

4. [S. 39.] (1) The appointment of a pleader to make or do any appearance, application or act for any person shall be in writing, and shall be signed by such person or by his recognized agent or by some other person duly authorized by power-of-attorney to act in this behalf.

Appointment of pleader.

(2) Every such appointment, when accepted by a pleader, shall be filed in Court, and shall be considered to be in force until determined with the leave of the Court, by a writing signed by the client or the pleader, as the case may be, and filed in Court, or until the client or the pleader dies or until all proceedings in the suit are ended so far as regards the client.

- O. 3. (3) No advocate of any High Court established under the
rr. 4-6. Indian High Courts Act, 1861, or of any Chief Court, and no advocate of any other High Court who is a barrister shall be required to present any document empowering him to act.

Sub-rule (2): acceptance by pleader.—This rule does not require the acceptance of a vakalatnama to be in writing. But where, by the rules of the Court, the acceptance is required to be in writing, and it is not in writing, the pleader should not be heard by the Court (l).

Sub-rule (3).—The words “and no advocate of any other High Court who is a barrister” are new Delegation of authority by pleader.—Where a pleader cannot attend, he has no power to delegate his authority to another pleader (m).

“Until determined with the leave of the Court.”—An attorney’s retainer cannot be revoked by his client by a mere letter; it can only be revoked with the leave of the Court by a writing signed by the client and filed in Court as provided in this rule (n).

For an additional sub-rule made by the Madras High Court.—See Appendix VI below.

5. [S. 40.] Any process served on the pleader of any party or left at the office or ordinary residence of such pleader and whether the same is for the personal appearance of the party or not, shall be presumed to be duly communicated and made known to the party whom the pleader represents, and, unless the Court otherwise directs, shall be as effectual for all purposes as if the same had been given to or served on the party in person.

6. [S. 41.] (1) Besides the recognized agents described in rule 2 any person residing within the jurisdiction of the Court may be appointed an agent to accept service of process.

(2) Such appointment may be special or general and shall be made by an instrument in writing signed by the principal, and such instrument or, if the appointment is general, a certified copy thereof shall be filed in Court.

Suit to be commenced by sending a plaint to the Court or such

ORDER V.

Issue and Service of Summons.

ISSUE OF SUMMONS.

1. [S. 64.] (1) When a suit has been duly instituted O. 5, r. 1.
Summons. a summons may be issued to the defendant to appear and answer the claim on a day to be therein specified :

Provided that no such summons shall be issued when the defendant has appeared at the presentation of the plaint and admitted the plaintiff's claim.

(2) A defendant to whom a summons has been issued under sub-rule (1) may appear—

- (a) in person, or
- (b) by a pleader duly instructed and able to answer all material questions relating to the suit, or
- (c) by a pleader accompanied by some person able to answer all such questions.

(3) Every such summons shall be signed by the Judge or such officer as he appoints, and shall be sealed with the seal of the Court.

O. 5, rr. 1-5. Decree without issue of summons.—The proviso to sub-r. (1) contemplates cases where a decree may be passed against a defendant without issue or service of summons upon him (o).

2. [S. 65.] Every summons shall be accompanied by a copy of the plaint or, if so permitted, by a concise statement.
Copy or statement annexed to summons.

3. [S. 66.] (1) Where the Court sees reason to require the personal appearance of the defendant, the summons shall order him to appear in person in Court on the day therein specified.
Court may order defendant or plaintiff to appear in person.

(2) Where the Court sees reason to require the personal appearance of the plaintiff on the same day, it shall make an order for such appearance.

Consequence of non-attendance.—As to the consequence of non-attendance in person, see O. 9, r. 12.

Non-attendance of party on adjourned date.—Where an order is made under this rule for the personal appearance of a party on a specified day, he is not bound to appear personally on any adjourned date unless a fresh order is made requiring his appearance on that date. Where no fresh order is made, and the Court disposes of the suit under O. 9, r. 12, the order is one made without jurisdiction (p).

No party to be ordered to appear in person unless resident within certain limits.

4. [S. 67.] No party shall be ordered to appear in person unless he resides—

(a) within the local limits of the Court's ordinary original jurisdiction, or

(b) without such limits but at a place less than fifty or (where there is railway or steamer communication or other established public conveyance for five-sixths of the distance between the place where he resides and the place where the Court is situate), less than two-hundred miles distance from the court-house.

5. [S. 68.] The Court shall determine, at the time of issuing the summons, whether it shall be for the settlement of issues only, or for the final disposal of the suit; and the summons shall contain a direction accordingly:
Summons to be either to settle issues or for final disposal.

Provided that, in every suit heard by a Court of Small Causes, the summons shall be for the final disposal of the suit. O. 5.
rr. 5-9.

As a general rule summonses for final disposal of suits should be issued only in simple cases (q).

6. [S. 69.] The day for the appearance of the defendant shall be fixed with reference to the current business of the Court, the place of residence of the defendant and the time necessary for the service of the summons; and the day shall be so fixed as to allow the defendant sufficient time to enable him to appear and answer on such day.

Fixing day for appearance of defendant.

7. [S. 70.] The summons to appear and answer shall order the defendant to produce all documents in his possession or power upon which he intends to rely in support of his case.

Summons to order defendant to produce documents relied on by him.

8. [S. 71.] Where the summons is for the final disposal of the suit, it shall also direct the defendant to produce, on the day fixed for his appearance, all witnesses upon whose evidence he intends to rely in support of his case.

On issue of summons for final disposal, defendant to be directed to produce his witnesses.

Service of Summons.

9. [S. 72.] (1) Where the defendant resides within the jurisdiction of the Court in which the suit is instituted or has an agent resident within that jurisdiction who is empowered to accept the service of the summons, the summons shall, unless the Court otherwise directs, be delivered or sent to the proper officer to be served by him or one of his subordinates.

Delivery or transmission of summons for service.

(2) The proper officer may be an officer of a Court other than that in which the suit is instituted, and, where he is such an officer, the summons may be sent to him by post or in such other manner as the Court may direct.

- O. 5. 10. [S. 73.] Service of the summons shall be made by delivering or tendering a copy thereof signed by the Judge or such officer as he appoints in this behalf, and sealed with the seal of the Court.
- r. 10-14. Mode of service.

Object of service.—The object of the service of a summons in whatever way it may be effected (other than substituted service to which other considerations apply) is that the defendant may be informed of the institution of the suit in due time before the date fixed for the hearing (r). See notes to r. 17 below, “service of summons.”

Additions made to this rule by the Chief Court of the Punjab under s. 122.—See Appendix VII below.

- 11. [S. 74.] Save as otherwise prescribed, where there are more defendants than one, service of the summons shall be made on each defendant.
- Service on several defendants.

Partners.—As to service on partners, see O. 30, r. 3.

- 12. [S. 75.] Wherever it is practicable, service shall be made on the defendant in person, unless he has an agent empowered to accept service, in which case service on such agent shall be sufficient.
- Service to be on defendant in person when practicable or on his agent

- 13. [S. 76.] (1) In a suit relating to any business or work against a person who does not reside within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court from which the summons is issued, service on any manager or agent, who, at the time of service, personally carries on such business or work, for such person within such limits, shall be deemed good service.
- Service on agent by whom defendant carries on business.

(2) For the purpose of this rule the master of a ship shall be deemed to be the agent of the owner or charterer.

Manager or agent personally carrying on business.—The manager or agent contemplated by this rule is one who has an initiative and independent discretion albeit subject possibly to general orders for his guidance. A mere servant employed to carry out orders or to execute a particular commission or a factor or commission agent who is not identified with the firm for which he acts, is not such an agent (s).

- 14. [S. 77.] Where in a suit to obtain relief respecting, or compensation for wrong to, immoveable property, service cannot be made on the defendant in person, and the defendant has no agent empowered to accept the service, it may be made on any agent of the defendant in charge of the property.

O. 5, rr. 14-17.

15. [S. 78.] Where in any suit the defendant cannot be found and has no agent empowered to accept service of the summons on his behalf, service may be made on any adult male member of the family of the defendant who is residing with him.

Where service may be on male member of defendant's family.

Explanation.—A servant is not a member of the family within the meaning of this rule.

16. [S. 79.] Where the serving officer delivers or tenders a copy of the summons to the defendant personally, or to an agent or other person on his behalf, he shall require the signature of the person to whom the copy is so delivered or tendered to an acknowledgment of service endorsed on the original summons.

Person served to sign acknowledgment.

Refusal to sign acknowledgment.—A mere refusal to sign an acknowledgment of service is not an offence under s. 173 or s. 180 of the Penal Code (1).

17. [S. 86.] Where the defendant or his agent or such other person as aforesaid refuses to sign the acknowledgment, or where the serving officer, after using all due and reasonable diligence, cannot find the defendant, and there is no agent empowered to accept service of the summons on his behalf, nor any other person on whom service can be made, the serving officer shall affix a copy of the summons on the outer door or some other conspicuous part of the house in which the defendant ordinarily resides or carries on business or personally works for gain, and shall then return the original to the Court from which it was issued, with a report endorsed thereon or annexed thereto stating that he has so affixed the copy, the circumstances under which he did so, and the name and address of the person (if any) by whom the house was identified and in whose presence the copy was affixed.

Procedure when defendant refuses to accept service, or cannot be found.

O. 5, r. 17. The old section.—This section corresponds with s. 80 of the Code of 1882 except in the following particulars :—

1. The words “after using all due and reasonable diligence” are new. They give effect to the decisions cited in the notes below under the head “After using all due and reasonable diligence.”
2. The words “or carries on business or personally works for gain” have been added to remove a doubt which arose under the old section as to whether it was good service to affix a copy of the summons on the outer door of the defendant’s place of business (u).
3. The words “and the name and address,” etc., at the end of the rule are also new. They merely give effect to the existing practice.

Service of summons.—The Code prescribes three modes of service of summons upon a defendant. They are as follows :—

1. In the first case, the summons is served by delivering a copy thereof to the defendant personally, or to an agent or other person on his behalf, and by obtaining the signature of the person to whom the copy is delivered to an acknowledgment of service endorsed on the original summons. See rr. 10—16 and r. 18.
2. In the second case, that is, cases mentioned in r. 17, service is effected without an order of the Court by affixing a copy of the summons on the outer door or some other conspicuous part of the house in which the defendant ordinarily resides or carries on business or personally works for gain, and the Court has to declare after examination of the serving officer that the summons has been duly served. When this mode of service is adopted, the provisions of r. 19 have to be complied with and the Court concerned has to decide whether the summons has or has not been duly served. See rr. 17 and 19.
3. In the third case, that is, cases mentioned in r. 20, service is effected after obtaining an order of the Court by affixing a copy of the summons in some conspicuous place in the Court-house and also upon some conspicuous part of the house (if any) in which the defendant is known to have last resided or carried on business or personally worked for gain, or in such other manner as the Court thinks fit. Service so effected is as effectual as if it had been made on the defendant personally. This is called substituted service. See r. 20 and the marginal note thereto.

Refuses to sign the acknowledgment—Service cannot be said to be duly effected where a defendant refuses to sign the acknowledgment and the provisions of the present rule are not complied with (v).

“After using all due and reasonable diligence.”—The present rule provides that in cases where the defendant cannot be found, the mode of service prescribed by this rule should not be resorted to until the serving officer has used all due and reasonable diligence to find the defendant, and the defendant could not be found. To justify such service, it must be shown that proper efforts were made to find the defendant, e.g., that the serving officer went to the place or places and at the times at which it was reasonable to expect he would be found (w). Thus, if a serving officer goes to a defendant's house, but does not find him there, and the defendant's adult son, who is in the house, refuses to accept service on behalf of the father, these facts by themselves do not justify the officer in resorting to the mode of service prescribed by this rule; he must, before effecting such service, inquire of the son as to where the defendant is and otherwise use due and reasonable diligence in finding the defendant (x). When a defendant is temporarily absent from home, and is not represented in his house by an agent or male member of his family, the summons should be again taken to the defendant's house to be served upon him when the enquiries made show that he is likely to be at home and to be found there (y). Mere temporary absence of the defendant does not justify the serving officer in affixing a copy of the summons on the door of the defendant's house (z); much less, if the serving officer knows where the defendant is, though the defendant may not have been in the house at the time when he went to serve the summons (a). See notes above under the head "The old section."

rr. 17-19.

Cannot find the defendant.—These words are wide enough to cover the case where the serving officer is not able to obtain access to a pardanashin lady who has to be served, and cannot deliver or tender a copy of the summons to her (b). See notes to r. 19 below, and notes also to O. 9, r. 13, "Grounds on which ex parte decree may be set aside."

Proof of service.—If the plaintiff appears at the hearing of the suit, but the defendant does not appear at the hearing, the question whether the summons was duly served arises directly for the determination of the Court, for the Court cannot proceed ex parte unless it is proved that the summons was duly served [O. 9, r. 6 (1)]. Where a decree is passed ex parte against a defendant, and the defendant satisfies the Court which passed the decree that the summons was not duly served upon him, the Court may set aside the decree [O. 9, r. 13].

18. [S. 81.] The serving officer shall, in all cases in which the summons has been served under rule 16, endorse or annex, or cause to be endorsed or annexed, on or to the original summons, a return stating the time when and the manner in which the summons was served, and the name and address of the person (if any) identifying the person served and witnessing the delivery or tender of the summons.

Endorsement of time and manner of service.

Form of return.—See Appendix B to Schedule I, Form No. 11. The said Form has been altered in certain respects by the Chief Court of the Punjab: see Appendix VII below.

19. [S. 82, 1st para.] Where a summons is returned under rule 17, the Court shall, if the return under that rule has not been verified by the affidavit of the serving officer, and may, if

rr. 19-21. cause him to be so examined by another Court, touching his proceedings, and may make such further inquiry in the matter as it thinks fit; and shall either declare that the summons has been duly served or order such service as it thinks fit.

“Or order such service as it thinks fit.”—These words empower the Court, even when there has been a technical compliance with the provisions of r. 17. to order service in another mode, if the Court thinks fit to do so in the interests of justice. Thus where the person to be served is a pardanashin lady, and the serving officer, not being able to obtain access to her, affixes a copy of the summons on the outer door of her dwelling house as provided by r. 17, though the service is properly effected, the Court may under this rule direct the service of summons by means of notice by registered post, so that the cover may in due course reach the lady herself (c).

20. [S. 82, 2nd para. Ss. 83, 84.] (1) Where the Court is satisfied that there is reason to believe that the defendant is keeping out of the way for the purpose of avoiding service, or that for any other reason the summons cannot be served in the ordinary way, the Court shall order the summons to be served by affixing a copy thereof in some conspicuous place in the Court-house, and also upon some conspicuous part of the house [if any] in which the defendant is known to have last resided or carried on business or personally worked for gain, or in such other manner as the Court thinks fit.

Substituted service.

(2) Service substituted by order of the Court shall be as effectual as if it had been made on the defendant personally.

Effect of substituted service.

(3) Where service is substituted by order of the Court, the Court shall fix such time for the appearance of the defendant as the case may require.

Where service substituted, time for appearance to be fixed.

Substituted service.—See notes to r. 17 above, “Service of summons.”

For any other reason.—Where by the custom in India a defendant (being a Hindu woman of rank) could not be personally served with a summons, the Judicial Committee allowed service to be substituted on her Deewan [chief servant] (d).

21. [S. 85, 1st para.] A summons may be sent by the Court by which it is issued, whether within or without the province, either by one of its officers or by post to any Court (not being the High Court) having jurisdiction in the place where the defendant resides.

of Calcutta, Madras, Bombay and Rangoon is to be served within any such limits, it shall be sent to the Court of Small Causes within whose jurisdiction it is to be served.

Additions made to the rule by the High Court of Bombay—See App. IV.

23. [S. 85, 2nd para.] The Court to which a summons is sent under rule 21 or rule 22 shall, upon receipt thereof, proceed as if it had been issued by such Court and shall then return the summons to the Court of issue, together with the record (if any) of its proceedings with regard thereto.

Duty of Court to which summons is sent.

Form of Return.—See Schedule I, Appendix B, Form No. 0, and note the alterations made in the said Form by the High Court of Bombay in exercise of the powers conferred by s. 122 above.

Sufficiency of service.—Where a summons has been transmitted by one Court to another for service by the latter, and the return made by the Court serving the summons states that the service has been duly effected, the presumption will be that the service was sufficient unless the return itself shows the insufficiency (e). Similarly when the return made by the Court serving the summons states that the summons has not been duly served, and the summons is returned with that declaration to the Court from which it was issued, the presumption is that the service was not sufficient, and the Court from which the summons was issued should act upon that presumption unless there is good and strong evidence which comes or is brought to its notice going to show that the summons was duly served (f). According to the Calcutta High Court, however, the Court issuing the summons must not proceed upon any presumption either way, but must determine for itself whether the service was sufficient or not, the reason given being that the present rule does not require the Court to which the summons is sent for service to make any return touching the sufficiency of service (g). This view has been dissented from by the High Court of Allahabad on grounds of expediency, and, further, on the ground that it ignores the last sentence of rule 19 above which applies not only to the Court issuing the summons, but also to the Court to which it is sent for service (h).

24. [Ss. 87-88.] Where the defendant is confined in a prison, the summons shall be delivered or sent by post or otherwise to the officer in charge of the prison for service on the defendant.

Service where defendant resides out of British India and has no agent.

25. [S. 89.] Where the defendant resides out of British India and has no agent in British India empowered to accept service, the summons shall be addressed to the defendant at the place where he is residing and sent to him by post, if there is postal communication between such place and the place where the Court is situate.

Where summons is sent by post.—This rule is to be read with s. 27 of the General Clauses Act 10 of 1897 by which it is provided that when any document is required by an Act passed after 11th March 1897 to be served by post, and the expression used is “send”, [which is the expression used in the present rule], then, “unless a different intention appears, [and no such intention appears in the present rule], the service shall be deemed to be effected by properly addressing, pre-paying and posting by registered post, a letter containing the document, and, unless the contrary is proved, to have been effected at the time at which the letter would be delivered in the ordinary course of post.” Reading the present rule with the said s. 27, the High Court of Bombay held in a case in which it appeared that the postal packet enclosing the summons was properly addressed to the defendant, and was registered, duly stamped and posted, but the packet was returned endorsed “refused,” that the Court was entitled to draw the inference indicated in the said s. 27 and to hold that there was sufficient service (i). In the earlier cases which arose under the corresponding section of the Code of 1882, where a postal packet was returned endorsed “refused,” it was held that the service was not sufficient and that further evidence was necessary before the Court could act upon such endorsement (j). As to those cases, however, it is to be noted that they were all decided without any reference to s. 27 of the General Clauses Act as all of them except one were cases before the said Act came into force, and the one decided after the said Act came into force was not governed by the provisions of the said s. 27, as that section did not apply to the Code of 1882 it being an enactment passed before 11th March 1897, the date on which the General Clauses Act came into force.

27. [S. 422.] Where the defendant is a public officer (not belonging to His Majesty's military or naval forces or His Majesty's Indian Marine Service), or is the servant of a railway company or local authority, the Court may, if it appears to it that the summons may be most conveniently so served, send it for service on the defendant to the head of the office in which he is employed, together with a copy to be retained by the defendant.

ORDER VI.

Pleadings generally.

O. 6, r. 1.

Pleading.

1. [New. Cf. Jud. Act, 1873, S. 100.] “Pleading” shall mean plaint or written statement.

Introduction of English rules of pleadings.—The object of this Order is to introduce into British India the leading rules of pleadings followed in England. The whole of this Order, excepting rr. 14 and 15, is new. The rules comprised in this Order, except rr. 14 and 15, have been taken most of them from Order 19 and the rest from Order 28 of the English Rules made under the Judicature Acts. In one respect, however, the rigour of the English Rules has been relaxed by providing that the Court may, notwithstanding the absence of any specific denial, require any fact to be proved by the party who alleges it (see O. 8, r. 5).

rr. 1, 2.

Function of pleadings.—"The whole object of pleadings is to bring the parties to an issue, and the meaning of the rules [relating to pleadings] was to prevent the issue being enlarged, which would prevent either party from knowing, when the cause came on for trial, what the real point to be discussed and decided was. In fact, the whole meaning of the system is to narrow the parties to definite issues, and thereby to diminish expense and delay, especially as regards the amount of testimony required on either side at the hearing" (l). To attain this end, the plaintiff should state in his plead all the facts which constitute his cause of action. It is not sufficient to allege what may be a ground of action if something else be added which is not stated in the plead. "Upon all sound principles of pleading it is necessary to allege what must, and not what may, be a cause of action" (m). The defendant also should state in his written statement the material facts on which he relies for his defence. When the result of the pleading on both sides is that a material fact is affirmed on the one side and denied on the other, the question thus raised between the parties is called an issue of fact. When one party answers his opponent's pleading by stating an objection in point of law, the legal question thus raised between the parties is called an issue of law. See O. 14, r. 1.

A plaintiff's pleading is his plead (O. 7). A defendant's pleading is his written statement (O. 8). In some cases a plaintiff who has filed his plead may, with the leave of the Court, file a written statement, or the Court may require him to file a written statement. In such cases the written statement forms part of the plaintiff's pleadings. Again, there are cases in which a defendant who has filed his written statement may, with the leave of the Court, file an additional written statement or the Court may require him to do so. In such cases the additional written statement forms part of the defendant's pleadings. The plaintiff's written statement and the defendant's additional written statement are called subsequent pleadings. See O. 8, r. 6.

2. [New. R. S. C., O. 19, r. 4.] Every pleading shall contain, and contain only, a statement in a concise form of the material facts on which the party pleading relies for his claim or defence, as the case may be, but not the evidence by which they are to be proved, and shall, when necessary, be divided into paragraphs, numbered consecutively. Dates, sums and numbers shall be expressed in figures.

Pleading to state material facts and not evidence.

General rules of pleading.—O. 6 deals with Pleadings in general, O. 7 deals with Pleadings, and O. 8, with Written Statements. The following is a summary of the rules comprised in this Order:—

1. State your whole case in your pleading, in other words, set forth in your pleading all material facts on which you rely for your claim or defence (r. 2).
2. State facts and not law (r. 2). If any matter of law is set out in your opponent's pleading, do not plead to it (n).
3. State the material facts on which you rely, and not the evidence by which they are to be proved (rr. 2, 10, 11, 12).

D. 6, r. 2.

4. State material facts only; omit immaterial and unnecessary facts. Do not anticipate your opponent's pleading and plead to any matter which is not alleged against you (r. 2).
5. State the facts of your case concisely, but with precision (r. 2).
6. It is not necessary to allege the performance of any condition precedent; an averment of performance is now implied in every pleading (r. 6).
7. It is not necessary to set out the whole or any part of a document, unless the precise words thereof are necessary. It is sufficient to state the effect of the document as briefly as possible (r. 9).
8. It is not necessary to allege any matter of fact which the law presumes in your favour, or as to which the burden of proof lies upon your opponent (r. 13).

Fundamental rule.—Rule 2 of this Order is the fundamental rule of pleadings. When analysed, it will be found to require four things:—

- I. Every pleading must state facts and not law.
- II. It must state material facts, and material facts only.
- III. It must state only the facts on which the party pleading relies for his claim or defence, and not the evidence by which they are to be proved.
- IV. It must state such facts in a concise form.

“The main object, or one of the main objects, of this rule is that the one party may know what are the facts on which the other party relies in order that he may be prepared to meet the case” (o).

I. Every pleading must state facts and not law.—A pleading must not set forth a public statute, for the Court is bound to take judicial notice of it (p). Nor should parties plead conclusions of law or of mixed law and fact: it is for the Court to declare the law arising upon the facts before it. The parties should only state the facts on which they rely for their claim or defence.

It is bad pleading to allege merely that a right or a duty exists; the facts must be set out which give rise to the right or create the duty. Thus in a suit for damages for negligence, it is not enough for the plaintiff to state that “the defendant has been guilty of negligence,” without showing in what respect he was negligent and how he became bound to use care to prevent injury to others. Negligence means a breach of duty to take due care and caution. The plaintiff, therefore, ought to state facts upon which the supposed duty is founded, and the duty to the plaintiff with the breach of which the defendant is charged (q). Similarly, it is not sufficient for the plaintiff to aver that the defendant did the act complained of “wrongfully, unlawfully and improperly” or “without any justification therefore or right so to do.” He must state the facts upon which he proposes to rely as showing that the act was done wrongfully or unlawfully. “Those epithets, under the present system of pleading, are useless and redundant. They add nothing whatever to the plaintiff's case. They are merely now epithets of abuse. They were formerly in declarations essential, because under that form of pleading legal rights were stated for facts; but facts alone are stated now” (r). Upon like principles, it is not sufficient for the plaintiff to say, “Under and by virtue of a certain deed I am entitled, etc. He must state the facts which go to show his title (s). In like manner, a plaintiff claiming under a donatio mortis causa must state the facts which, according to him, would constitute it a valid donatio mortis causa: it is not sufficient to say that the deceased "two days before his death made a good and valid donatio mortis causa to the plaintiff" of the property (t). Where a plaintiff claims by inheritance, it is not sufficient to say, "I am the heir-at-law." He must state the particulars showing the links of relationship on which he relies as constituting him such heir (u).

(r) er Jessel, M. R., in Day v. Brownrigg (1878) 10 C. D. 294, 302.

The same principles apply to a defendant. He must not say merely, "I am not liable." He must allege facts which show that he is not liable. Thus a defendant, who claims privilege in a suit for defamation, must not plead merely that "he published the words on a privileged occasion." He must state the facts which give rise to the privilege (v).

II. Every pleading must state material facts and material facts only.—To begin with, a party should set out in his pleading all material facts on which he relies for his claim or defence. "What particulars are to be stated must depend on the facts of each case. But it is absolutely essential that the pleading, not to be embarrassing to the defendants, should state those facts which will put the defendants on their guard and tell them what they have to meet when the case comes on for trial" (w). If a party omits to plead a material fact, he will not be allowed to give evidence of that fact at the trial, unless the Court gives him leave to amend his pleadings under r. 17 below. "If parties were held strictly to their pleadings under the present system, they ought not to be allowed to prove at the trial, as a fact on which they would have to rely in order to support their case, any fact which is not stated in the pleadings" (x). Thus if A sues B for specific performance of a contract, alleged to have been signed by B's agent, and the only fact stated in B's written statement as a ground of defence is that the alleged agent was of unsound mind and therefore incompetent to contract, B will not be allowed to prove at the hearing that the alleged agent had in fact no authority to sign the contract. B ought to have pleaded want of authority in his written statement, if he intended to rely upon it for his defence. Nor will B be allowed to amend his written statement in such a case under rule 17 below, for "if a defendant were to be at liberty to put in a defence inconsistent with the rules of pleading, and then at the trial get the case to stand over in order to put in a new defence, the consequences might be very prejudicial" (y).

Matters affecting damages—The present rule provides that every pleading should contain, and contain only, material facts on which the party pleading relies for his claim or defence, as the case may be. That is to say, a plaint should contain only those material facts on which the plaintiff relies for his claim and a written statement should contain only those material facts on which the defendant relies for his defence. Does this mean that the plaint should be confined to those facts only which constitute the plaintiff's cause of action, and that the written statement should be confined to those facts only which constitute the defendant's defence? It has been held, as regards a plaintiff's claim, that the words "material facts on which the party pleading relies for his claim," are not confined to those facts which are essential to the plaintiff's cause of action, but include any fact which the plaintiff is entitled to prove at the hearing. Thus facts which

O. 6, r. 2. merely tend to increase the amount of damages are not essential to the cause of action, but they certainly are facts which the plaintiff is entitled to prove at the hearing as matters in aggravation of damages. Such facts are therefore "material" facts within the meaning of this rule and a plaintiff has to state them in his plaint (z). As observed by Brett, L.J., in Phillipps v. Phillipps (a), the words of the rule are not "the facts which will be necessary to support the cause of action": they are, "the material facts on which the party relies for his claim." In Millington v. Loring (b), which was a suit for damages for breach of a contract to marry, the plaintiff, after alleging the promise to marry in the first paragraph and the breach thereof in the second, went on to allege in the third paragraph that "the plaintiff relying upon the said promise permitted the defendant to debauch and carnally know her, whereby the defendant infected her with a venereal disease." Analysing the above plaint, it may be stated that the first and second paragraphs stated facts that were essential to the cause of action, viz., facts relating to the making of the contract and facts relating to the breach of the contract, being facts which constitute the cause of action in a suit for damages for the breach of a contract. But the facts stated in the third paragraph were not essential to the cause of action. Nevertheless they were material facts within the meaning of the rule, for the plaintiff was entitled to prove them as matters in aggravation of damages, and it was held that they were properly set forth in the plaint. Turning now to the defence in a suit for damages, the rule laid down in Wood v. Durham (c) is, that a defendant is not in general entitled to plead in his defence matters in mitigation of damages. The ground of the decision in that case is that such matters do not constitute any defence to an action, and a defendant can under the rule allege only those material facts on which he relies for his defence. As to Millington v. Loring, it was said that it was a case where "there was a good cause of action of a double character stated: there were damages claimed by reason of an alleged breach of promise of marriage, but there was far more, because part of the cause of action was that by reason of that the plaintiff had been ill through the seduction by the defendant, who had ruined her character, and had infected her with a bad disease." One may be permitted to doubt whether illness through seduction and infection with disease formed part of the cause of action. Moreover, the decision in Millington v. Loring has been followed in a case later than Wood v. Durham, where it could not be said that there was a cause of action of a double character (d). However this may be, it is to be remarked that the decision in Wood v. Durham turned not only on the construction of the corresponding English rule, but on O. 21, r. 4, which provides in express terms that "no denial or defence shall be necessary as to damages claimed or their amount, but they shall be deemed to be put in issue in all cases, unless expressly admitted." O. 21, r. 4, of the English rules has not been reproduced in the Code. See notes to O. 7, r. 3, "Except damages."

Facts not yet material to a case.—The pleadings should only contain such facts as are material at the present stage of the suit. It is not proper to anticipate the answer of the adversary. To do so is "like leaping before one comes to the stile" (e). "It is no part of the statement of claim ['plaint' in our pleadings] to anticipate the defence, and to state what the plaintiff would have to say in answer to it. That would be a return to the old inconvenient system of pleading in Chancery, which ought certainly not to be encouraged, when the plaintiff used to allege in his bill imaginary defences of the defendant, and make charges in reply to them." (f). Thus it is unnecessary in a suit upon a bond to allege that the defendant was of full age when he executed the bond. For if he were a minor when he executed the bond, it is for him to prove it: it need not be denied by anticipation (g). Similarly a defendant should not plead to any matter which is not alleged against him. Thus if a defendant is sued for slander, the only way to meet the plaintiff's claim is to plead (1) that the words in question were not spoken and published, or (2) that they were spoken and published and are true, or (3) that they were spoken and published and are privileged. If, instead of so doing, he pleads that he did not say the words alleged in the plaint, but that he said something else, and that the something else which he said was true and spoken on a privileged occasion, the defence will be struck out under r. 16 below as one embarrassing the fair trial of the suit (h).

O. 6, r. 2.

III. Every pleading must state facts, and not the evidence by which they are to be proved.—Every pleading must contain a statement of the material facts on which the party pleading relies but not the evidence by which those facts are to be proved. "It is an elementary rule of pleading that, when a state of facts is relied on, it is enough to allege it simply without setting out the subordinate facts which are the means of producing it, or the evidence sustaining the allegation" (i). No doubt, evidence too consists of facts, but there is a convenient nomenclature to distinguish the two. The material facts on which the party pleading relies for his claim or defence are called facta probanda. The evidence or the facts by means of which they are to be proved are called facta probantia. Every pleading should contain only facta probanda, and not facta probantia. "The distinction is taken in the very rule itself, between the facts on which the party relies and the evidence to prove those facts. Erle, C.J., expressed it in this way. He said there were facts that might be called the allegata probanda, the facts which ought to be proved, and they were different from the evidence which was adduced to prove those facts. And it was upon that expression of opinion of Erle, C. J., that rule 4 [of the English rules, corresponding to the present rule] was drawn. The facts which ought to be stated are the material facts on which the party pleading relies" (j). Thus where a suit is brought against an Insurance Company on a policy on the life of A, and one of the conditions of the policy is that it should be void if the insured committed suicide, the Company should only plead, if the defence is that A committed suicide, that A died by his own hand. It is wrong to state in the written statement that A had been melancholy for weeks, that he bought a pistol and shot himself with it. These facts are merely evidence (facta probantia) facts by means of which the factum probandum, namely, suicide, is to be proved (k). Similarly, it is wrong to set out in the pleading admissions made by the opponent, for admissions are only evidence (l). Thus where a plaintiff alleged that certain windows of his were ancient, and the defendant stated in his defence that the plaintiff had in a former action admitted that they were not ancient, the allegation was struck out (m). Upon the same principle, "where the facts in a pedigree are facts to be relied upon as facts to establish the right or title, they must be set out; but where the pedigree is the means of proving the facts relied on as facts by which the right or title is to be established, then the pedigree is evidence that need not be set out" (n).

Rule 10, 11 and 12, of this Order are special applications of the general principle laid down in this rule.

rr. 2, 3.

IV. Every pleading must state material facts in a concise form—To attain this end, the forms in Appendix A when applicable, and, where they are not applicable, forms of the like character, as nearly as may be, should be used for all pleadings (see r. 3 below). At the same time the rules given above under the head "General rules of pleading," p. 395 above, should be borne in mind. But the pleader should not sacrifice precision to conciseness. For, as observed by Kay, J., "although pleadings must now be concise, they must also be precise" (o). In fact, rule 4 expressly requires that in all cases "in which particulars may be necessary beyond such as are exemplified in the forms [in Appendix A], particulars (with dates and items if necessary) shall be stated in the pleadings." As to further information on this subject of "certainty" in pleadings, see notes to rr. 4-5 below.

Alternative and inconsistent allegations.—The rule now under consideration does not prohibit inconsistent pleadings. "A person may rely upon one set of facts, if he can succeed in proving them, and he may rely upon another set of facts if he can succeed in proving them; and it appears to me to be far too strict a construction of this Order to say that he must make up his mind on which particular line he will put his case, when perhaps he is very much in the dark" (p). The rules as to joinder of defendants (O. 1, r. 3) and causes of action (O. 2, r. 3), as also the rules as to the reliefs that may be claimed by a plaintiff (O. 7, rr. 7, 8) clearly show that either party may allege in his pleadings two or more inconsistent sets of material facts and claim relief thereunder in the alternative (q). A plaintiff may rely "upon several different rights alternatively, although they may be inconsistent" (r). But then "as to each of those he ought to set out the facts upon which he would have to rely as facts to maintain that right" (s). So, too, a defendant may, by his written statement, "raise as many distinct and separate, and therefore inconsistent, defences as he may think proper, subject only to the provision contained in [rule 16 below]" (t). A pleading is not embarrassing within the meaning of rule 16, merely because it sets up inconsistent sets of facts (u). It may in a proper case be struck out as embarrassing and oppressive to the other side (v). "But to go to the length of saying that no inconsistent pleading can be pleaded, appears to me not warranted by the rules and contrary to the established practice of the Courts" (w). But, "if alternative cases are alleged, the facts ought not to be mixed up, leaving the [other party] to pick out the facts applicable to each case; but facts ought to be distinctly stated, so as to show on what facts each alternative of the relief sought is founded" (x).

See also notes to O. 7, r. 7, under the head "Alternative relief."

Particulars to be given

the party pleading relies on any misrepresentation, fraud, breach of trust, wilful default, or undue influence, and in all other cases in which particulars may be necessary beyond such as are exemplified in the forms aforesaid, particulars (with dates and items if necessary) shall be stated in the pleading.

Object of particulars.—"Although pleadings must now be concise, they must also be precise" (y). For this purpose all necessary particulars must be embodied in the pleadings. If the particulars stated in the pleadings are not sufficiently specific, the other party may apply for further and better particulars under the next rule. The object of particulars is to prevent surprise at the trial by informing the opposite party what case he has to meet, to define and narrow the issues to be tried and so save unnecessary expense (z). Particulars supplement pleadings which would otherwise be too vague and general, and ensure a fair trial by giving notice of the case intended to be set up (a). "What particulars are to be stated must depend upon the facts of each case" (b). As a general rule it may be stated that "as much certainty and particularity must be insisted on as is reasonable having regard to the circumstances and to the nature of the acts themselves. To insist upon less would be to relax old and intelligible principles. To insist upon more would be the vainest pedantry" (c). At the same time the distinction between particulars and evidence must be steadily kept in view. "The Courts have uniformly endeavoured to prevent the plaintiff, for the defendant, as the case may be from prying into the brief of his opponent for finding out what is to be the evidence which is to be produced at the trial. On the other hand, the Courts have uniformly said that the plaintiff or the defendant is entitled to be told any and every particular which will enable him properly to prepare his case for the trial, so that he may not be taken by surprise" (d). That is to say, whilst particulars may be ordered to prevent surprise, and to inform the opposite party of the case he has to meet, particulars are not ordered of the mode in which it may be proposed to prove the case set up in the pleading (e). To use the phraseology of r. 2 above, particulars will be ordered of the material facts on which the party pleading relies for his claim or defence, but not of the evidence by which those facts are to be proved. Thus, a defendant is not entitled to know the names of the plaintiff's witnesses, for that is to require particulars of the evidence by which the plaintiff's case is to be proved. But where the names of witnesses form part of the material facts constituting a party's case, he is bound to state them in his pleading, and if he does not, an order may be made under the next rule requiring him to disclose the names (f). "If the particulars are those that he ought to give, he cannot refuse to do so merely on the ground that his answer will disclose the names of the witnesses he proposes to call" (g). This may be explained by an illustration. A deals in drugs bearing the registered trademark "Herbalin." B uses the word "Herbaline" on drugs manufactured by him. B sues A for infringement of his trade-mark, alleging in the plaint that the use of his trade-

The whole question in such a case is, has the defendant induced divers persons to buy his goods as and for those of the plaintiff? (h).

Fraud and coercion.—Where fraud is charged against the defendant, it is an acknowledged rule of pleading that the plaintiff must set forth the particulars of the fraud which he alleges. It is not enough to use such general words as "fraud," "deceit," or "machinations." "General allegations, however strong may be the words in which they are stated, are insufficient even to amount to an averment of fraud of which any Court ought to take notice" (i). Where a plaintiff seeks relief on the ground of fraud, but the particulars of the fraud alleged are not set forth in the plaint, the plaint should be rejected under O. 7, r. 11, as not disclosing a cause of action (j). A charge of fraud must be substantially proved as laid, and when one kind of fraud is charged, another kind of fraud cannot, upon failure of proof, be substituted for it (k). Nor is it proper for the appellate Court to entertain a case of fraud other than the one specifically alleged in the pleadings (l). The same rules apply when coercion is charged in the plaint (m).

If the particulars of fraud stated in the plaint are not sufficiently specific, the defendant may apply for further particulars under the next rule. Thus, where it is alleged by the plaintiffs that the defendants have made false entries in the plaintiffs' books for the purpose of defrauding them, the plaintiffs may be directed to furnish particulars specifying the entries charged to be false, and the nature of their objection to each item (n). See notes to rule 5, "Discovery before particulars," ill. (1).

Misrepresentation.—Where it is alleged in the plaint that "the defendant represented to the plaintiff," etc., it should be stated whether the representation was verbal or in writing (o). It is not enough in an action to restrain infringement of a trade-mark to allege that "divers persons" were induced by the acts of the defendant to purchase his goods as and for those of the plaintiff. The plaintiff should state in the plaint particulars of the names and addresses of those "divers persons" (p).

Breach of trust.—Where breach of trust is charged, the pleading must specify the acts constituting the alleged breach of trust. It is not enough to say that the defendant had "in various ways misapplied rent and profits of leaseholds, which he had received on behalf of the plaintiff, and had committed breaches of trust" (q).

Other cases in which particulars may be necessary :—

Misconduct.—Where the dismissal of a servant or an agent is justified on the ground of misconduct, the party so justifying must specify the acts of misconduct (r).

Negligence.—Where negligence or contributory negligence is charged, full details must be given of the acts on which the party pleading relies as constituting negligence (s).

Agreement.—Where an agreement is alleged, the pleading should state the date of the agreement, the names of the parties to it, and whether it was in writing or verbal (t). If it is an implied agreement, it should appear from what facts or circumstances it is to be implied (see r. 12 below).

Defamation.—In an action for slander, the plaintiff must give particulars of the names of the persons to whom the alleged slander was made (u).

In an action for libel, where the charge made against the plaintiff in the alleged libel is general in its nature, a defendant who pleads a justification must state in his pleading the facts on which he relies in support of his justification (v). A sends a book of which he is the author to B for a review. B, in reviewing the book, prints and publishes, among other statements, the following: "A is, by his own confession, a most barefaced liar." A sues B for damages for libel. B justifies, pleading the truth of the alleged libel. B must specify in his pleading the passage in A's work on which he relies in support of the defence of justification (w).

Accounts.—Where a plaintiff claims merely to have a general account taken, he need not give particulars as to the items. But it is otherwise if the plaintiff claims a definite amount instead of an account. In the latter case the plaintiff must give particulars as to the items of which it is composed (x).

Where a lump sum is claimed.—Where a plaintiff claims a lump sum, the defendant is entitled to particulars of the items composing such sum (y). So, also, where a plaintiff gives credit for a lump sum, and sues for the balance (z).

Particulars of defence.—The general principles upon which the Courts act in requiring particulars to be given of allegations or matters stated in plaints are applicable equally to defences, and the rules relating to the giving of particulars are in general applicable to all pleadings, though from the nature of the case the occasion for particulars arises somewhat less frequently in regard to defences than in regard to claims. Thus where a defence consists of traverses or denials of allegations in the claim so that the defendant is not taking upon himself the onus of proving any substantive facts, but is only denying or requiring proof of those alleged by the plaintiff, the occasion for particulars does not arise; but where he pleads affirmatively or sets up facts to be proved in answer to the plaintiff's case, he may be, and in general is, as much under obligation to give particulars as if he were alleging such or similar matters in a plaint (a). For instance, if a defendant sets up a defence of payments made, he has to give particulars of the dates and amounts of such payments. So if he justifies a libel, he must state the facts fully in his pleadings or give particulars (b). Similarly where he alleges that he is released from, or exonerated and discharged from, the performance of his contract, he must in his written statement give sufficient information to his opponent as to how and when he was so released or discharged (Bullen and Leake, Precedents of Pleadings, 6th ed., 532, 533). But where the onus of establishing a positive or negative allegation lies on the plaintiff, the Court will not order the defendant to give particulars of his traverse of that allegation. Thus where the plaintiff alleged that the committee of the Stock Exchange

5. [New. R. S. C., O. 19, r. 7.] A further and better statement of the nature of the claim or defence, or further and better particulars of any matter stated in any pleading may in all cases be ordered, upon such terms, as to cost and otherwise, as may be just.

Further and better statement of particulars.

Application for particulars.—"The object of particulars is to prevent surprise at the trial and to limit the inquiry at the trial to the matters set out in the particulars. So I think particulars ought to be encouraged. They tend to narrow the issues (d)." If a party does not state in his pleading all the particulars required by r. 4, the other party may apply under this rule for further and better particulars. If the English practice is to be allowed here, the application need not be supported by any affidavit except, perhaps, in a special case (e).

When application should be made.—As a general rule a defendant who claims particulars should apply for them with reasonable promptitude (f) and before putting in his defence, but he does not by putting in his defence waive his right to particulars (g). Nay, in a proper case, the Court may order an application for particulars to stand over till a written statement has been put in to enable the Court to know what the points raised by the defence are, as where the defendant is the plaintiff's agent, and the particulars in question are all in the knowledge of the defendant, but not in the knowledge of the plaintiff (h).

Discovery before particulars.—The question often arises, where a defendant has applied for particulars, whether the plaintiff should deliver particulars before obtaining discovery and inspection of the defendant's books or whether discovery should be given before particulars are delivered. "There is no hard and fast rule as to the class of cases in which particulars should precede discovery or discovery be ordered before particulars; but the Judge must exercise a reasonable discretion in every case after carefully looking at all the facts, and taking into account any special circumstances" (i). The result of the authorities appears to be that where the party pleading is unable to give particulars of his allegations without previously inspecting his opponent's books or documents, or obtaining discovery from his opponent by interrogatories, the Court may order discovery before particulars, and the application for particulars may be adjourned till after inspection or discovery. "It is good practice and good sense that where the defendant knows the facts and the plaintiffs do not, the defendant should give discovery before the plaintiffs deliver particulars" (j).

O. 6, r. 5.

1. Suit by principal against agent for accounts charging agent with fraud.—A employs B to purchase goods, as his agent, at the lowest possible price. A sues B for an account alleging in the plaint that B had purchased goods at prices higher than the current prices and had secretly received commission from the vendors. The charges against B are stated in general terms, no particulars being given. A is unable to state the particulars of the fraud charged until he sees B's books. A is entitled to inspection of B's books before he can be called upon to deliver particulars of the fraud (k).

2. Suit by a wife's executor against husband.—A, who is the executor of J, sues B, J's husband, to recover from him all the furniture and other chattels purchased by J with her separate income and included in an inventory of all the goods in B's house made sometime before J's death. B applies for particulars of the furniture. He is not entitled to the particulars until he declares by an affidavit which of the articles comprised in the inventory belonged to his wife. "Where the plaintiffs are executors who do not know, and the defendant a person who does know, it is right that discovery should come first" (l).

3. Suit by a colliery company against a colliery merchant.—A colliery company sues R, a coal merchant, for damages for fraudulently passing off coal not gotten from the company's mines as coal gotten from the company's mines. The plaintiffs in their plaint give one specific instance of fraud, and allege that "on divers other occasions" the defendant had taken orders from "divers other persons" for coal to be supplied from the company's mines, and fraudulently sold coal not purchased from the plaintiff as coal gotten from the company's mines. R applies for particulars of the names and dates. The company then applies for inspection of R's books. The company is entitled to discovery before delivering particulars. Chitty, J., said: "Having regard to the circumstances that many of these alleged frauds are within the defendant's means of knowledge and are not within the knowledge of the plaintiffs, I think discovery ought to precede particulars" (m).

The practice followed in the above cases was sought to be applied in a libel case where A sued B for calling him a "charity swindler" and "imposter," and B pleaded justification, and, when called upon to give particulars of the charge, said that he could not unless he was allowed inspection of A's books of account. The Court held that B was not entitled to discovery before he had delivered particulars. Kay, L.J., said: "To apply this practice to the case of a libel would be to sanction the publication of a libel when the libeller knew no facts justifying the libellous statement, because he believed he could, by the process of discovery, elicit such facts" (n).

Further particulars granted.—For cases in which further and better particulars have been ordered, see notes to r. 4, "Other cases in which particulars may be necessary," p. 402 above.

Objections to particulars :—

1. A applies for particulars from B under this rule. It is a valid objection to the application that the particulars applied for by A relate to the mode in which B's case is to be proved, and not to material facts constituting B's case. See notes to r. 4, "Object of particulars," p. 401 above.

2. Particulars will only be ordered of material facts constituting a party's case, but not of any immaterial allegation (o).
3. Particulars will only be ordered of material facts alleged by a party in his pleading, but not of those denied by him. See notes to r. 4, "Particulars of defence," p. 403 above.
4. A applies for particulars from B under this rule. It is no objection to the application that A must know the true facts of the case better than B (p).
5. Where a party from whom particulars are sought is unable to give the particulars without laborious inquiry, the practice is to make an order for "the best particulars the party can give" (q). This is usually the case where the party fills a representative character (r).

"Upon such terms as to costs or otherwise."—Thus an order may be made directing that unless particulars are delivered within a certain time, the suit shall be dismissed (s).

Amending or delivering further particulars.—Where a party who has delivered particulars under an order afterwards desires to amend them or to deliver further particulars, the proper course for him is to obtain an order giving him leave to do so (t). And leave, will, in general, be granted, where the amendment will cause no injury to the opposite party except such as can be sufficiently compensated for by costs (u). Leave to amend may be refused where it is sought to introduce a new cause of action (v), or to add to the amount claimed after the defendant has paid into Court the full amount originally claimed (w). An application to amend particulars will, as a rule, be refused if made at the trial of the suit (x). See s. 153 and r. 17 of this Order.

6. [New. R. S. C., O. 19, r. 14.] Any condition precedent, the performance or occurrence of which is intended to be contested, shall be distinctly specified in his pleading by the plaintiff or defendant, as the case may be; and, subject thereto, an averment of the performance or occurrence of all conditions precedent necessary for the case of the plaintiff or defendant shall be implied in his pleading.

Neither party need allege the performance of any condition precedent.—A agrees to build a house for B at certain rates specified in the contract. It is a condition of the agreement that payment to A should only be made upon a certificate signed by B's architect that so much is due. A demands payment upon completion of the building, but B refuses to pay. A sues B claiming Rs. 5,000. Here the obtaining of the architect's certificate is a condition precedent to A's right of action. The present rule provides that it is not necessary for A expressly to aver in his plaint that he has obtained the architect's certificate. Such averment, the rule says, shall be implied in his pleading. The rule further provides that if B intends to contest the fulfilment of the condition precedent, he must distinctly specify the condition precedent in his written statement. He must plead that the architect has not certified the amount claimed in the suit. If B does not plead the non-performance of the condition, it will be presumed that the condition has been duly performed. If B pleads non-performance, the burden of proving due performance will be on A.

A condition precedent, it must be observed, does not strictly speaking form part of the cause of action. Thus in the case put above A's cause of action consists of the making of the contract and of the breach thereof by B. The condition of obtaining the architect's certificate is but an additional formality introduced by the express agreement of the parties, suspending A's right to sue until the condition has been performed.

History of the rule.—This rule is a reproduction of O. 19, r. 14, of the English Rules. Before the year 1852, it was a recognized rule of English pleadings that the plaintiff should allege expressly the performance of each necessary condition precedent to the rights claimed. Then came the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852, which modified the earlier practice by enabling the plaintiff to aver performance of conditions precedent generally. For this purpose, the form in use was, "all conditions were performed, and all things happened, and all times elapsed necessary to entitle the plaintiff to have the said promise performed by the defendant, and to maintain his action for the breach thereof hereinafter alleged." The present rule does away with the necessity of even a general averment of performance of condition precedent. A plaintiff need not now allege the performance of any condition precedent. It is for the defendant to object if he intends to dispute the performance of any condition precedent.

"Distinctly."—This rule requires that where a party intends to contest the performance of any condition precedent, he must distinctly specify the condition precedent in his pleading. An allegation in general terms that there was "an express condition" is not enough. The pleading must state the terms of the conditions, the names of the parties to it, and whether it was in writing or verbal (y).

7. [New. R. S. C., O. 19, r. 16.] No pleading shall, except by way of amendment, raise any new ground of claim or contain any allegation of fact inconsistent with the previous pleadings of the party pleading the same.

Departure.

Departure in pleading.—This rule provides against what is called "a departure in pleading." It is a reproduction of O. 19, r. 16, of the English Rules. Its importance in this country is not likely to be so great as in England where the practice is for each party in turn to state his own case, and answer that of his opponent before the hearing. Not that the Code does not recognize subsequent pleadings (see O. 8, r. 9) but such pleadings are seldom resorted to in this country even in the Presidency towns. The general principles on which the system of pleading in England is founded are as follows :—

1. The plaintiff by his statement of claim alleges the material facts on which he relies in support of his case.

O. 6, r. 7.

2. The defendant, in answer thereto, delivers a defence in which he may take all or any of the following courses :—

first, he may deny or refuse to admit the facts stated by the plaintiff ;

secondly, he may confess or admit them, and avoid their effect by answering fresh facts which afford an answer thereto ;

thirdly, he may admit the facts stated by the plaintiff, and may raise a question of law as to their legal effect.

If the defendant adopts the first or third of these three courses, a question of fact or of law is at once raised between the parties.

3. If the defendant adopts the second of the three courses, the plaintiff may reply— first, by denying the fresh facts alleged by the defendant ; or secondly, by admitting them, and alleging other facts which avoid their effect ;

thirdly, by raising a question of law as to their effect.

4. If the plaintiff pleads a reply of the second kind, that is, if he replies by way of confession and avoidance, the defendant has the same courses open to him in pleading a rejoinder (2). A rejoinder is now seldom pleaded.

5. It is very seldom that further proceedings are taken, but there may be sur-rejoinders, rebutters, and surrebutters.

Under the Code, a plaintiff commences his suit by presenting a plaint. The defendant then puts in his written statement in answer to the plaintiff's claim. There is nothing corresponding to a Reply or Rejoinder in the Anglo-Indian system of pleadings. But the plaintiff may, with the leave of the Court, tender a written statement, and the defendant may, with like leave, tender an additional written statement (O. 8, r. 9). The Code of 1882 also contained a similar provision (a), but pleadings in this country seldom go beyond the defendant's written statement.

The word "pleading" at the commencement of this rule refers to subsequent pleadings. Thus in England a plaintiff may not raise in his Reply a ground of claim different from that raised in his Statement of Claim ; nor can he in his Reply set up facts inconsistent with those set up in his Statement of Claim. A reply is not the proper place in which to raise new claims. A plaintiff who wishes to add new claims can do so only by amending the statement of claim (r. 17). Like remarks apply to a defendant's Rejoinder. As a plaintiff's Reply must be consistent with his Statement of Claim, so a defendant's Rejoinder must be consistent with his Defence. Thus if a plaintiff alleges merely a negligent breach of trust in his Statement of Claim, the Reply must not assert that the breach of trust was fraudulent (b). Similarly, if the Defence alleges that the arbitrators did not make any award, the Rejoinder must not assert that the award was not tendered by the proper time ; "for it is one thing not to make an award, and another thing not to tender it when made" (c). Upon the same principle, a plaintiff who claims rent on the basis of a lease cannot claim the same sum in his Reply as damages for unlawfully "holding over" ; for by his Statement of Claim he treats the defendant as his tenant, and he cannot turn round in his Reply and say: "If the defendant is not liable as a tenant, he is liable as a trespasser" (d)

rr. 7-9.

8. [New. R. S. C., O. 19, r. 20.] Where a contract is alleged in any pleading, a bare denial of the same by the opposite party shall be construed only as a denial in fact of the express contract alleged or of the matters of fact from which the same may be implied, and not as a denial of the legality or sufficiency in law of such contract.

Denial of contract.—All matters which go to show that the contract sued on is void or unlawful must be specifically pleaded. If such matters are not expressly pleaded, no evidence thereof can, as a rule, be given at the trial. Thus if A sues B on a contract, and B in his written statement merely denies the contract, such denial will be taken to mean only that there was in fact no such contract as alleged: it will not be construed as a denial of the legality of the contract. The result is that if A proves the contract sued upon, B will not be allowed to contend at the hearing that the contract was a wagering contract, and therefore void. B ought to have specifically pleaded in his written statement that the contract was a wagering contract (e). But where at the hearing of a suit the plaintiff's case discloses that the transaction which is the basis of his claim is illegal, the Court cannot properly ignore the illegality, even if the illegality be not pleaded or relied on by the defendant (f). "No Court ought to enforce an illegal contract or allow itself to be made the instrument of enforcing obligations alleged to arise out of a contract or transaction which is illegal, if the illegality is duly brought to the notice of the Court, and if the person invoking the aid of the Court is himself implicated in the illegality. It matters not whether the defendant has pleaded the illegality or whether he has not. If the evidence adduced by the plaintiff proves the illegality, the Court ought not to assist him" (g). Note that an agreement by way of wager is not illegal but merely void [see Indian Contract Act, 1872, ss. 23 and 30].

See O. 8, r. 2, which is a general rule.

9. [New. R. S. C., O. 19, r. 21.] Wherever the contents of any document are material, it shall be sufficient in any pleading to state the effect thereof as briefly as possible, without setting out the whole or any part thereof, unless the precise words of the document or any part thereof are material.

Effect of document to be stated.—This rule provides what is to be the proper method of pleading where a material fact (r. 2) is evidenced by a document (h). The intention expressed by the first part of the rule seems clearly to be that, where a document is material, it shall not be necessary to set it out at length, but only to state the legal effect of it, the object apparently being to prevent long pleadings (i). Thus it is sufficient if a plaintiff in a suit for the recovery of immoveable property states in his paint the effect of the will under which he claims. He is not bound to set out the precise words of the will, although a question has arisen as to the true construction of those words (j). At the same time it is not enough for a plaintiff to say that, under and by virtue of a certain deed, he is entitled to the property claimed by him. He must state the effect of the document on which he relies (k).

Precise words.—In an action of libel or slander it is always necessary to set out the exact words alleged to be libellous (l).

10. [New. R. S. C., O. 19, r. 22.] Wherever it is material to allege malice, fraudulent intention, knowledge or other condition of the mind of any person, it shall be sufficient to allege the same as a fact without setting out the circumstances from which the same is to be inferred.

Condition of mind.—Rules 10, 11 and 12 are no more than practical applications of the general principle laid down in r. 2 above. Malice, fraudulent intention, knowledge, etc., constitute in some cases the material facts of a party's case; they must therefore be alleged in the party's pleading. But the circumstances from which they are to be inferred need not be stated in the pleading; for they are but the evidence by which those facts are to be proved.

Malice.—Malice is a necessary part of the cause of action in suits for slander of title and for malicious prosecution. It must therefore be alleged by the plaintiff in his plaint. Similarly, where a defendant in an action of libel claims privilege, alleging that the words complained of were used on a privileged occasion, the plaintiff may allege and prove malice, that is, improper motive.

Knowledge—In a suit by a servant against his master for injury caused by the dangerous condition of a building where he is employed, the plaint must not only affirm the master's knowledge of the danger, but must also negative the servant's knowledge of it (m). To support an action for damages for the bite of a dog, the plaintiff must allege and prove that the dog had to the defendant's knowledge bitten or attempted to bite some person before it bit the plaintiff (n).

11. [New. R. S. C., O. 19, r. 23.] Wherever it is material to allege notice to any person of any fact, matter or thing, it shall be sufficient to allege such notice as a fact, unless the form or the precise terms of such notice, or the circumstances from which such notice is to be inferred, are material.

Notice as part of cause of action.—Notice, where it forms part of the cause of action, must be pleaded as a fact, e.g., notice of suit proposed to be brought against the Secretary of State for India [see s. 80 below], or against a Railway Company (nn), or against a Municipality, notice of dishonour of a bill of exchange, notice to a tenant to quit, etc. It is not necessary to set out the notice verbatim in the plaint.

rr. 11, 14.

12. [New. R. S. C., O. 19, r. 24.] Whenever any contract or any relation between any persons is to be implied from a series of letters or conversations or otherwise from a number of circumstances, it shall be sufficient to allege such contract or relation as a fact, and to refer generally to such letters, conversations or circumstances without setting them out in detail. And if in such case the person so pleading desires to rely in the alternative upon more contracts or relations than one as to be implied from such circumstances, he may state the same in the alternative.

Implied contract —A contract may be expressed in one document, or it may have to be implied from a series of documents or conversations or from a number of other circumstances. Rule 9 applies in the former case: the present rule, in the latter case. Circumstances in the conduct of two parties may establish a binding contract between them, although the agreement, reduced into writing as a draft, has not been formally executed by either (o). As regards contracts to be implied from a series of letters, it is to be noted that where a Court has to find a contract in a correspondence, and not in one particular note or memorandum formally signed, the whole of that which has passed between the parties must be taken into consideration (p).

13. [New. R. S. C., O. 19, r. 25.] Neither party need in any pleading allege any matter of fact which the law presumes in his favour or as to which the burden of proof lies upon the other side unless the same has first been specifically denied (e.g., consideration for a bill of exchange where the plaintiff sues only on the bill, and not for the consideration as a substantive ground of claim).

Presumptions of law.—A plaintiff need not, in his plaint, allege the consideration for which a bill of exchange was given to him, when he sues only on the bill, for it will be presumed in his favour that the bill was made for consideration (q). It will be for the defendant to plead that there was no consideration for the bill. But if the plaintiff sues on the consideration as a substantive ground of claim, he must allege the consideration specifically.

14. [Ss. 51, 115.] Every pleading shall be signed by the party and his pleader (if any): provided that where a party pleading is, by reason of absence or for other good cause, unable to sign the pleading, it may be signed by any person

O. 6, rr. 14, 16. duly authorized by him to sign the same or to sue or defend on his behalf.

Omission to sign plaint.—The signing of plaints is merely a matter of procedure (r). If a plaint is not signed by the plaintiff or by any person duly authorised by him in that behalf, and the defect is discovered at any time before judgment, the Court may allow the plaintiff to amend the plaint by signing the same. If the defect is not discovered until the case comes on for hearing before an appellate Court, the appellate Court may order the amendment to be made in that Court. In any event the appellate Court should not dismiss the suit or otherwise interfere with the decree of the lower Court, merely because the plaint is not signed as required by this rule. The reason is that though the omission to sign or verify a plaint is a defect, it is not such a defect as could affect the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of the Court (s): see s. 99.

15. [Ss. 51, 52, 115.] (1) Save as otherwise provided by any law for the time being in force, every pleading shall be verified at the foot by the party or by one of the parties pleading or by some other person proved to the satisfaction of the Court to be acquainted with the facts of the case.

(2) The person verifying shall specify, by reference to the numbered paragraphs of the pleading, what he verifies of his own knowledge and what he verifies upon information received and believed to be true.

(3) The verification shall be signed by the person making it and shall state the date on which and the place at which it was signed.

Verification of plaint.—The verification of a plaint is not evidence on which a suit can be decreed whether the defendant does or does not appear (t).

Procedure when verification is defective.—A verification is defective, if it omits to indicate which matters are true to the knowledge of the person making it and which (if any) are stated on information and belief. The procedure to be followed when a verification is defective is the same as that followed in the case of defective signature (u). See notes to r. 14 above.

16. [New. R. S. C., O. 19, r. 27.] The Court may, at any stage* of the proceedings, order to be struck out or amended any matter in any pleading which may be unnecessary or scandalous or which may tend to prejudice, embarrass or delay the fair trial of the suit.

Amending your opponent's pleading.—This rule deals with amendments O. 6, r. 16. which a party desires to be made in his opponent's pleading. The next rule deals with amendments which a party desires to make in his own pleading.

Striking out or amending pleadings.—"It seems to me," said Bowen, L. J., in Knowles v. Roberts (v), "that the rule that the Court is not to dictate to parties how they should frame their case, is one that ought always to be preserved sacred. But that rule is, of course, subject to this modification and limitation, that the parties must not offend against the rules of pleading which have been laid down by the law; and if a party introduces a pleading which is unnecessary, and it tends to prejudice, embarrass and delay the trial of the action, it then becomes a pleading which is beyond his right." It is a recognized principle that "a defendant may claim ex debito justitiæ to have the plaintiff's case presented in an intelligible form, so that he may not be embarrassed in meeting it; and the Court ought to be strict even to severity in taking care to prevent pleadings from degenerating into the old oppressive pleadings of the Court of Chancery" (w).

"Unnecessary."—This rule has been reproduced verbatim from O. 19, r. 27, of the English Rules. According to the English practice, the mere fact that a pleading contains matters which are unnecessary is no ground for striking out those matters (x). It only affects the costs of the pleading (y). An allegation in a pleading will not be struck out merely because it is unnecessary, unless it is scandalous, or tends to prejudice, embarrass or delay the fair trial of the action. Thus, where in a suit against a Local Board, the plaintiff alleged that a member of the Board had used his influence with the Board for his own private interest, and that in consequence thereof the Board had declined to meet the just demands of the plaintiffs, the allegations were ordered to be struck out (z). In such a case, the allegations are not only unnecessary, but they are scandalous. For the same reason, unnecessary allegations of dishonest conduct made against the defendant will be struck out under this rule (a). In an action to enforce a compromise of a former action, it is unnecessary and embarrassing for the plaintiff to set out in the plaint the original disputes between the parties: such allegations will therefore be struck out (b). Where a statement of claim contained immaterial facts and set out at great length documents which could not be material except as evidence by way of admission, so that the defendant could not know what case he had to meet, it was held that the whole statement of claim should be struck out as being unnecessarily prolix and embarrassing (c). In an action for slander it is unnecessary and embarrassing for the defendant to state in his defence that he did not say the words alleged in the plaint, but that he said something else, and that the something else which he said was true; such statements will therefore be struck out (d).

"Scandalous."—Every Court has an inherent power, quite independently of this rule, to strike out scandalous matter in any record or proceeding. "The Court has a duty to discharge towards the public and the suitors, in taking care that its records are kept free from irrelevant and scandalous matter" (e). "Scandal is calculated to do great and permanent injury to all persons whom it affects, by making the records of the Court the means of perpetuating libellous and malignant slanders; and the Court, in aid of the public morals, is bound to interfere to suppress such indecencies which may stain the reputation and wound the feelings of the parties and their relatives and friends" (f). Thus

O. 6, r. 16. where an application for bail to the High Court contained defamatory allegations against the trying Magistrate which were all irrelevant, the High Court of Bombay refused to allow the application to be filed, and ordered it to be returned (g). Similarly, where a memorandum of appeal alleged partiality against the Judge whose decree was in question, the High Court of Madras ordered the objectionable passages to be expunged (h). It must, however, be noted that "nothing can be scandalous which is relevant" (i). Thus matters in aggravation of damages are relevant; they will not, therefore, be struck out, though scandalous (j). Similarly, allegations of dishonesty or fraud or conspiracy will not be struck out as scandalous, if they are relevant to the facts in issue. They will be struck out only if they are irrelevant (k).

An application to strike out scandalous matter may be made by any person, whether or not he is a party to the suit or personally affected by the scandalous matter (l).

"Tend to prejudice, embarrass or delay the fair trial of the suit."—In considering the question whether a pleading tends "to prejudice, embarrass or delay the fair trial of the suit," a liberal interpretation should be given to the words "trial of the suit." Hence not only a pleading which tends to prejudice or embarrass a party at the actual trial of a suit but a pleading which tends to prejudice or embarrass a party at any stage of the proceedings in the suit, would be within this rule (m).

A pleading is embarrassing if it is so drawn that it is not clear what case the opposite party has to meet at the trial (n). But a pleading is not embarrassing merely because it is prolix (o). Nor is a pleading embarrassing, merely because it contains allegations that are inconsistent or stated in the alternative (p). See notes to r. 2 above, "Alternative and inconsistent allegations," p. 400 above. See also notes above, "Unnecessary."

"At any stage of the proceedings."—The application under this rule should be made with reasonable promptitude, and as a rule before the close of the pleadings. If it is not so made, the Court may, in its discretion, refuse to make the order, though the rule expressly states that an order may be made "at any stage of the proceedings." The reason is that the power to make the order under this rule is discretionary (q).

Practice.—The Court may, under this rule, order the whole pleading to be struck out, as was done in the undermentioned cases (r), where the statement of claim consisted partly of unintelligible matters, partly of irrelevant matters, and the rest of scandalous matter, or it may order the objectionable matter only to be struck out, which appears to be the usual practice (s). Where the defect can be remedied by amendment, the Court may give leave to amend (t). Where a pleading is not so specific as it ought to be, the Court may direct the party to amend his pleading or give further particulars (u).

17. [New. R. S. C., O. 28, r. 1.] The Court may at any O. 6, r. 17. stage of the proceedings allow either party to alter or amend his pleadings in such manner and on such terms as may be just, and all such amendments shall be made as may be necessary for the purpose of determining the real questions in controversy between the parties.

Different kinds of amendment.—Hitherto we have dealt with four kinds of amendment. The present rule deals with one more. All these may be grouped together as follows:—

1. S. 152 [amendment of clerical and arithmetical mistakes in judgments, decrees and orders].
2. S. 153 [amendment of proceedings in a suit by the Court, whether moved thereto by the parties or not, for the purpose of determining the real question or issue between the parties].
3. O. 1, r. 10, sub-r. (2) [striking out or adding parties].
4. O. 6, r. 16 [amending your opponents pleading; compulsory amendment].
5. O. 6, r. 17 [amending your own pleading: voluntary amendment].

Amending your own pleading.—The preceding rule dealt with amendments which a party desires to be made in his opponent's pleading, as where the pleading contains irrelevant and scandalous matter, or where it may tend to prejudice, embarrass or delay the fair trial of the suit. The present rule deals with amendments which a party desires to make in his own pleading.

LEAVE TO AMEND, WHEN GIVEN.

As a general rule, leave to amend will be granted so as to enable the real question in issue between the parties to be raised on the pleadings, where the amendment will occasion no injury to the opposite party, except such as can be sufficiently compensated for by costs or other terms to be imposed by the order (v). "I have had much to do in Chambers," said Bramwell, L.J., "with applications for leave to amend, and I may perhaps be allowed to say that this humble branch of learning is very familiar to me. My practice has always been to give leave to amend unless I have been satisfied that the party applying was acting malâ fide, or that, by his blunder, he had done some injury to his opponent which could not be compensated for by costs or otherwise" (w). It does not matter that the original omission arose from negligence or carelessness. "However negligent or careless may have been the first omission, and however late the proposed amendment, the amendment should be allowed if it can be made without injustice to the other side. There is no injustice if the other side can be compensated by costs" (x). "I have found in my experience," said Bowen, L.J., "that there is one panacea which heals every sore in litigation, and that is costs" (y). It is immaterial to consider whether the error sought to be amended was accidental or not. There is no rule that only slips or accidental errors are to be corrected. The rule says, "all such amendments shall be

- O. 6, r. 17. made as may be necessary for the purpose of determining the real questions in controversy." There is no kind of error or mistake which, if not fraudulent or intended to overreach, the Court ought not to correct, if it can be done without injustice to the other party (z). Thus a plaintiff in a suit for debt may be allowed to amend the plaint by setting out an acknowledgment passed to him by the defendant even after the defendant has filed his written statement raising the plea of limitation (a). Even an admission made by mistake may be allowed to be withdrawn, and the pleading amended accordingly (b). The party applying, however, must not be acting malâ fide: the application to amend must be a bonâ fide one, and made in good faith (c).

LEAVE TO AMEND WHEN REFUSED.

It follows from what has been stated above that leave to amend should be refused—

- (1) Where the amendment is not necessary for the purpose of determining the real questions in controversy between the parties, as where it is—
 - (i) merely technical, or
 - (ii) useless and of no substance.
- (2) Where the amendment would occasion injury to the opposite party such as cannot be compensated for by costs.
- (3) Where the amendment would introduce a totally different, new and inconsistent case, and the application is made at a late stage of the proceedings.
- (4) Where the application for amendment is not made in good faith.

We shall deal with these four cases in order.

1. Leave to amend will be refused where the amendment is not necessary for the purpose of determining the real questions in controversy between the parties.—This happens where the amendment is merely technical or of no substance.

Where the amendment is merely technical.—Where after the evidence for the plaintiff has been taken, the defendant applies for an amendment for the purpose merely of enabling him to raise a purely technical objection to the plaintiff's right to sue, the application should be refused (d). B and C wrongfully remove A's furniture. A sues B for damages, and recovers judgment against him. [B and C being joint wrongdoers, the judgment against B, according to English law, precludes A from suing C for the same wrong.] A afterwards sues C for damages for the same wrong. C does not plead the judgment against B in his defence, but, after the evidence for A has been taken, applies for leave to amend his written statement by pleading that the judgment against B is a bar to the suit against him. The application must be refused (e), for the amendment is not necessary to bring out the real questions between the parties, but proposes merely to enable C to avail himself of a technical rule of law (f).

Where the amendment is useless and of no substance.—The object of the present rule being to enable the real questions in dispute being raised on the pleadings, leave to amend has been refused to the plaintiff where the proposed amendment would not help him in substantiating his claim (g), and to the defendant, where the proposed amendment would O. 6, r. 17. not help him in supporting his defence (h). Thus where A sued B, and finding that the suit against B would fail, applied to join C as a defendant, the application was refused on the ground that even if the plaintiff were amended by adding C as a party, the case was such that A would not be entitled to any relief even against C. In refusing leave to amend, Vaughan Williams, L.J., said: "One good reason for our not doing so is that looking at the case that he [plaintiff] tells us he would wish to present, that case, if presented by amendment, would, in my judgment, also fail; so that there is nothing to be gained by amendment" (i). Similarly, where A sued B for a libel, and B pleaded justification, and B afterwards applied to amend his defence by adding a paragraph which virtually contained a plea in mitigation of damages, but was no answer to the action, the application was refused (j). See notes to r. 2 above under the head "Matters affecting damages," p. 397 above.

2. Leave to amend will be refused where the amendment would cause injustice to the opposite party such as cannot be compensated for by imposing terms as to costs or otherwise (k).—Thus leave to amend will be refused, if the amendment will prejudice a right that has already accrued to the opposite party on the pleadings as then standing. A sued a tramway company for damages caused by their negligence in allowing their tramway to be in a defective condition. By their defence the company denied negligence. It was no part of the defence that the company were not the proper parties to be sued. More than six months after the delivery of the defence the company applied for leave to amend the defence by adding an allegation that by a contract between the company and the local authority of the district, the liability to maintain the roadway had been transferred to the local authority and that the company had ceased to be responsible for the railway. At the date of the application A's remedy against the local authority had become time-barred. If the agreement had been pleaded earlier, A could have maintained an action against the board. Under these circumstances the application was refused. It is clear from the above facts that if the amendment were allowed, A might fail against the company, the company not being the proper defendants, and if A brought an action against the local authority, it would be too late. That would be an injury to A such as could not be compensated for by any costs that the court might order the company to pay to A. "The test as to whether the amendment should be allowed," said Pollock, B., "is, whether or not the defendant can amend without placing the plaintiff in such a position that he cannot be recouped, as it were, by any allowance of costs or otherwise. Here the action would be wholly displaced by the proposed amendment, and I think it ought not to be allowed" (l).

On the same principle the Courts have refused to allow amendment of the plaintiff by introducing a new cause of action after the period of limitation in respect of such cause of action has expired. The leading English case on the subject is Weldon v. Neal (m). The facts of that case may be stated in the form of an illustration: A sues B for damages for slander. A afterwards applies for leave to amend the plaintiff by adding fresh claims in respect of assault and false imprisonment. Those claims are at the date of the application barred by limitation, although they were not barred at the date of the suit. The application must be refused, for the effect of allowing it would be to take away from B

O. 6, r. 17. the defence under the law of limitation and therefore unjustly to prejudice him. "We must act," said Lord Esher, M.R., "on the settled rule of practice, which is that amendments are not admissible when they prejudice the rights of the opposite party as existing at the date of such amendments. Under very peculiar circumstances the Court might perhaps have power to allow such an amendment, but certainly as a general rule it will not do so." The case of Kisandas v. Rachappa (n), decided by the High Court of Bombay, is an instance in which such an amendment was allowed on the ground that the circumstances of the case were so peculiar that it should properly be excepted from the general rule. The facts of the case may be stated in the form of an illustration. A, alleging that he had brought in Rs. 4,000 as capital under a partnership agreement between him and B, sues B, for dissolution of partnership and for accounts. It is clear from the proceedings before the Court of first instance that though the suit was in form one for dissolution and accounts, A intended from the first to sue only for the recovery of his money, and B had actually pleaded to the money claim, and the claim had actually been put in issue and evidence given in respect thereof. The lower Court finds as a fact that the sum was due, but dismisses A's suit on the technical ground that the agreement set up by A did not constitute a partnership between A and B. A appeals from the decree, and applies for the first time in appeal for leave to amend the plaint by adding a prayer for the recovery of Rs. 4,000. At this date the claim for money is barred by limitation. The amendment must be allowed notwithstanding this fact. The defence of limitation would never have been open to B, had it not been for the inexpertness of the pleadings. There was no fresh claim sought to be set up as it was in Weldon v. Neal cited above B knew what A's claim was, though the suit was wrongly framed. Similarly, where the plaintiff sued in the first instance for possession of the books of accounts of his shop from the defendants who he alleged were his servants, and stated in the plaint that he would bring a separate suit for the money due by them, but subsequently applied for leave to amend the plaint by adding a further relief, namely, recovery of money, it was held that the amendment should be allowed even though the money claim was barred by limitation between the date of the plaint and the date of the application for amendment (o).

3. Leave to amend will be refused where the amendment would introduce a totally different, new and inconsistent case, and the application is made at a very late stage of the proceedings.—This proposition follows directly from the Rule. The object of the Rule is to allow an amendment for the purpose of determining the real questions in dispute between the parties. That being the purpose of amendment, no amendment should be allowed which would introduce a totally different, new and inconsistent case (p). An amendment of this character could not bring out the real issues in the suit; it implies rather an abandonment of the real issues on the part of the party applying for the amendment. It has therefore been the practice both of the English and Indian Courts to refuse leave for such amendment, especially where the application has been made at a late stage of the proceedings. On looking into the cases it will be found that in almost every case in which the application was refused, it was made either when the suit was ripe for hearing or at the trial of the suit. The result of the cases is thus summed up in Bullen and Leake's Precedents of Pleadings (q): "Leave to amend may be refused where at the trial or hearing the party seeks to alter the whole nature of his case by an unexpected amendment which may require further evidence to be adduced by his opponent."

(q) 6th Ed., p. 16.

The above proposition may be split into two:—

O. 6, r. 17.

- A. Leave to amend a plaint should not be granted, if the amendment would convert the suit into another of a different and inconsistent character.
- B. Leave to amend a written statement should be refused, if the amendment would convert the defence into another of a different and inconsistent character [p. 422 below].

We shall deal with these propositions in order.

A. Leave to amend a plaint should not be granted, in any event at the hearing of a suit, if the amendment would convert the suit into another of a different and inconsistent character.—The question involved in the above proposition arises in this wise: A institutes a suit against B. B files his written statement. At the hearing of the suit, A finds that his case must fail as laid in the plaint, and that he can only succeed on a different case. He then applies for leave to amend the plaint. Should the leave be granted? It has been held under the corresponding English rule that no amendment should be allowed if it would “introduce an entirely different case from that which the defendant came to meet” (r) or, to put it in another form, if it would “change one action into another of a substantially different character” (s). Section 53 of the Code of 1882 which dealt with amendment of plaints, expressly provided that “a plaint shall not be amended so as to convert a suit of one character into a suit of another and inconsistent character.” That section has been omitted in this Code, and the present rule (which is a reproduction of O. 28, r. 1, of the English Rules) now takes its place. But the decisions under the old section on the point now under consideration are still good law, and we proceed to examine them.

It must be observed at the outset that a plaintiff must in general be limited to the case which he puts forward in his plaint. There are, however, cases in which by some mistake or misapprehension the plaintiff has failed to state his case correctly and properly in the plaint. In such cases the Court may allow the plaint to be amended (t) for if the amendment is refused, the plaintiff may have to bring another suit, and the object of the rule allowing amendment of plaints is to avoid multiplicity of suits (u). But the Court ought not to allow an amendment, if it would convert the suit into another of a different and inconsistent character. “We cannot countenance the notion,” said Straight, J., “that a plaintiff, coming into Court with one case, and hopelessly failing to prove it, should be permitted to succeed upon another, and that directly in antagonism with his primary allegation” (v). The law prohibits every amendment that would change the fundamental character of the suit (w). It is not, however, to be supposed that if the fundamental character of the suit is not altered, a plaintiff is entitled as of right to amend the plaint. As stated by the High Court of Bombay, “the power to get a plaint amended is subject to the discretion of the judge, and is not claimable as a right of the suitor in all circumstances” (x).

Rules.—“The general rule is that any amendment allowed must be such as is either raised in the pleadings (i.e., plaint and written statement), or is consistent with the case as originally laid, and that the state of facts and the equities and ground of relief originally

From the general rule stated above, we deduce the following three rules each of which is borne out by the cases cited under it:—

Rule I.—Where a plaintiff bases his claim upon a specific legal relation alleged to exist between him and the defendant, he may not be allowed to amend the plaint so as to base it on a different legal relation.

Note.—Even if the legal relation between the plaintiff and the defendant remains unchanged, the plaint will not be allowed to be amended, if it completely alters the cause of action.

Rule II.—Where a plaintiff bases his claim on a specific title, he may not be allowed to amend the plaint so as to base it on a different title.

Note.—Even if the title by which the plaintiff claims remains unaltered, the plaint will not be allowed to be amended, if it completely alters the cause of action.

Rule III.—When one kind of fraud is charged, another kind of fraud cannot, upon failure of proof, be substituted for it.

Illustrations of Rule I.

1. A, alleging that B hired cargo boats from him, and that a balance of Rs. 3,000 is due to him on that account, sues B for the amount. It is proved at the hearing that B did not himself hire the boats, but that he was merely A's agent to find hires for the boats. A then applies to amend his plaint by claiming an account from B on the footing that B was A's agent. The amendment cannot be allowed, because in the one case the legal relation between A and B is that of letter and hirer, and, in the other, that of principal and agent: Shibkrishna v. Abdool (1880) 5 Cal. 602.

2. A sues B for the rent of a house alleged to have been let by A to B. B denies the lease, and contends that he is the owner of the house. A will not be allowed to amend the plaint by converting the suit into a suit for a declaration of ownership: Bai Shri Majirajba v. Naganlal (1895) 19 Bom. 303.

3. A sues B for damages for wrongful occupation of his land and for injury done to his land. After the issues are framed, A applies to amend his plaint by claiming from B rent for the land on the basis of a subsisting tenancy. The amendment cannot be allowed, because it will convert a claim based on trespass into a claim on the basis of a subsisting lease: Narayan v. Hari (1889) 13 Bom. 664; Jhari Singh v. Pirthi Nath (1917) 2 Pat. L. J. 69 (a). See ill. (5) below.

4. A suit for possession on the footing of a subsisting lease cannot be converted at a late stage of the proceedings into a suit for ejectment: Newby v. Sharpe (1878) 8 C. D. 39, 49; Laird v. Briggs (1880) 16 C. D. 440.

5. A suit for rent will not be allowed to be converted at the hearing into a suit for use and occupation.—A sues B to recover Rs. 1,000 alleged to be the rent due under a lease executed by B. The Court finds that B was in occupation of the premises during the period for which the rent is claimed, but that the alleged lease was not executed by B.

(1883) 5 All. 456.
(a) See also Gavrishankar v. Atmaram (1894) 18 Bom. 611; Ramchandra v. Vasudev (1886) 10 Bom. 451.

At this stage A applies to amend his plaint by alleging that, though the lease was not executed by B, he is entitled to recover the amount for use and occupation of the premises. The amendment will not be allowed (b). O. 6. r. 17.

6. A, who is P's agent to manage certain property belonging to P, appoints S to act as a sub-agent for P, and gives him Rs. 1,000 belonging to P, for the payment of Government revenue and other purposes. S fails to account for the money. P sues A to recover the amount paid by A to S, claiming the same on the ground that S was appointed sub-agent without P's authority. It is found at the hearing that S was appointed sub-agent with P's authority. P will not be allowed to amend the plaint so as to base his claim on the ground that A had not exercised ordinary prudence in selecting S as a sub-agent for P: Hamilton v. Land Mortgage Bank (1883) 5 All. 456. [This is an illustration of the proposition in the Note to Rule 1. If the amendment were allowed, the legal relation between the plaintiff and the defendant, which is that of principal and agent, would no doubt remain unchanged, but the cause of action would be completely changed.]

Illustrations of Rule II.

1. A sues B to recover certain property as the heir of C who, A alleges, was the adopted son of D. The Court finds that the adoption of C was not valid. A then contends for the first time in appeal to the Privy Council that even if the adoption was not valid, he is entitled to recover the property as the heir of D. This is a totally new case, and A cannot be permitted in appeal to set up an entirely new case: Gopee Lal v. Chundraoee (1872) 19 W. R. 12 I. A. Sup. Vol. 131.

2. A obtains a decree against a Hindu father, and after the death of the latter, attaches certain immovable property in execution of the decree. B and C, sons of the deceased, sue A for a declaration that the property is joint family property, and it is not liable to be sold in execution of the decree against the father, on the ground that the debts contracted by the father were for immoral purposes, and that the property therefore could not be attached. It is proved that the debts were not incurred for immoral purposes. Thereupon B and C apply to amend the plaint by alleging that they had separated from their father before the decree was passed against him, and the decree was not therefore binding upon their shares. The amendment cannot be allowed, because the plaintiff's claim as originally laid was based on the assumption that there was no partition between them and their father: Narayanrao v. Javhervahu (1888) 12 Bom. 431.

3. A, a Hindu, claiming as the heir of his uncle, sues the executors of his uncle's widow for possession of property left by the widow, alleging that the same belonged to the estate of his uncle, and that the widow had no power to dispose of it by will. The Court holds that the widow had power to will away the property. A will not be allowed to amend the plaint by adding that even if the widow had the power to dispose of the property by her will, he was entitled to the residue as his uncle's heir as the same was left to charitable objects of an unspecified and general character, and could not therefore be legally applied to charity: Damodar v. Purmanandas (1883) 7 Bom. 155. [This is an illustration of the Note to Rule II. If the amendment were allowed, the title by which the plaintiff claims, namely, as his uncle's heir, would no doubt remain unchanged, but the cause of action would be completely altered.]

O. 6, r. 17.

Illustration of Rule III.

A, the official assignee of the estate of a deceased insolvent, sues B for Rs. 1,50,000 alleged in the plaint to be unlawfully withheld from the estate in consequence of a payment fraudulently concealed from A's predecessor in office. It is proved that A's predecessor was aware of the payment. A applies to amend the plaint by alleging that though his predecessor consented to the payment, such consent was illegal as being a fraud, though of a different kind, upon the Court. The amendment cannot be allowed, because to allege fraud of one kind and to substitute fraud of another kind is to convert the suit into one of an inconsistent character: Abdul Hoosein v. Turner (1887) 11 Bom. 620, 14 I. A. 111. See Notes to O. 6, r. 4, "Fraud and coercion," p. 402 above.

B. A written statement should not be allowed to be amended at the hearing so as to convert the defence into another of a different and inconsistent character.—As in the case of a plaint, so in the case of a written statement, the Court will not at the hearing allow any amendment that would involve "a complete change of front in the defence" (c).

Illustration.

A agrees to grant a lease of a brickfield to B. No lease is executed, but B enters into possession under the agreement. B then sues A for specific performance of the agreement, alleging that A, though frequently requested to do so, had neglected and refused to grant the lease. A denies that he was requested by B to grant the lease and expresses his readiness to execute the lease. A also counter-claims for Rs. 1,500 by way of rent. After the suit is set down for trial, A applies for leave to amend his defence and counter-claim, and to join therewith a claim for possession of the land. The application must be refused. To allow A to amend would be to allow him to present "a totally distinct, new and inconsistent case": Clark v. Wray (1886) 31 C. D. 68.

4. Leave to amend will be refused where the application for amendment is not made in good faith.—Leave to amend will not be given if the party applying is acting mala fide (d), as where there is no substantial ground for the case proposed to be set up by the amendment (e).

Amendment of plaint by adding new reliefs.—The amendment of a plaint by adding a new prayer may or may not convert the suit into another of a different and inconsistent character. If the amendment converts the suit into another of a different and inconsistent character, it will not be allowed. If the amendment does not convert the suit into another of a different and inconsistent character, it may or may not be allowed at the discretion of the Court. In the exercise of this discretion, the Court will not allow an amendment, if the application for amendment is made at such a late stage of the proceedings that, if allowed, it would create a necessity of practically trying the case de novo (f); otherwise the amendment may be allowed (g). Thus a mortgagee suing for sale of the mortgaged property may be allowed to amend the plaint by asking merely for a simple money decree against the mortgagor. In such a case, the character of the suit is not fundamentally altered, nor could the defendant be possibly taken by surprise (h). Similarly, a purchaser suing for specific performance may be allowed to amend his plaint by asking for a refund of the earnest money, if the Court does not decree specific performance (i).

Amendment by adding a plea of fraud.—It is “the universal practice, except O. 6, r. 17. in the most exceptional circumstances, not to allow an amendment for the purpose of adding a plea of fraud where fraud has not been pleaded in the first instance” (j). Where facts supporting the charge of fraud were disclosed in the cross-examination of the defendant, leave was given to amend by adding a plea of fraud (k). Similarly, where the plaintiff sued on a mortgage, and the defendant in his written statement alleged that he was a minor at the date of the mortgage, leave was given to the plaintiff to amend the plaint by raising an alternative case that the loan was obtained by the defendant by the fraudulent representation that he had attained majority at the time (l). See Notes to O. 6, r. 4, “Fraud”, p. 402 above.

“AT ANY STAGE OF THE PROCEEDINGS.”

Leave to amend may be granted at any stage of the proceedings. It may be granted in appeal [s. 107, sub-s. (2)], or even in second appeal (s. 108). In the undermentioned case (m), the plaintiff was allowed to amend his plaint in appeal before the Privy Council. The appellate Court may allow an amendment whether leave to amend was asked for in the Court below or not. It may also allow an amendment even if the Court below offered leave to amend but the offer was declined (n).

There is no such rule as that leave to amend should be granted as a matter of course where the application is made before the hearing, and that it should be refused on the ground of delay where the application is made at the hearing. More delay has hardly ever been a ground for refusing leave to amend. It is only when delay is coupled with one or other of the four grounds for refusing leave enumerated above, that leave to amend has been refused (o). Where the application is made before the hearing, there is as a rule little difficulty in obtaining leave to amend, for the opposite party can then be compensated by costs. But where the application is made after the suit has been set down for trial (p), or where it is made at the hearing, the probability is that it will be refused, for it is at this stage that the grounds for refusing leave chiefly arise, and can be effectively set up. In fact, almost all the cases in which leave to amend has been refused are cases where the application was made at the hearing. The majority of them were cases where the party applying, seeing that he could not succeed on the case as made in his pleading, sought to alter the whole nature of his case by an unexpected amendment, and leave was refused on the ground that a party should not be allowed “a change of front” at that stage. But leave may be granted even at the hearing, if there is no ground against its being granted. Thus leave to amend will generally be granted at the trial where there is a defect in the parties and it has become necessary to amend the proceedings in the suit (q). It would also be granted where both parties knew what the case was and there was no surprise (r).

- O. 6, r. 18. 18. [New. R. S. C., O. 28, r. 7.] If a party who has obtained an order for leave to amend does not amend accordingly within the time limited for that purpose by the order, or if no time is thereby limited then within fourteen days from the date of the order, he shall not be permitted to amend after the expiration of such limited time as aforesaid or of such fourteen days, as the case may be, unless the time is extended by the Court.

ORDER VII.

Plaint.

- O. 7, r. 1. Particulars to be contained in plaint. 1. [S. 50. para. 1.] The plaint shall contain the following particulars:—
- (a) the name of the Court in which the suit is brought;
 - (b) the name, description and place of residence of the plaintiff;
 - (c) the name, description and place of residence of the defendant, so far as they can be ascertained;
 - (d) where the plaintiff or the defendant is a minor or a person of unsound mind, a statement to that effect;
 - (e) the facts constituting the cause of action and when it arose;
 - (f) the facts showing that the Court has jurisdiction;
 - (g) the relief which the plaintiff claims;
 - (h) where the plaintiff has allowed a set-off or relinquished a portion of his claim, the amount so allowed or relinquished; and
 - (i) a statement of the value of the subject-matter of the suit for the purposes of jurisdiction and of Court-fees, so far as the case admits.

“Facts constituting the cause of action.”—As to the meaning of cause of action, see notes to s. 20 on p. 86 above. See also notes to O. 6, r. 2.

“Facts showing that the Court has jurisdiction.”—See ss. 16, 19 and 20, and cl. 12 of the Charter set forth in Appendix II.

Relief which the plaintiff claims.—See r. 7 below and notes thereto.

O. 7,

rr. 1-4.

Statement of Value.—See notes to s. 15, under the head “Where the subject-matter of a suit does not admit of being satisfactorily valued,” p. 75 above.

2. [S. 50, paras. 2, 3.] Where the plaintiff seeks the recovery of money, the plaintiff shall state the precise amount claimed:

In money suits.

But where the plaintiff sues for mesne profits, or for an amount which will be found due to him on taking unsettled accounts between him and the defendant, the plaintiff shall state approximately the amount sued for.

Additions made into this rule by the Chief Court of the Punjab under s. 122.—See Appendix VII below.

Suit for mesne profits or accounts—See notes to s. 6, “Pecuniary jurisdiction in passing decrees,” p. 15 above.

3. [New.] Where the subject-matter of the suit is immovable property, the plaintiff shall contain a description of the property sufficient to identify it, and, in case such property can be identified by boundaries or numbers in a record of settlement or survey, the plaintiff shall specify such boundaries or numbers.

Where the subject-matter of the suit is immovable property.

4. [S. 50, para. 4.] Where the plaintiff sues in a representative character the plaintiff shall show not only that he has an actual existing interest in the subject-matter, but that he has taken the steps (if any) necessary to enable him to institute a suit concerning it.

When plaintiff sues as representative.

“Where the plaintiff sues in a representative character.”—Where a person dies leaving a will, the executor named in the will may obtain probate of the will. Where a person dies intestate, his heirs may apply for letters of administration. The person to whom letters of administration are granted is called administrator. The executor or administrator, as the case may be, of a deceased person, is his legal representative for all purposes, and all the property of the deceased vests in him as such. A suit by a person as executor or administrator of a deceased person is a suit by him in a representative character. There are some cases in which the law requires probate or letters of administration, as the case may be, to entitle a person suing in a representative character to a decree in respect of the estate of the deceased. In a large number of cases, however, it is not necessary to obtain probate or letters of administration to entitle a plaintiff suing in a representative character to a decree in respect of the

O. 7, r. 4. estate of the deceased. This will be seen from the following statement of the law on the subject:—

1. Europeans, Parsis, Jews and other persons subject to the provisions of the Indian Succession Act X of 1865.—When the deceased is a person to whom the provisions of the Succession Act apply, probate or letters of administration must be obtained, otherwise no decree will be passed in respect of any matter concerning the estate of the deceased: Succession Act, section 187 (as to probate), and section 190 (as to letters of administration).

The Succession Act does not apply to Hindus, Mahomedans, and Buddhists: see s. 331 of the Act.

2. Hindus subject to the provisions of the Hindu Wills Act XXI of 1870.—Where a Hindu subject to the provisions of the Hindu Wills Act dies leaving a will, his executor is not entitled to a decree in respect of any matter concerning the estate of the deceased unless he has obtained probate of the will [see s. 2 of the Act which incorporates s. 187 of the Succession Act which requires probate]. But where he dies intestate, his heirs may sue in respect of his property without obtaining letters of administration, unless the suit is one to recover a debt due to the deceased, in which case either letters of administration or a succession certificate must be obtained before a decree can be passed in favour of the heirs: see Succession Certificate Act VII of 1889, ss. 1 and 4.

The Hindu Wills Act applies to Hindus, Jains, Sikhs and Buddhists, when either the will is made within the territories subject to the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal or in the towns of Madras and Bombay, or the will, though made outside those places, relates to immovable property situate in those places.

3. Hindus not subject to the provisions of the Hindu Wills Act.—These are governed by the provisions of the Probate and Administration Act V of 1881. The latter Act does not require probate or letters of administration, so that the executor of a Hindu not governed by the Hindu Wills Act may sue without obtaining probate, and his heirs may sue without obtaining letters of administration. But when the suit is to recover a debt due to deceased, no Court can pass a decree against the debtor, except on the production, by the person suing, of a probate or letters of administration or a succession certificate: see Succession Certificate Act VII of 1889, s. 4.

The Probate and Administration Act applies to all persons to whom the Indian Succession Act does not apply. It therefore applies to Mahomedans, and, subject to the provisions of the Hindu Wills Act, to Hindus.

4. Mahomedans.—Mahomedans are governed in matters of probate and administration by the provisions of the Probate and Administration Act. Hence the rules, as to probate, letters of administration, and succession certificate in the case of Mahomedans are the same as in Case (3) above.

5. Native Christians.—Up to the year 1901, Native Christians were governed by the provisions of the Indian Succession Act. Hence it was necessary, where the deceased left a will, that the executor should obtain probate before he could establish any right as executor to the property of the deceased (Succession Act, s. 187). And where the deceased died intestate, letters of administration were required before any right could be established to any part of the property of the deceased in a Court of Law (Succession Act, s. 190). In the year 1901, an Act was passed called the Native Christian Administration of Estates Act (VII of 1901), declaring inter alia that the provisions of section 190 of the Succession Act shall not apply to any part of the property of a Native Christian who has died intestate. The result therefore is exactly the same as in Case (2) above.

that is to say, if a Native Christian dies leaving a will, probate must be obtained to entitle the executor to obtain a decree in respect of the property of the deceased as provided by s. 187 of the Succession Act. But if he dies intestate, his heirs may sue in respect of his property without obtaining letters of administration, unless the suit is one to recover a debt due to the deceased, in which case either letters of administration or a succession certificate must be obtained before a decree can be made in favour of the heirs: see Native Christian Administration of Estates Act, s. 5.

“Has taken the steps.”—In cases to which the Probate and Administration Act, 1881, applies, it is necessary, where the suit is one for the recovery of a debt due to the deceased, that representation should be obtained to the estate of the deceased. But such representation is not a condition precedent to the institution of the suit. It is sufficient if it is obtained before the passing of the decree. It is so provided by the Succession Certificate Act, 1889, s. 4.

Suppose now that the deceased has left a will, and that the case is one governed by the Indian Succession Act, 1865, or the Hindu Wills Act, 1870, and that the suit is one to establish a right as executor or legatee. In such a case it has been held by the Privy Council that the grant of probate is not a condition precedent to the institution of the suit though the suit be one to establish a right as executor or legatee, and that the executor or legatee may institute the suit without obtaining probate, but that he will not be entitled to a decree until he obtains probate (s). See Succession Act, s. 187.

But suppose the deceased has left no will, and the case is one governed by the Indian Succession Act, and the suit is one to establish a right to the property of the deceased. Is it necessary that letters of administration to the estate of the deceased should be obtained before the institution of the suit, or is it sufficient if they are obtained before the decree is passed? It has been held by the High Court of Bombay that if letters of administration are not obtained before the institution of the suit, and the plaintiff does not show that the plaintiff has obtained letters of administration, the plaintiff should be rejected on presentation; but if the plaintiff is not rejected, and the hearing has been allowed to proceed, there is nothing to prevent the Court from passing a decree for the plaintiff if letters of administration are obtained before the decree (t). See Indian Succession Act, 1865, s. 190. The English law on the subject may thus be stated in the language of the Judicial Committee in Meyappa v. Subramanian (u): “An administrator derives title solely under his grant, and cannot, therefore, institute an action as administrator before he gets his grant. The law on the point is well settled: see Comyn’s Digest, ‘Administration,’ B. 9 and 10; Thompson v. Reynolds (v); Woolley v. Clark (w).”

Title of suit.—See Appendix A, “(2) Description of Parties in Particular Cases,” the last two forms. See also r. 9 (2) below.

Suit by or against an unregistered Company.—In the case of a registered company, the suit is brought in the name of the company. But where a company is not registered, all the members of the company should be made parties to the suit (x).

Suit by or against a club.—The secretary of a club cannot alone sue a member for a debt due by the member to the club. All the members must join as plaintiffs in the suit (y). If the number of members is numerous, any one of the members may sue for himself and the other members with the permission of the Court (see O. 1, r. 8). Similarly, the members of a club could not be sued through the secretary as their representative. All the members must be joined as defendants (z).

5. [S. 50, para. 5.] The plaintiff shall show that the defendant is or claims to be interested in the subject-matter, and that he is liable to be called upon to answer the plaintiff's demand.

Defendant's interest and liability to be shown.

6. [S. 50, para. 6.] Where the suit is instituted after the expiration of the period prescribed by the law of limitation, the plaintiff shall show the ground upon which exemption from such law is claimed.

Grounds of exemption from limitation law.

Grounds of exemption from limitation law.—These grounds are set forth in sections 12 to 20 of the Limitation Act, 1908. If no ground of exemption is shown in the plaint, and the suit appears from the statement in the plaint to be barred by limitation, the plaint shall be rejected [see r. 11, cl. (d) below]. But a plaint should not be rejected merely because the exemption is not claimed specifically. All that the rule requires is that the plaint should show the ground of exemption (a). If a plaintiff does not show the ground of exemption, the Court of first instance should allow the plaint to be amended save under very exceptional circumstances (b). But a plaintiff should not be allowed for the first time at the hearing of an appeal to rely upon a ground of exemption from the law of limitation (c). See Notes to O. 41, r. 2, below.

It has been held by the High Court of Bombay, that when a plaintiff does satisfy the requirements of this rule by stating what is in his opinion the ground upon which he intends to get over the bar of limitation, he ought not to be precluded from taking another and not inconsistent ground, should he be later advised that the latter is the true ground (d). The same view has been taken by the High Court of Calcutta (e).

7. [New. R. S. C., O. 20, r. 6.] Every plaintiff shall state specifically the relief which the plaintiff claims either simply or in the alternative, and it shall not be necessary to ask for general or other relief which may always be given as the Court may think just to the same extent as if it had been asked for. And the same rule shall apply to any relief claimed by the defendant in his written statement.

Relief to be specifically stated.

(e) Gangadhar v. Khaja (1909) 14 C.W. N. 128, explaining Jogeshwar Roy v. Raj Narain (1904) 31 Cal. 195.

Relief.—Every plaint must state specifically the relief which the plaintiff claims, O. 7, r. 7. whether it be damages, or specific performance, or an injunction, or a declaration, or an account, or the appointment of a receiver, or possession of land, or relief of any other kind. A plaintiff who omits, except with the leave of the Court, to sue for all the reliefs to which he may be entitled in respect of the same cause of action will not afterwards be allowed to sue for any relief so omitted [O. 2, r. 2, sub-r. (3)]. But it is not necessary to ask for general or other relief.

Where a relief is claimed upon a specific ground the Court may grant it upon a ground different from that on which it is claimed in the plaint, if the ground is disclosed by the allegations in the plaint and the evidence in the case (f). Thus in a case in which a plaintiff claimed an easement by prescription, and it was found that he was not entitled to the easement by prescription, their Lordships of the Privy Council dealing with the case as a special appeal, decreed the claim on the presumption of title arising from a grant (g).

Where a plaint asks for more than what the plaintiff is entitled to, the Court may give him only that much relief as he is entitled to; but the suit must not be dismissed (h). Where a plaint asks for less than what the plaintiff is found to be entitled to, the Court cannot give him more than what is asked for in the plaint, unless the plaint is amended before judgment. Thus if a suit is brought upon a balance of accounts or for mesne profits, and the plaintiff, instead of claiming whatever may be found due on the taking of accounts and stating an approximate amount [O. 7, r. 2], states a specific sum as the amount claimed, the Court cannot, without an amendment of the plaint [O. 6, r. 17], pass a decree for more than what is claimed (i).

General or other relief.—Under the system of pleadings hitherto followed in India, it was usual to add in the plaint a prayer for general relief called general prayer which ran thus: "The plaintiff claims such further or other relief as the nature of the case may require." Under the present rule it is no longer necessary specifically to ask for such relief. Such relief may now always be given to the same extent as if it had been asked for, provided it is not inconsistent with that specifically claimed, as well as with the case raised by the pleading (j). In order, however, to entitle a plaintiff to a relief under the claim for general relief, it is necessary that the ground for such relief must be disclosed by the allegations in the plaint (k). "A plaintiff cannot be entitled to relief upon facts or documents not stated or referred to by him in his pleadings" (l). Thus where a plaintiff sues for a declaration of title to certain property under a deed of sale he cannot be allowed to succeed on the basis of title by adverse possession (m).

With regard to the nature of the general or other relief which a plaintiff may have, the rule is that if the plaint contains allegations, offering issues on facts that are material, the plaintiff is entitled to the relief which those facts will sustain; but he cannot desert specific relief claimed, and under the claim for general relief ask specific relief of another description, unless the facts and circumstances alleged on the pleadings will, consistently with the rules of the Court, maintain that relief (n).

O. 7, r. 7.

Where a suit is brought by a reversioner against a Hindu widow (1) for an injunction restraining her from waste, (2) for appointment of a receiver, and (3) for "further relief," the plaintiff, if he fails in the substantial heads of his claim, is not entitled, under cover of a request for "further relief," to obtain a declaration that he is the next reversionary heir (o).

In a suit by a mortgagee for sale of the mortgaged property, the mortgagee may relinquish his claim for sale, and ask for a simple money decree, though such relief is not specifically claimed. This he may do under the claim for general relief. The Court has the power to grant that relief, provided the mortgage contains a personal covenant to pay the mortgage debt (p). But the Court has no power, under a claim for general relief, to grant to a pro forma plaintiff the relief claimed by the active plaintiff, if it turns out that the pro forma plaintiff, and not the active plaintiff, is entitled to the relief claimed. This may be explained by an illustration. B sells his interest in certain property in the possession of C to A. A and B then sue C to recover possession of the property. B makes no claim, and he is joined merely as a formal party to the suit. The Court finds the sale to A void as champertous (Contract Act, s. 23). Such being the case, no decree can be passed in favour of A for possession. Nor should any decree be passed in favour of B awarding possession of the property to him under the claim for general relief, though the Court may find that C is in wrongful possession of the property, and the person really entitled to the property is B. B must bring a separate suit against C to recover possession (q).

Alternative relief.—A plaintiff may rely "upon several different rights alternatively, although they may be inconsistent" (r). A pleading is not embarrassing within the meaning of O. 6, r. 16, because it contains inconsistent sets of facts (s). Thus a plaintiff may in the same suit claim to have a partnership agreement with the defendant cancelled on the ground that he was induced to enter into it by the fraud of the defendant, or, in the alternative, for a dissolution of partnership and accounts (t). Similarly, a plaintiff may sue for the cancellation of a bond on the ground that it was a forgery, or, in the alternative, that it was void for want of consideration (u). Likewise, a plaintiff may claim over the same plot of land a right of ownership, or, in the alternative, a right of easement. In such a case the plaintiff's contention amounts to this: "I believe the land is mine, but I may be unable to prove it; if I should fail to prove it, I can at any rate prove that I have been using the right of way as an easement over the land" (v).

There is nothing in law to prevent a plaintiff in a suit for pre-emption basing his claim in the alternative on contract, custom, or Mahomedan law (w); nor is there any thing to prevent him in such a suit from setting up an alternative claim for possession as owner (x).

For further information on this subject, see notes to O. 6, r. 2, under the head "Alternative and inconsistent allegations," on p. 400 above.

When Court should take notice of events happening after institution of suit.—Ordinarily the decree in a suit should accord with the rights of the parties as they stand at the date of its institution. But where it is shown that the original relief

8. [New. R. S. C., O. 20, r. 7.] Where the plaintiff seeks relief in respect of several distinct claims or causes of action founded upon separate and distinct grounds, they shall be stated as far as may be separately and distinctly.

Relief founded on separate grounds.

See notes to O. 6, r. 2, under the head "Alternative and inconsistent allegations," on p. 400 above.

9. [S. 58.] (1) The plaintiff shall endorse on the plaint, or annex thereto, a list of the documents (if any) which he has produced along with it; and, if the plaint is admitted, shall present as many copies on plain paper of the plaint as there are defendants, unless the Court by reason of the length of the plaint or the number of the defendants, or for any other sufficient reason, permits him to present a like number of concise statements of the nature of the claim made, or of the relief claimed in the suit, in which case he shall present such statements.

Procedure on admitting plaint.

Concise statements.

(2) Where the plaintiff sues, or the defendant or any of the defendants is sued, in a representative capacity, such statements shall show in what capacity the plaintiff or defendant sues or is used.

(3) The plaintiff may, by leave of the Court, amend such statements so as to make them correspond with the plaint.

(4) The chief ministerial officer of the Court shall sign such list and copies or statements if, on examination, he finds them to be correct.

Sub-rule (2): representative capacity.—It is not necessary to state in the title of the suit the representative capacity in which the plaintiff or the defendant sues or is sued, although no doubt that is a convenient place to make such a statement. It is enough if the pleading shows that the plaintiff or the defendant sues or is sued in a representative capacity (z). 10. [S. 57.] (1) The plaint shall at any stage of the suit be returned to be presented to the Court in which the suit should have been instituted.

Return of plaint.

(2) On returning a plaint the Judge shall endorse thereon the date of its presentation and return, the name of the party presenting it, and a brief statement of the reasons for returning it.

Procedure of returning
plaint.

"At any stage of the suit."—These words are new, and they have been added to give effect to the undermentioned decision (a) in which it was held that a plaint may be returned to be presented to the proper Court at any stage of the suit even after the trial has begun and concluded.

Court-fee.—Where a plaint is returned by a Court to be presented to the proper Court, the latter Court is bound to give credit for the fee levied by the former Court (b).

Chartered High Courts.—This rule does not apply to Chartered High Courts in the exercise of their ordinary or extraordinary original civil jurisdiction [O. 49, r. 3, cl. (1)].

Appeal.—An appeal lies from an order returning a plaint to be presented to the proper Court, whether the order is made by the Court of first instance [O. 43, r. 1, cl. (a)] or by the Court of first appeal in the exercise of powers conferred upon it by s. 107 (c).

A files his plaint in a District Munsif's Court. The Munsif returns the plaint for presentation to the proper Court, holding that the suit is beyond his pecuniary jurisdiction. On the plaint being presented to a Subordinate Judge's Court, it is again returned by that Court on the ground that the Munsif's Court had jurisdiction. Is A entitled to appeal to the District Court from the order of the District Munsif, having regard to the fact that he in obedience to that order filed the plaint in the Subordinate Judge's Court? No, according to a Calcutta decision, the reason given being that by electing to file the plaint in the Subordinate Judge's Court, he forfeited his right of appeal (d). Yes, according to the Madras High Court (e).

Rejection of plaint.

11. [S. 54.] The plaint shall be rejected in the following cases :—

- (a) where it does not disclose a cause of action ;
- (b) where the relief claimed is undervalued, and the plaintiff, on being required by the Court to correct the valuation within a time to be fixed by the Court, fails to do so ;

 (e) Narayanan v. Cheria (1918) 41 Mad. 721.

(c) where the relief claimed is properly valued, but the plaintiff, on being required by the Court to supply the requisite stamp-paper within a time to be fixed by the Court, fails to do so :

(d) where the suit appears from the statement in the plaint to be barred by any law.

Change of law.—Clause (a) is new. See notes below, “Clause (a).”

Chartered High Courts.—Clauses (b) and (c) of this rule do not apply to Chartered High Courts in the exercise of their ordinary or extraordinary original civil jurisdiction. See O. 49, r. 3 (1).

“Shall be rejected.”—This rule may be applied at any stage of a suit. Therefore, a plaint may be rejected under this rule even after it has been numbered and registered as a suit (f).

The provision contained in this rule that the plaint shall be rejected in the four cases mentioned in the rule is mandatory. In a case, therefore, where the relief claimed was properly valued, but the plaint was written upon paper insufficiently stamped, and the plaintiff, on being required by the Court to supply the requisite stamp-paper, failed to do so, it was held that the plaintiff should not be allowed to amend the plaint by omitting the prayer in respect of which the extra court-fee was directed to be paid and that the plaint should be rejected (g).

Rejection of plaint in part.—This rule does not justify the rejection of any particular portion of a plaint (h).

Clause (a).—Under the Code of 1882, s. 53, it was not obligatory upon the Court to reject a plaint if it did not disclose a cause of action. Under the present rule the Court is bound to reject a plaint if it does not disclose a cause of action. As to the meaning of “cause of action” see notes to s. 20, “Cause of Action,” p. 86 above.

Clause (c): Where a plaint is written upon paper insufficiently stamped.—There are three points to be noted in connection with this clause:—

1. Where a plaint is written upon paper insufficiently stamped, the Court is bound to give the plaintiff time to make good the deficiency. This follows, it is said, from the terms of cl. (c) of this rule (i).

2. If the plaintiff fails to supply the requisite stamp-paper within the period fixed by the Court, the plaint may be rejected under this rule, even after it has been numbered and registered as a suit. The reason is that the power to reject a plaint under this rule is not exhausted when the plaint has been admitted and registered (j). See notes above under the head “Shall be rejected.”

3. A plaint is presented on the last day allowed by the law of limitation. It is written upon paper insufficiently stamped. The plaintiff is ordered to supply the requisite

O. 7; r. 11. stamp-paper within a week. The order is complied with on the fourth day after the date of presentation of the plaint. This would necessarily be after the expiration of the period of limitation prescribed for the institution of the suit. Can the plaint be admitted under these circumstances? Under this Code it can be [see s. 149]. Under the Code of 1882 there was a conflict of decisions on the point. It was held by the High Courts of Calcutta (k), Madras (l), and Bombay (m), that the Court had power to admit the plaint in the circumstances mentioned above, while it was held by the Allahabad High Court that the Court had no such power (n). The view taken by the Calcutta, Madras and Bombay High Courts was that the Court had power under s. 54 of that Code, at any time and without any regard to limitation, to fix a time within which the requisite stamp-paper should be supplied, and if the stamp was made good within the period fixed by the Court, the suit was to be deemed to be instituted when the plaint was first presented and not when the requisite stamp-paper was supplied. On the other hand, the view taken by the Allahabad High Court was that, though the Court had the power to give time to a plaintiff within which to supply the requisite stamp-paper, it must be a time within limitation, and that s. 54 did not give any power to the Court to extend the period of limitation. This conflict has now been set at rest by the provisions of s. 149 of this Code. That section gives effect to the Calcutta, Madras and Bombay decisions. It empowers the Court at any stage to allow a plaintiff to make up the deficiency of court-fees, and provides in effect that when the deficiency has been made up, the plaint is as valid as if it had been properly stamped when presented. It follows from the provisions of s. 149 that where a plaint written upon paper insufficiently stamped is presented to the Court on the last day allowed by the law of limitation, and the Judge to whom the plaint is presented directs extra court-fee to be paid but fixes no time for payment, and the plaintiff pays the extra court-fee though it be after the expiration of the period of limitation and the Court accepts it, the plaint should be treated as if the full fee had been paid in the first instance, and the suit cannot be held to be barred by limitation (o).

The procedure prescribed by the present rule is not applicable to a case in which an appellate Court acts under s. 12 of the Court-Fees Act, 1870 (p). Compare O. 21, r. 17, sub-r. (2).

Memorandum of appeal insufficiently stamped—See notes to s. 149 “Appeals and Applications for review of judgment,” p. 222 above.

Clause (d):—Suit barred by any law—Where a suit appears from statements in the plaint to be barred by the law of limitation, but the plaint is not rejected when presented, the Court may in a proper case allow the plaint to be amended at the hearing (q). Where a suit is brought against the Secretary of State without giving the notice required by s. 80, the plaint should be rejected under this clause (r).

Enlargement of time.—The Court may enlarge the time fixed under cls. (b) and (c). See s. 148.

Appeal.—An order rejecting a plaint is a decree [s. 2 (2)] and appealable as such (s). It has been held by the High Court of Patna that an order rejecting a plaint is Revision.—It has been held by the Chief Court of the Punjab that an order directing a plaintiff to make up the deficiency in Court-fee is not open to revision. The reason given is that if the plaintiff feeling that the order is wrong does not comply with it, it will under this rule result in the rejection of his plaint from which he has a right of appeal, an order rejecting a plaint being appealable as a decree (u). See notes above "Appeal."

Procedure on rejecting memorandum of appeal.—The same procedure is to be followed when a memorandum of appeal is rejected (v).

13. [S. 56.] The rejection of the plaint on any of the grounds hereinbefore mentioned shall not of its own force preclude the plaintiff from presenting a fresh plaint in respect of the same cause of action.

tion of fresh plaint.

14. [S. 59.] (1) Where a plaintiff sues upon a document in his possession or power, he shall produce it in Court when the plaint is presented, and shall at the same time deliver the document or a copy thereof to be filed with the plaint.

Production of document on which plaintiff sues.

(2) Where he relies on any other documents (whether in his possession or power or not) as evidence in support of his claim, he shall enter such documents in a list to be added or annexed to the plaint.

List of other documents.

Production of documents relied upon.—A horoscope does not require to be entered in the list of documents mentioned in sub-r. (2). The reason is that it is not a document to be relied upon as a probative document in itself, but it is a record made by the maker of the horoscope to which he is entitled to refer for the purpose of refreshing his memory in the witness-box (w).

17. [S. 62.] (1) Save in so far as is otherwise provided by the Bankers' Books Evidence Act, 1891, where the document on which the plaintiff sues is an entry in a shop-book or other account, in his possession or power, the plaintiff shall produce the book or account at the time of filing the plaint, together with a copy of the entry on which he relies.

Production of shopbook.

(2) The Court, or such officer as it appoints in this behalf, shall forthwith mark the document for the purpose of identification; and, after examining and comparing the copy with the original, shall, if it is found correct, certify it to be so, and return the book to the plaintiff and cause the copy to be filed.

Original entry to be marked and returned.

Bankers' Books Evidence Act 18 of 1891.—This act provides a special mode of proof of entries in bankers' books by dispensing with the production of the books. S. 4 of the Act provides that a certified copy of any entry in a banker's book is to be received as prima facie evidence of the existence of such entry, and that it should be admitted as evidence of the matter contained therein to the same extent as the original entry.

plaint is presented, or to be entered in the list to be added or annexed to the plaintiff, and which is not produced or entered accordingly, shall not, without the leave of the Court, be received in evidence on his behalf at the hearing of the suit.

(2) Nothing in this rule applies to documents produced for cross-examination of the defendant's witnesses, or in answer to any case set up by the defendant or handed to a witness merely to refresh his memory.

In what cases leave may be granted under this rule.—The object of the rule is to provide against false documents being set up after the institution of a suit. In those cases, therefore, where there is no doubt of the existence of a document at the date of the suit, the Court should admit the document in evidence even though the document was not produced with the plaint or entered in the list of documents annexed to the plaint (y).

ORDER VIII.

Written Statement and Set-off.

1. [S. 110.] The defendant may, and, if so required by the Court, shall, at or before the first hearing or within such time as the Court may permit, present a written statement of his defence.

Written statement.—The written statement must contain, and contain only, a statement in a concise form of the material facts on which the party pleading relies for his defence, but not the evidence by which those facts are to be proved (O. 6, r. 2). A defendant may, by his written statement, raise as many distinct and separate, and therefore inconsistent, defences as he may think proper, subject only to the provision contained in O. 6, r. 16, as to striking out embarrassing matters (z). A written statement is not embarrassing within the meaning of O. 6, r. 16, merely because it sets up inconsistent defences (a). But where the defendant relies upon several distinct grounds of defence they must be stated separately and distinctly (r. 7 below).

2. [New. R. S. C., O. 19, r. 15.] The defendant must Fraud.—See notes to O. 6, r. 4. “Fraud and coercion” on p. 402 above.

Facts showing illegality.—See notes to O. 6, r. 8, on p. 409 above.

3. [New. R. S. C., O. 19, r. 17.] It shall not be suffi-Denial to be specific. cient for a defendant in his written statement to deny generally the grounds alleged by the plaintiff, but the defendant must deal specifically with each allegation of fact of which he does not admit the truth, except damages.

“Deal specifically with each allegation of fact.”—The defendant must take each fact which is alleged against him separately, and say that he admits it, or denies it, or does not admit it. “It is not merely denial which is meant, but the rule covers non-admission, for [the defendant] is to deal specifically with every allegation of fact of which he does not admit the truth” (b). Every allegation of fact in the plaint will be taken to be admitted if it is not denied specifically or by necessary implication or stated to be not admitted (r. 5).

A defendant ought not to deny, by his written statement, plain and acknowledged facts which it is neither to his interest nor in his power to disprove (c); nor should a defendant plead to any matter which is not alleged against him (d). See notes to
 O. 6, r. 2, under the head “Facts not yet material to a case,” on p. 398 above.

“Except damages.”—It is not necessary for a defendant, in a suit for damages, to deny specifically the damages; it is quite sufficient if he pleads generally to the damages (e). See notes to O. 6, r. 2, “Matters affecting damages,” on p. 397 above.

4. [New. R. S. C., O. 19, r. 19.] Where a defendant
 Evasive denial. denies an allegation of fact in the plaint, he must not do so evasively, but answer the point of substance. Thus, if it is alleged that he received a certain sum of money, it shall not be sufficient to deny that he received that particular amount, but he must deny that he received that sum or any part thereof or else set out how much he received. And if an allegation is made with divers circumstances, it shall not be sufficient to deny it along with those circumstances.

Evasive denial.—Where the plaintiff sets up an agreement, and “the defendant denies that the terms of the agreement between himself and the plaintiff were definitely agreed upon as alleged,” the denial is evasive. “He [defendant] is bound to deny that any agreement or any terms of arrangement were ever come to if that is what he means; if he does not mean that, he should say that there were no terms of arrangement come to, except the following terms, and then state what the terms were; otherwise there is no specific denial at all" (f). Similarly, where the plaintiff alleges that "the defendant offered to the plaintiff's agent a bribe of Rs. 500 on 17th July, 1908, at the defendant's office," it is an evasive traverse for the defendant to plead "the defendant did not offer to the plaintiff's agent a bribe of Rs. 500 on 17th July, 1908, at his office;" for the defendant might have offered any other sum on another day and in another place. Here the point of substance is that a bribe was offered. The details as to the amount, time and place are only circumstances. The defendant should plead that he never offered a bribe of Rs. 500 or any other sum (g). Where a denial is evasive, leave to amend may be given under O. 6, r. 17, unless the Court is satisfied that the defendant was acting malâ fide (h).

O. 8,
rr. 4, 5.

5. [New. R. S. C., O. 19, r. 13.] Every allegation of fact in the plaint, if not denied specifically or by necessary implication, or stated to be not admitted in the pleading of the defendant, shall be taken to be admitted except as against a person under disability:

Specific denial.

Provided that the Court may in its discretion require any fact so admitted to be proved otherwise than by such admission.

Admissions of fact in pleadings.—The first paragraph of this rule states what amounts to admissions of fact in a pleading. Rule 3 requires that the defendant must deal specifically with each allegation of fact of which he does not admit the truth. The present rule provides that every allegation of fact in the plaint, if not denied in the written statement, shall be taken to be admitted by the defendant (i). It is not sufficient for the defendant to say that he "does not admit the correctness of the allegations in the plaint;" he ought to state in what respect he disputes them. If he simply says he does not admit them, he will be taken to have admitted them within the meaning of this rule (j). Similarly, where a defendant simply "puts the plaintiff to proof of the several allegations in the plaint," he will be deemed to have admitted the facts alleged in the plaint (k). Where in a suit for the recovery of money the plaintiff relies in his plaint upon a letter written by the defendant to save the bar of limitation, and all that the defendant says in his written statement as to the letter is, "the suit is not saved by the letter put in from the bar of limitation," the letter must be taken as admitted and it need not be proved by the plaintiff (l).

A plaintiff who claims a decree must prove all the material facts on which he relies in support of his claim. The importance of the present rule lies in this that, since facts that have been admitted need not be proved, it is not necessary for the plaintiff to prove facts which have been expressly admitted by the defendant or which must be taken to have been admitted by him within the meaning of this rule (see Evidence Act, 1872, s. 58). The admission itself being a proof, no other proof is necessary. In the case, however, of facts which may be taken to be admitted by the defendant within th meaning of this rule, the Court may in its discretion require any facts so admitted to be proved otherwise than by such admission. That is to say, the Court may require the plaintiff to adduce such proof of the fact as it would have been necessary for him to adduce if no such admission had been made. This power which has been conferred upon the Court by the proviso to the rule is not new. The matter, it will be seen, is one of evidence, and a similar power is contained in the Indian Evidence Act I of 1872. The proviso to the rule, in fact, is a reproduction of the proviso to section 58 of the Evidence Act which runs as follows :—

“ No fact need be proved in any proceeding which the parties thereto or their agents agree to admit at the hearing, or which, before the hearing, they agree to admit by any writing under their hands, or which by any rule of pleading in force at the time, they are deemed to have admitted by their pleadings: Provided that the Court may, in its discretion, require the facts admitted to be proved otherwise than by such admissions.”

The proviso to section 58 as well as the proviso to the present rule indicates the intention of the Legislature that pleadings in India ought not to be construed with the same strictness as in England. Upon this principle, the defendant has been allowed under special circumstances to traverse at the hearing allegations in the plaint which he had omitted to traverse in his written statement (m). The rule of pleadings in England is very stringent. According to that rule a defendant who omits to traverse in his defence any allegation of fact in the statement of claim is not allowed to traverse that fact at the hearing. The fact will be taken to be admitted by him, and the Court has no power to require the plaintiff to prove it in any case. Strike out the proviso to the present rule, and you have the rule of English law. In fact, the first paragraph of this rule is a reproduction of O. 19, r. 13, of the English Rules made under the Judicature Acts. The proviso has been added to modify the rigour of that rule.

But though pleadings in India are not to be construed as strictly as in England, neither party will be allowed to set up at the hearing an entirely new and inconsistent case. The plaintiff must be held to the state of facts alleged in his plaint or consistent therewith (n). Similarly, the defendant must be held to the state of facts alleged in his written statement or consistent therewith (o).

Omission to file written statement.—This rule applies only where a pleading has been put in by the defendant. Omission to file a written statement does not amount to an admission of the facts stated in the plaint (p).

6. [S. III.] (1) Where in a suit for the recovery of money the defendant claims to set off against the plaintiff's demand any ascertained sum of money legally recoverable by him from the plaintiff, not exceeding the pecuniary limits of the jurisdiction of the Court, and both parties fill the same character as they fill in the plaintiff's suit, the defendant may, at the first hearing of the suit, but not afterwards unless permitted by the Court, present a

(2) The written statement shall have the same effect as a plaint in a cross-suit so as to enable the Court to pronounce a final judgment in respect both of the original claim and of the set-off: but this shall not affect the lien, upon the amount decreed, of any pleader in respect of the costs payable to him under the decree.

Effect of set-off.

(3) The rules relating to a written statement by a defendant apply to a written statement in answer to a claim of set-off.

Illustrations.

(a) A bequeaths Rs. 2,000 to B and appoints C his executor and residuary legatee. B dies and D takes out administration to B's effects. C pays Rs. 1,000 as surety for D; then D sues C for the legacy. C cannot set off the debt of Rs. 1,000 against the legacy, for neither C nor D fills the same character with respect to the legacy as they fill with respect to the payment of the Rs. 1,000.

(b) A dies intestate and in debt to B. C takes out administration to A's effects and B buys part of the effects from C. In a suit for the purchase-money by C against B, the latter cannot set off the debt against the price, for C fills two different characters, one as the vendor to B, in which he sues B, and the other as representative to A.

(c) A sues B on a bill of exchange. B alleges that A has wrongfully neglected to insure B's goods and is liable to him in compensation which he claims to set off. The amount not being ascertained cannot be set off.

(d) A sues B on a bill of exchange for Rs. 500. B holds a judgment against A for Rs. 1,000. The two claims being both definite pecuniary demands may be set off.

(e) A sues B for compensation on account of trespass. B holds a promissory note for Rs. 1,000 from A and claims to set off that amount against any sum that A may recover in the suit. B may do so, for, as soon as A recovers, both sums are definite pecuniary demands.

(f) A and B sue C for Rs. 1,000. C cannot set off a debt due to him by A alone.

(g) A sues B and C for Rs. 1,000. B cannot set off a debt due to him alone by A.

(h) A owes the partnership firm of B and C Rs. 1,000. B dies, leaving C surviving. A sues C for a debt of Rs. 1,500 due in his separate character. C may set off the debt of Rs. 1,000.

Sub-rule (3).—This sub-rule is new. See r. 9.

A defendant may claim a set-off under this rule under the following conditions only :—

I. The suit must be one for the recovery of money.

II. As regards the amount claimed to be set off—

(a) it must be an ascertained sum of money [see illa. (c), (d), and (e), to the rule] which is legally recoverable;

- O. 8, r. 6.
- (b) it must be recoverable by the defendant or by all the defendants if more than one [see ill. (g)];
 - (c) it must be recoverable by the defendant from the plaintiff or all the plaintiffs if more than one [see ill. (f)];
 - (d) it must not exceed the pecuniary limits of the jurisdiction of the Court in which the suit is brought; and
 - (e) both parties must fill, in the defendant's claim to set-off, the same character as they fill in the plaintiff's suit [see ills. (a), (b), and (h)].^{*}

The suit must be one for the recovery of money.—In Nan Karay Ko Htaw (g), their Lordships of the Privy Council observed that it was doubtful whether a suit for an account was a suit for money. In a subsequent Allahabad case, it was held that a suit for dissolution of partnership with a prayer that such balance as might be found due to the plaintiff upon taking the partnership accounts might be paid to him was a suit for money, and that a plea of set-off might therefore be raised by the defendant in such a suit (r).

The amount claimed to be set off must be an ascertained sum of money, and not damages undetermined.—With this read ills. (c), (d), and (e) to the rule. In ills. (d) and (e) the claim is an ascertained sum; not so in ill. (c) where the amount proposed to be set off is for unliquidated damages. In the case mentioned in ill. (c) the defendant may bring a cross-suit against the plaintiff. In ill. (d) the amount proposed to be set off by B is the amount of a decree, and this may be set off against A's claim, though B may not have taken any steps to enforce the decree (s).

A, a clerk, sues B, his employer, for arrears of wages due to him. B alleges that A left his employment without notice and A is therefore liable to pay him damages which he claims to set off. The amount not being ascertained cannot be set off (t).

Equitable set-off.—We now proceed to consider cases in which the defendant may be allowed to set off even an unascertained sum which sounds in damages. Those are cases where the cross-demands arise out of one and the same transaction, or are so connected in their nature and circumstances that they can be looked upon as part of one transaction. In such cases Courts of Equity in England have held that it would be inequitable to drive the defendant to a separate cross-suit, and that he might be allowed to plead a set-off though the amount may be unascertained. Such a set-off is called an equitable set-off, as it is allowed by Courts of Equity as distinguished from a legal set-off which is allowed at common law in respect only of an ascertained sum. It will thus be seen that the present rule is restricted to a legal set-off, for it requires that the amount to be set off shall be an ascertained sum. The question therefore arises whether an equitable set-off can be pleaded in Indian Courts, that is to say, if the defendant's claim is for an unascertained sum, but has arisen from the same transaction as the plaintiff's claim, can the defendant set off such demand against the plaintiff's claim? It has been held that he can do so, not under the provisions of the present rule which is limited to a legal set-off, but in the exercise of the general right of a defendant to plead a set-off whether legal or equitable (u). The provisions of the Code regulate procedure only, and they have not the effect of taking away any right of set-off which a defendant may have independently of its

1. A sues B to recover Rs. 6,000 due under a contract. B admits A's claim, but claims to set off several sums of money alleged to be damages sustained by him by reason of A's breach of some of the terms of the same contract. B is entitled to claim the set-off, for the claim arises from the same transaction: Kistnasamy v. Municipal Commissioner for Madras (1868) 4 Mad. H. C. 120; Pragi Lal v. Maxwell (1885) 7 All. 284.

2. A agrees to sell, and B agrees to purchase, 200 bales of wool. B takes delivery of 170 bales, and is ready and willing to take delivery of the rest, but A fails to deliver them. A sues B for the price of the 170 bales. B claims to set off the damages sustained by him by reason of A's failure to deliver the remaining bales. B is entitled to claim the set-off, as the claim arises out of the same transaction: Kishorchand v. Madhowji (1880) 4 Bom. 407; Niaz v. Durga (1893) 15 All. 9; Nand Ram v. Ram Prasad (1905) 27 All. 145.

3. A sues B, his master, for Rs. 800 being arrears of salary. B claims to set off Rs. 625, being the loss sustained by him by reason of neglect and misconduct on the part of A as his servant. B is entitled to claim the set-off, as his claim arises out of the same relation from which A's claim arose, namely, that of master and servant: Chisholm v. Gopal Chander (1889) 16 Cal. 711. Contrast (1917) 39 All. 362.

4. A (mortgagee) sues B (mortgagor) to recover the principal and interest due on a usufructuary mortgage. B claims to set off the loss alleged to have been occasioned by A's failure as mortgagee in possession to make repairs to the mortgaged property. B is entitled to claim the set-off: Shiva v. Jaru (1892) 15 Mad. 290.

5. A washerman sues his employer for his wages. The employer may set off the value of articles short returned to him against the wages: Maiden v. Bhundu (1910) Punj. Rec. no. 77, p. 226.

The amount claimed to be set off must be "legally" recoverable.—The words "legally recoverable" clearly show that a time-barred claim cannot be set up by way of set-off under this rule (x). But this rule provides only for the case of legal set-off, and it remains to consider whether a claim by way of equitable set-off can be allowed if it is barred by limitation at the date of the suit. It has been laid down that in cases where the plaintiff's claim and the defendant's claim relate both to the same property or estate, the defendant's claim to set-off, though barred by limitation, may be entertained as an equitable set-off. It has thus been held that in a suit by an heir against his co-heirs for his one-sixth share of the estate of the deceased, the latter are entitled to set off one-sixth of the Government revenue paid by them in respect of the estate, though a separate suit by them to recover from the plaintiff the proportionate part of the revenue payable by him would be barred by limitation (y). Similarly in mortgage suits sums are allowed to be set off in taking accounts of the mortgage even though barred by limitation (z). Upon the same principle it has been held that a trustee in possession of the trust estate is entitled to set up his right to be indemnified out of

D. 8, r. 6. the trust estate when called upon for an account, although his right to sue for the amount claimed by him by way of indemnity is barred by limitation (a). In a recent case (b), the High Court of Madras held that in a suit by a lessor for rent, it is not open to the lessee to set up by way of equitable set-off an unliquidated claim for damages which was barred at the date of the suit. Seshagiri Ayyar, J., said: "An exception to this rule [namely, that a time-barred claim cannot be pleaded by way of set-off] has been recognized in some cases. Where there is a fiduciary relationship between the parties as in the case of trustee and cestui que trust and there is accountability, even barred claims may be taken into account in passing the final accounts. This exception has been extended in some of the decided cases in India to mortgages, presumably on the ground that there is accountability between the parties. See Parasurama Pattar v. Venkatachallam Pattar (c), Chidambara Mudalar v. Krishnaswami Pillai (d), and Ramdhari Singh v. Permanund Singh (e). It is not necessary to say now whether these cases have been rightly decided. I see no reason for extending the exception to suits between a lessor and a lessee." In a later Madras case (f) an agent sued his principal to recover a sum of money that might be found due to him on the taking of agency accounts. The defendant pleaded in his written statement that money would be found due to him on taking accounts and he asked for a decree for such sum as might be found due to him. The defendant's claim was not barred at the date of the suit, but it was barred at the date of the written statement. It was held that the defendant's claim should be allowed as an equitable set-off to the extent of the plaintiff's claim, but that the defendant was not entitled to a decree for the balance found due to him as his claim was barred at the date of the written statement. To pass a decree for the balance would be, it was said, to enable the defendant to evade the law of limitation. In an Allahabad case (g) it was stated by Oldfield, J., that the claim for the balance should be allowed, but the other learned Judges in that case expressly differed on the ground that although a set-off could be admitted as an equitable protection to the defendant against his being cast in the plaintiff's suit, it could not be allowed in order to obtain a decree in his favour. See notes to O. 20, r. 19, "Decree in case of set-off."

Costs awarded to a tenant in a suit brought against him by the benamidar of the landlord cannot be set off by the tenant in a subsequent suit for rent brought against him by the landlord. The costs having been awarded against the benamidar, they are not legally recoverable from the landlord (h).

A separate debt cannot be set off against a joint and several debt.—Thus in ill. (g), B cannot set off the debt due to him alone by A, for it is a separate debt, while the suit is to recover a joint and several debt. It has similarly been held that in a suit by a company against its directors, no individual director is entitled to set off the amount due to him alone from the company (i).

The amount claimed to be set off must not exceed the pecuniary limits of the jurisdiction of the Court in which the suit is brought.—A sues B in a Presidency Small Cause Court for Rs. 1,000. B claims to set off a sum of Rs. 2,700, and claims judgment for Rs. 1,700. The Small Cause Court has no jurisdiction to try the question of set-off, the value being above Rs. 2,000 (j).

Not only the amount, but also the nature of the set-off, must be within the cognizance of the Court in which the suit is brought. Hence a Court cannot entertain a claim to a set-off unless such claim, if made the subject of a suit, would fall within its jurisdiction (k).

Same character.—Ills. (a) and (b) are cases in which the parties do not fill the same character (l).

A suit is brought by a Hindu son as the heir and representative of his father to recover from B certain debt due to the father. B claims to set off a debt due to him by A's father. B may do so, for both the parties fill the same character as they fill in the plaintiff's suit (m). Similarly in a suit by A against B for an account for goods supplied by A to B, B may claim a set-off of the amount due to him from A in respect of wages as A's gumasta (n).

Stamp.—A written statement containing a claim of set-off must be regarded as a plaint in regard to such set-off, and must be stamped accordingly (o).

Set off in winding-up proceedings—Though a director has no right to set off a debt due to him from the company against a claim made against him by the liquidator under s. 214 of the Indian Companies Act, 1882 [Ind. Cos. Act, 1913, s. 235] which provides a summary remedy (p), he is entitled to set off the amount due to him when a regular suit is brought against him by the company in respect of that claim (q). In a suit by a liquidator against a debtor of the company, the debtor is entitled to set off the amount of a fixed deposit made by him with the company provided the deposit had matured at the date of the suit, though it had not matured at the date of the order for winding up the company (r).

Set-off in insolvency.—See Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, 1909, s. 47 (s) and Provincial Insolvency Act, 1907, s. 30.

Solicitor's lien for costs.—A solicitor has at common law a lien for his costs on any funds or sum of money recovered for, or which became payable to, his client in the suit (t), including costs ordered to be paid to his client (u). He is also entitled to a lien on immoveable property recovered for his client in the suit (v).

Appeal.—Unless the whole suit is disposed of, an appeal does not lie from an order disposing of a defendant's claim as to set-off made under this rule, though the question as to that claim may have been tried as a preliminary issue. Such an order is not a preliminary decree. See O. 20, r. 19, which shows that there should be only one decree drawn up in a suit in which a set-off is claimed (w).

Res judicata.—A defendant is under no obligation to claim a set-off. His omission, therefore, to do so does not preclude him from bringing a separate suit in respect thereof (x).

O. 8,
rr. 7-10.

7. [New. R. S. C., O. 20, r. 7.] Where the defendant relies upon several distinct grounds of defence or set-off founded upon separate and distinct facts, they shall be stated as far as may be, separately and distinctly.

Defence or set-off founded on separate grounds.

See notes to rule 1 above. Compare O. 7, r. 8.

8. [New.] Any ground of defence which has arisen after the institution of the suit or the presentation of a written statement claiming a set-off may be raised by the defendant or plaintiff, as the case may be, in his written statement.

New ground of defence.

See r. 9 below.

9. [S. 112.] No pleading subsequent to the written statement of a defendant other than by way of defence to a set-off shall be presented except by the leave of the Court and upon such terms as the Court thinks fit, but the Court may at any time require a written statement or additional written statement from any of the parties and fix a time for presenting the same.

Subsequent pleadings.

Additional written statement.—The additional written statement should not set up a totally new case, or state facts at direct variance with the original written statement so as completely to change the issue in the case (y). See O. 6, r. 7 and notes thereto on p. 407 above.

10. [S. 113.] Where any party from whom a written statement is so required fails to present the same within the time fixed by the Court, the Court may pronounce judgment against him or make such order in relation to the suit as it thinks fit.

Procedure when party fails to present written statement called for by Court.

Appeal.—An appeal lies from an order under this rule pronouncing judgment against a party [O. 43, r. 1, cl. (b)].

ORDER IX.

Appearance of Parties and Consequence of Non-appearance.

O. 9, r. 1.

1. [S. 96.] On the day fixed in the summons for the defendant to appear and answer, the parties shall be in attendance at the Court-house in person or by their respective pleaders,

Parties to appear on day fixed in summons for defendant to appear and answer.

and the suit shall then be heard unless the hearing is adjourned to a future day fixed by the Court.

O. 9,
rr. 1, 4.

2. [S. 97.] Where on the day so fixed it is found that the summons has not been served upon the defendant in consequence of the failure of the plaintiff to pay the Court-fee or postal charges (if any) chargeable for such service, the Court may make an order that the suit be dismissed :

Dismissal of suit where summons not served in consequence of plaintiff's failure to pay costs.

Provided that no such order shall be made although the summons has not been served upon the defendant, if on the day fixed for him to appear and answer he attends in person or by agent when he is allowed to appear by agent.

Defendant.—The expression “defendant” in this rule does not include the guardian ad litem of a minor defendant (z).

Appeal.—The order of dismissal under this rule is a form of dismissal for default. It is not a decree [s. 2, (2)], and no appeal lies from it. The plaintiff's remedy is under r. 4 of this Order (a).

3. [S. 98.] Where neither party appears when the suit is called on for hearing, the Court may make an order that the suit be dismissed.

Where neither party appears, suit to be dismissed.

Where neither party appears.—If the plaintiff appears on the date fixed for the hearing, but the defendant does not appear, and the suit is dismissed owing to failure on the part of the plaintiff to adduce evidence in support of his claim, the dismissal is on the merits and not under this rule (b).

“May make an order that the suit be dismissed.”—These words have been substituted for the words “the suit shall be dismissed” [Code of 1882, s. 98] to make it clear that the dismissal under this rule is not a decree, but an order. See s. 2, cl (2).

4. [S. 99.] Where a suit is dismissed under rule 2 or rule 3, the plaintiff may (subject to the law of limitation) bring a fresh suit, or he may apply for an order to set the dismissal aside, and if he satisfies the Court that there was sufficient cause for his not paying the Court-fee and postal charges (if any) required within the time fixed before the issue of the summons, or for his non-appearance, as the case may be.

Plaintiff may bring fresh suit or Court may restore suit to file.

O. 9, the Court shall make an order setting aside the dismissal
rr. 4, 5. and shall appoint a day for proceeding with the suit.

Sufficient excuse for plaintiff's non-appearance.—A bonâ fide mistake which is not unreasonable is a sufficient excuse within the meaning of this rule (c).

5. [S. 99 A.] (1) Where, after a summons has been issued to the defendant, or to one of several defendants, and returned unserved, the plaintiff fails for a period of one year from the date of the return made to the Court by the officer ordinarily certifying to the Court returns made by the serving officers, to apply for the issue of a fresh summons and to satisfy the Court that he has used his best endeavours to discover the residence of the defendant who has not been served, or that such defendant is avoiding service of process, the Court may make an order that the suit be dismissed as against such defendant.

Dismissal of suit where plaintiff, after summons returned unserved, fails for a year to apply for fresh summons.

(2) In such case the plaintiff may (subject to the law of limitation) bring a fresh suit.

Period of one year from date of return.—The period of one year is to be calculated from the date of the return made to the Court by the officer ordinarily certifying to the Court returns made by the serving officers. The italicized words are new. In the absence of these words in the corresponding section of the Code of 1882, the question arose whether the period of one year was to be calculated from the date of the return made by the serving officer, or from the date of return made by the officer whose duty it is to certify to the Court returns made by the serving officer. It was held that the period was to be calculated from the date of return made by the latter officer, and not that made by the serving officer (d). The words italicized above have been added into the present rule to give effect to that decision. The procedure is this: after the writ of summons is issued, it is delivered by the Court to the proper officer for service on the defendant. The officer then delivers the summons to the bailiff (serving officer) whose duty it is to serve it on the defendant. After effecting service, the bailiff has to endorse on the original summons a "return" stating the manner in which the summons was served. If, for any reason, the summons cannot be served upon the defendant, the bailiff has to make a return to that effect. This "return" is then countersigned by the officer to whom the summons was delivered by the Court, and the summons is then returned by the officer to the Court. It is from the date of the countersignature that the period of one year is to be calculated and not from the date of the return made by the bailiff.

"Make an order that the suit be dismissed."—These words have been substituted for the words "may dismiss the suit" [Code of 1882, s. 99 A] to make it clear that a dismissal under this rule is not a decree, but an order. See s. 2, cl. (2).

6. [S. 100.] (1) Where the plaintiff appears and the defendant does not appear when the suit is called on for hearing then— O. 9, r. 6.

Procedure when only plaintiff appears.

When summons duly served.

(a) if it is proved that the summons was duly served, the Court may proceed ex parte;

When summons not duly served.

(b) if it is not proved that the summons was duly served, the Court shall direct a second summons to be issued and served on the defendant;

When summons served but not in due time.

(c) if it is proved that the summons was served on the defendant, but not in sufficient time to enable him to appear and answer on the day fixed in the summons, the Court shall postpone the hearing of the suit to a future day to be fixed by the Court, and shall direct notice of such day to be given to the defendant.

(2) Where it is owing to the plaintiff's default that the summons was not duly served or was not served in sufficient time, the Court shall order the plaintiff to pay the costs occasioned by the postponement.

Ex parte decree.—If the defendant does not appear, and it is proved that the summons was duly served upon him, the Court may proceed ex parte, that is to say, it may proceed to hear the plaintiff's case in the absence of the defendant. If the plaintiff makes out a prima facie case, the Court may pass a decree for the plaintiff. A decree passed against a defendant on his failure to appear at the hearing is called an ex parte decree. If the plaintiff fails to make out a prima facie case, the Court may dismiss the plaintiff's suit. "Every Judge in dealing with an ex parte case should take good care to see that the plaintiff's case is at least prima facie proved." The mere absence of the defendant does not of itself justify the presumption that the plaintiff's case is true (c). The Court has no jurisdiction to pass an ex parte decree without any evidence being given by or on behalf of the plaintiff (f). It need hardly be stated that there is no power in the Court to pass an ex parte decree before the returnable date mentioned in the summons (g).

Does not appear.—As to the meaning of the word "appear," see notes to r. 9 under the head "Meaning of Appearance," on p. 451 below.

Procedure where defendant appears on day of adjourned hearing and assigns good cause for previous non-appearance.

Where the Court has adjourned the hearing of the suit ex parte, and the defendant, at or before such hearing, appears and assigns good cause for his previous non-appearance, he may, upon such terms as the Court directs as to costs or otherwise, be heard in answer to the suit as if he had appeared on the day fixed for his appearance.

8. [S. 102.]

Procedure where defendant only appears.

Where the defendant appears and the plaintiff does not appear when the suit is called on for hearing, the Court shall make an order that the suit be dismissed unless the defendant admits the claim, or part thereof, in which case the Court shall pass a decree against the defendant upon such admission, and, where part only of the claim has been admitted, shall dismiss the suit so far as it relates to the remainder.

Non-appearance of parties.—If neither party appears on the day fixed for the hearing of the suit, the procedure laid down in r. 3 is to be followed. If the plaintiff appears and the defendant does not appear, the procedure laid down in r. 6 is to be followed. If the defendant appears and the plaintiff does not appear, the procedure laid down in the present rule is to be followed. All that a defendant is entitled to under this rule is to have the plaintiff's suit dismissed. He is not entitled to call any evidence, even though it be to disprove charges of fraud or the like that may have been made against him in the plaint (h).

If the plaintiff does not appear.—See notes to r. 9, "Meaning of Appearance," on p. 451 below. This rule does not apply to the case of non-appearance by reason of death. Where a sole plaintiff dies before the hearing of a suit, and the suit is dismissed for non-appearance under this rule, the fact of his death not being known to the Court, there is inherent jurisdiction in the Court under s. 151 to set aside the dismissal, and thus rectify the mistake which has been inadvertently made. It is then for the legal representative of the plaintiff to apply to be brought on the record under O. 22, r. 3 (i).

Remedies of plaintiff on dismissal of suit under this rule.—See notes to r. 9 under the same head, on p. 451 below.

"The Court shall make an order that the suit be dismissed."—These words have been substituted for the words "the Court shall dismiss the suit" [Code of 1882, s. 102]. An order of dismissal under this rule for default of plaintiff's appearance is not a decree, and is not therefore appealable. See s. 2, cl. (2), sub-cl. (b), and notes under the head "Order of dismissal for default," on p. 8 above.

9. [S. 103.]

Decree against plaintiff by default bars fresh suit.

(1) Where a suit is wholly or partly dismissed under rule 8, the plaintiff shall be precluded from bringing a fresh suit in respect of the same cause of action. But he may apply for an order to set the dismissal aside, and if he satisfies the Court that there was sufficient cause for his non-appearance when the suit was called on for hearing, the Court shall make an order setting aside the dismissal upon such terms as to costs or otherwise as it thinks fit, and shall appoint a day for proceeding with the suit. O. 9, r. 9.

(2) No order shall be made under this rule unless notice of the application has been served on the opposite party.

Additions made into this rule by the Chief Court of the Punjab under s. 122.—See Appendix VII below.

Remedies of plaintiff on dismissal of suit under r. 8.—A plaintiff, whose suit is dismissed under r. 8 for default of appearance on the day fixed for the hearing, cannot appeal from the order of dismissal, as such an order is not a decree [s. 2, cl. (2), sub-cl. (b)], but he may—

- (1) apply for a review of the order under O. 40, r. 1 (j); or
- (2) apply under this rule for an order to set aside the order of dismissal.

The period of limitation for an application for a review of the order is 10 days from the date of the order in the case of an order made by the Provincial Court of Small Causes, 20 days from the date of the order in the case of an order made by any of the High Courts at Calcutta, Madras and Bombay or the Chief Court of Lower Burma in the exercise of its original jurisdiction, and 90 days from the date of the order in other cases (k). The period of limitation for an application under this section is 30 days from the date of the dismissal of the suit (l).

The first remedy is open to any plaintiff whose suit has been dismissed, whatever the ground of dismissal may be, whether it is dismissed for default of appearance at the hearing or on the merits after a hearing. But the second remedy, that is, the remedy provided by this rule can only be availed of by a plaintiff who does not appear at the hearing (r. 8) and the suit is dismissed for default of appearance. The remedy given by this rule is not open to a plaintiff whose suit is dismissed on any ground other than default of appearance; thus if a plaintiff's suit is dismissed on his failure to establish his case by reason of non-attendance of his witnesses (m) or for want of evidence (n), the dismissal is not one under r. 8 for it is a dismissal for default of appearance, and he cannot therefore avail himself of the remedy provided by this rule.

There is a conflict of decisions whether if a defendant does not apply under this rule within the 30 days allowed by law, he is entitled to apply for a review under O. 47, r. 1, after the expiration of that period. The Patna High Court has held (o), following an earlier decision of the Calcutta High Court (p), that he is not; on the other hand, the Calcutta High Court has held in a later decision that he is (q). The ground of the Patna decision is that to allow a review in such a case would be an evasion of the rule of limitation.

Meaning of "appearance."—A plaintiff or a defendant will be deemed to have "appeared" on the day fixed for the hearing of the suit, if he appears—

- (1) in person, or

- (2) by a pleader either himself duly instructed and able to answer all material questions relating to the suit, or accompanied by some person able to answer such questions [O. 5, r. 1, sub-r. (2)].

First, as regards Appearance of a party in person.—The mere presence of a party in Court at the hearing is sufficient to constitute "appearance" within the meaning of this Order. It does not matter for what purpose he appears or what action he takes on the appearance. A plaintiff appearing and applying for an adjournment on the ground that his witnesses are not present will be deemed to have "appeared." If the application is refused and the suit is dismissed owing to his inability to establish his case in the absence of witnesses, the dismissal is not one under r. 8 for the plaintiff did appear, and he cannot therefore avail himself of the provisions of this rule (r). Similarly a defendant appearing and applying for an adjournment on the ground that he had no time to prepare his case, will be deemed to have "appeared." If the application is refused and a decree is passed against him owing to his unpreparedness to defend the suit, the decree is not ex parte under r. 6, for he did appear, and he cannot therefore avail himself of the provisions of r. 13 (s).

Next, as regards Appearance of a party by a pleader.—Different considerations arise when a party is not personally present in Court but is represented by a pleader. The question then is whether he has "appeared" by his pleader. Appearance by a pleader within the meaning of this Order does not, like appearance by a party in person, mean mere presence in Court: it means appearance by a pleader "duly instructed and able to answer all material questions relating to the suit" or by a pleader "accompanied by some person able to answer all such questions" [O. 5, r. 1]. Hence a party cannot be said to "appear" by a pleader, if the pleader appears at the hearing and states that though he has filed his vakalatnama, he has not received any instructions from his client with regard to the case, and that he is therefore unable to go on with the suit (t). Similarly, a party cannot be said to "appear" by a pleader if the pleader has no instructions other than to apply for an adjournment, and, on the adjournment being refused, withdraws from the suit, stating that he has no further instructions (u). In neither case can it be said that the party appeared by a pleader duly instructed and able to answer all material questions relating to the suit. But what if the party himself is also present in Court in such a case? According to the Madras (v) and Patna (w) High Courts, it makes no difference that the party himself is present in Court and he cannot be deemed to have "appeared"; according to the Bombay High Court, he must be deemed to have "appeared," the reason given being that if the pleader is not duly instructed to answer material questions, the Court may, under O. 10, r. 1, ask the party questions relating to the suit and it may examine his witnesses (x). The former view, it is submitted, is the correct one.

A pleader appears at the hearing on behalf of a plaintiff, and applies for an adjournment on the ground that he had no time to prepare himself with the case or on the ground that the papers being left with his senior, he could not proceed with the case. The application is refused, and the pleader being unable to go on with the case, the suit is dismissed. Can it be said under these circumstances that the plaintiff appeared by a pleader? It has been held in the undermentioned cases that the plaintiff must be held to have appeared by a pleader, and that the order of dismissal could not therefore be said to be one made under r. 8 so as to entitle the plaintiff to apply under this rule (y). O. 9, r. 9.

Fresh suit in respect of the same cause of action.—If the plaintiff fails to appear, and the suit is in consequence dismissed under r. 8, he is precluded from bringing a fresh suit in respect of the same cause of action. Thus if A sues B for damages for breach of a contract, and the suit is dismissed for default of A's appearance, A cannot bring a fresh suit to recover damages for breach of the same contract. A's proper remedy in such a case is either to apply for a review, or still better to apply under this rule for an order to set aside the dismissal. But if the cause of action in the subsequent suit is different from that in the first suit, the subsequent suit will not be barred under the provisions of this rule (z). Thus if A sues B for the rent of certain lands, and the suit is dismissed for default of A's appearance under r. 8, the order of dismissal will not operate as a bar to a suit by A against B for possession of the lands (a).

As to the meaning of "cause of action," see notes to s. 20 under the head "Cause of action" on p. 86 above.

Minor plaintiff.—A fresh suit, notwithstanding the provisions of this rule, may be instituted in respect of the same cause of action, where the first suit was brought by a next friend on behalf of a minor, and was dismissed under r. 8 for default of the next friend's appearance owing to gross want of care and diligence on his part (b). See notes to r. 13 below, "Ex parte decree against minor defendant", on p. 458 below.

What is sufficient cause.—What is sufficient cause is in each case a question of fact :—

(1) A plaintiff left the Court-house, believing that a part-heard case which preceded his case would occupy some time; he returned in about half an hour, and found that his suit had been called on and dismissed owing to his absence. He then applied to set aside the order of dismissal. Held, refusing the application, that the above circumstances did not amount to "sufficient cause" for non-appearance: Manilal v. Gulam Husain (1889) 13 Bom. 12.

(2) Where it was the duty of an attorney's clerk to examine every evening the board for the next day, and to inform his master what cases in which he was engaged as attorney were on the board for hearing, and the clerk, neglecting his duty, did not inform the master, and no one appearing for the plaintiff, the suit was dismissed, it was held that the absence was caused by a bona fide mistake, and the suit was restored on payment by the attorney of the costs of the hearing: The Oriental Corporation v. The Mercantile Corporation, Ltd. (1866) 2 B. H. C. 267.

Inherent power of Court to restore suit dismissed for default.—This rule does not take away the inherent power of a Court to restore a suit dismissed for default, if there be a just and reasonable cause for restoring it, even if no sufficient cause is shown within the meaning of this rule for the plaintiff's non-appearance. The same remarks apply to r. 13 of this Order and to O. 41, r. 19 (c). Thus where a case was called on at 12 o'clock, and the plaintiff's pleader being under the impression that the case would be taken up at 2 o'clock was engaged in other cases in other Courts, and the plaintiff himself was waiting in his pleader's room and neither the plaintiff nor his pleader appearing the suit was dismissed, it was held that though there was no "sufficient cause" for non-appearance within the meaning of this rule, the case was one in which the Court should in the exercise of its inherent powers restore the suit to the file (d).

Appeal.—An appeal lies from an order rejecting an application (in a case open to appeal) made under this rule [O. 43, r. 1, cl. (c)] but no appeal lies from an order granting the application (e). It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that O. 43, r. 1, cl. (c), applies also to an order rejecting an application to set aside the dismissal of a suit made by a single Judge sitting on the original side of the High Court; such an order is also a "judgment" within the meaning of cl. 15 of the Letters Patent and it is appealable under that clause also (f).

Where an application is made by a plaintiff under this rule, but the application is dismissed for default, no appeal lies from the order of dismissal (g).

Execution proceedings.—There is a conflict of decisions whether if an application for setting aside a sale in execution is dismissed for default, it can be restored under this rule, it being held in some cases that it can (h), while in others that it cannot be restored under this rule (i). According to the Patna High Court, the provisions of this Order do not at all apply to proceedings in execution (j).

Application for revival of an application for restoration of suit.—This rule provides for the revival of a suit dismissed for default. Does it apply where an application dismissed for default is sought to be revived? A suit by A against B is dismissed for A's default. A then applies under this rule for restoration and rehearing of the suit. A does not appear at the hearing of the application and the application is dismissed for A's default. Can the application be restored under this rule? Yes, according to the Calcutta High Court (k). No, according to the Patna High Court (l).

10. [S. 105.] Where there are more plaintiffs than one, and one or more of them appear, and the others do not appear, the Court may, at the instance of the plaintiff or plaintiffs appearing, permit the suit to proceed in the same way as if all the plaintiffs had appeared, or make such order as it thinks fit.

Procedure in case of non-attendance of one or more of several plaintiffs.

11. [S. 106.] Where there are more defendants than one, and one or more of them appear and the others do not appear, the suit shall proceed and the Court shall, at the time of pronouncing judgment, make such order as it thinks fit with respect to the defendants who do not appear.

Procedure in case of non-attendance of one or more of several defendants.

12. [S. 107.] Where a plaintiff or defendant, who has been ordered to appear in person, does not appear in person, or show sufficient cause to the satisfaction of the Court for failing so to appear, he shall be subject to all the provisions of the foregoing rules applicable to plaintiffs and defendants, respectively, who do not appear.

O. 9,
rr. 12, 13.

Consequence of non-attendance, without sufficient cause shown, of party ordered to appear in person.

Where parties directed to appear in person.—This rule applies to all cases where a party has been ordered to appear in person and fails to do so. This is clear from the fact that the words “under the provisions of section 66 or section 436” [now O. 5, r. 3 and O. 29, r. 3, respectively] which occurred in the corresponding s. 107 of the Code of 1882 have been omitted from the present rule (m).

Setting aside Decrees ex parte.

13. [S. 108.] In any case in which a decree is passed ex parte against a defendant, he may apply to the Court by which the decree was passed for an order to set it aside; and if he satisfies the Court that the summons was not duly served, or that he was prevented by any sufficient cause from appearing when the suit was called on for hearing the Court shall make an order setting aside the decree as against him upon such terms as to costs, payment into Court or otherwise as it thinks fit, and shall appoint a day for proceeding with the suit:

Setting aside decree ex parte against defendant.

Provided that where the decree is of such a nature that it cannot be set aside as against such defendant only it may be set aside as against all or any of the other defendants also.

Old section.—This rule corresponds with s. 108 of the Code of 1882. The words “as against him” have been added after the words “shall make an order setting aside the decree.” The proviso to the rule is also new. See as to the effect of these changes notes under the head “Proviso to the Rule,” on p. 458 below.

Remedies in case of ex parte decree.—A defendant against whom an ex parte decree has been passed under r. 6 for default of appearance at the hearing, has the following courses open to him:—

- (1) he may appeal from the ex parte decree under s. 96;
- (2) he may apply for a review of judgment under O. 40, r. 1 (n);

(3) he may apply under this rule for an order to set aside the ex parte decree, provided the application is made, in cases to which the Limitation Act, 1908, applies, within 30 days from the date of the decree, or where the summons was not duly served, when he has knowledge of the decree (o), and in cases to which the Limitation Act, 1877, applies, within 30 days from the date of executing any process for enforcing the judgment (p).

(o) Limitation Act, 1908, Sch. I., art. 164.
(p) Limitation Act, 1877, Sch. II., art. 164.

O. 9, r. 13. Where the right to make the application is barred under the Act of 1877, the bar arising before the Act of 1908 came into force, the provisions of the Act of 1908 cannot revive the right (g). A obtains an ex parte decree against B. In execution of the decree B's property is attached and sold in 1906. No application is made by B to set aside the decree within 30 days from the date of sale as provided by Art. 164 of the Limitation Act of 1877. B's right to set aside the decree is therefore barred. In 1910 B applies to set aside the decree alleging that he came to know of the decree only a fortnight prior to the application, and contends that his application is not barred in view of the provisions of Art. 164 of the Limitation Act of 1908. B's right having been barred under the Act of 1877, it cannot be revived by the Act of 1908. Save as aforesaid, the law of limitation to be applied to applications under the present rule made after January 1, 1909, is Art. 164 of the Limitation Act of 1908, and not Art. 164 of the Limitation Act of 1877, though the ex parte decree may have been passed when the Limitation Act of 1877 was in force. A obtains an ex parte decree against B in 1907. B applies for an order to set aside the decree in 1910. The application is made more than 30 days after the date when B came to know of the decree, though within 30 days from the date of executing a process for enforcing the decree. The application is governed by the Act of 1908, and it is barred under Art. 164 of that Act (r).

A defendant against whom an ex parte decree is passed is at liberty, as stated above, to appeal (s) or to apply for a review (t). If he appeals from the decree, he is not entitled in the appeal to go into any question touching his non-appearance at the hearing. All that he is entitled to do in the appeal is to challenge the decree upon the ground that the evidence which the plaintiff had adduced was not sufficient to justify the decree (u). As to review see last para. of notes to O. 9, r. 9, "Remedies of plaintiff on dismissal of suit under r. 8" on p. 451 above.

The first two remedies, that is, the remedies by way of appeal and review, may be availed of by any person against whom a decree is passed, whether the decree is ex parte or not. But the third remedy, being the one provided by this rule can only be availed of if the decree is passed ex parte, that is to say, it is passed against the defendant for default of appearance under r. 6. The remedy given by this rule is not open to a defendant if the decree is passed on grounds other than his non-appearance.

Where written statement filed.—A defendant against whom a decree is passed ex parte for default of appearance is entitled to apply under this rule to set aside the decree, though he may have filed his written statement (v).

"Prevented from appearing."—As to the meaning of "appearing," see notes to O. 9, r. 9, "Appearance," on p. 451 above.

Hearing of application pending appeal.—A obtains an ex parte decree against B. B applies under this rule to have the decree set aside. At the same time he prefers an appeal from the decree. Has the Court that passed the decree jurisdiction to hear the application, or should the application be heard by the Appellate Court? It has been held by the High Court of Madras that after an appeal is filed from a decree, the power to set aside the decree on an application under this rule becomes vested in the appellate Court by virtue of s. 107, and the original Court has no power to hear the application (w). On the other hand, it has been held by the High Court of Calcutta, that the Court that passed the decree has jurisdiction to hear the application notwithstanding the pendency of the appeal, the reason given being that the matter for investigation in a proceeding under this rule is entirely distinct from the matter for determination in the appeal from the ex parte decree, the one being concerned with the due service of summons, O. 9, r. 13. and the other with the determination of the merits of the controversy between the parties (x).

Suppose now that A sues B and C, that B does not appear and an ex parte decree is passed against him, and that C appears and defends the suit and a decree is passed against him after a hearing. Suppose, further, that B applies under this rule to have the ex parte decree set aside, and that C appeals from the decree passed against him (C). Which is the proper Court to hear B's application? The answer is the same as that to the question propounded in the above paragraph, that is, the appellate Court according to the Madras decisions, and the Court that passed the decree according to the Calcutta decisions. It does not make any difference that the application is made by one defendant and the appeal is preferred by another defendant? See the cases cited in the above paragraph.

Hearing of application after disposal of appeal.—Where an appeal is preferred from an ex parte decree, and the decree is confirmed or otherwise disposed of in appeal under O. 41, r. 32, the Court which passed the ex parte decree has no power to entertain an application under this rule to set aside the ex parte decree, even though the application was made before the appeal was filed (y). But it is otherwise where the appeal is dismissed for default under O. 41, r. 11; in such case the Court which passed the ex parte decree has power to entertain the application to set aside the decree. The reason is that where the decree of the lower Court is confirmed or otherwise disposed of under O. 41, r. 32, it is merged in the decree of the appellate Court; but an order dismissing an appeal for default is not a decree [s. 2 (2)], and there can therefore be no such merger (z). See notes to s. 36 "Merger of decree," on p. 110 above.

Where a defendant against whom an ex parte decree is passed is not joined as a party to the appeal preferred by other parties to the suit, and the appellate Court has not adjudicated upon his case, the ex parte decree against him does not merge in the decree of the Court of appeal so as to preclude him from applying under this rule to the Court that passed the ex parte decree to set aside the decree. A sues B, C and D, and obtains an ex parte decree against B and a decree after a hearing on the merits against C and D. C and D appeal from the decree. B is not joined as a party to the appeal. The appellate Court confirms the decree of the Court of first instance passed against C and D. This does not preclude B from applying to the Court of first instance to set aside the ex parte decree against him (a).

Where ex parte decree is obtained by fraud.—A regular suit does not lie to set aside an ex parte decree on the ground solely of non-service of summons (b). But where an ex parte decree is alleged to have been obtained by a plaintiff by fraud, the defendant is entitled, besides the above remedies, to institute a regular suit to set aside the decree on the ground of fraud (c). The suit is maintainable even though the defendant has been unsuccessful in his application made under this rule to set aside the ex parte decree (d). But if the very fraud that is set up by the defendant in his suit was set up in his application, and the Court after going into the question of fraud rejected the application, the suit would be barred as res judicata, unless the fraud alleged was of such a nature that it could not properly come within the scope of enquiry under this

- O. 9, r. 13. rule. A applies under this rule to set aside an ex parte decree on the ground of fraud in respect of the service of summons upon him. The Court, after going into the question of fraud, rejects the application. A then institutes a regular suit to set aside the ex parte decree, basing his claims on the very fraud that was alleged by him in the application. The suit is barred as res judicata (e).

Application by legal representative of deceased defendant.—Under the Code of 1882, it was not settled whether, where a defendant against whom an ex parte decree was passed died, his legal representative could apply for an order to set aside the ex parte decree. The High Court of Calcutta held that he could (f). The High Court of Madras held that he could not (g); and so also the High Court of Allahabad (h). But the latter Court maintained that if the application was made by the defendant, and he died during the pendency of the application, the proceedings could be continued by his legal representative (i). Under this Code (s. 146) there is no doubt that such an application can be made by the legal representative of the deceased defendant (j).

Grounds on which ex parte decree may be set aside.—These are stated in the second paragraph of the rule, the one being that the summons was not duly served upon the defendant (k), and the other that though the summons was duly served, the defendant was prevented by sufficient cause from appearing when the suit was called on for hearing (l). When a summons was served upon a purdanashin lady, to whom the serving officer was not able to obtain access, by affixing a copy of the summons on the outer door of her dwelling house under O. 5, r. 17, and it appeared that the lady had no knowledge of the suit against her, the Court set aside the ex parte decree passed against her on the ground that she was prevented by "sufficient cause" from appearing at the hearing of the suit (m). As to "sufficient cause," see notes to r. 9 above under the head "What is sufficient cause," and notes also under the head "Inherent power of Court to restore suit dismissed for default," on page 453 above.

Ex parte decree against minor defendant.—It is no ground for setting aside an ex parte decree passed against a minor defendant, that the Nazir who was appointed guardian ad litem of the minor did not appear and defend the suit, where the failure to defend was owing to the fact that the Nazir did not receive instructions from any person to defend the suit. It would be otherwise if fraud, collusion, or gross negligence on the part of the Nazir were proved (n). See notes to r. 9 above, "Minor plaintiff," on p. 453 above.

Proviso to the Rule.—We now proceed to consider cases in which there are two or more defendants, and

- (1) where there is a decree ex parte passed against all the defendants, but the application to set aside the decree is made by some of them only, or,
- (2) where against some of the defendants the decree is passed ex parte, but against others who have appeared and defended the suit it is passed after a hearing, and the application to set aside the decree is made by one or more of the defendants against whom the decree was passed ex parte.

The question is, whether, if the decree is set aside as against the applicant, the Court can set aside the decree as against the other defendants also, so as to re-open the whole suit, and, if so, in what cases? This is a point of some difficulty, for which there was no provision made in the old section. The present rule expressly provides for these cases. The rule says that where a defendant against whom a decree is passed ex parte applies for an order to set it aside, and satisfies the Court that the summons was not duly served upon him, etc., the Court shall make an order setting aside the decree as against him [that is the applicant] (o), provided that where the decree is of such a nature that it cannot be set aside as against such defendant only, it may be set aside as against all or any of the other defendants. The rule primarily applies to the case only of the particular defendant who has applied to have the decree set aside. But under certain circumstances it may be necessary, in the interests of justice, to set aside the decree against the other defendants also. For this provision has been made in the proviso to the rule. By virtue of the proviso the Court to which an application is made to set aside a decree ex parte may set it aside not only as against the defendant who applies to have it set aside, but as against the other defendants also, where the decree is of such a nature that it cannot be set aside as against the applicant only. As a general rule we may say that a decree may be set aside not only as against the applicant, but as against the other defendants also, if the interests of justice require it (p), e.g.—

- (1) where the decree is one and indivisible (q);
- (2) where the suit would result in inconsistent decrees, if the decree were not set aside as against the other defendants also (r);
- (3) where the relief to which the applicant is entitled in the suit could not effectively be given otherwise than by setting aside the decree as against the other defendants also (s);
- (4) where the decree proceeds on a ground common to all the defendants (t).

The cases now under consideration may be divided, as pointed out at the beginning of this paragraph, into two classes.

Class 1.—Where there is a decree ex parte passed against all the defendants, but the application to set aside the decree is made by some of them only.

B and C are not served with the summons, but D is served. None of the defendants appears at the hearing and a decree ex parte is passed against all the defendants for a sale of the mortgaged property. B and C apply for an order to set aside the decree on the ground that the summons was not served upon them. Here the decree being one and indivisible the Court may set aside the decree not only as against B and C but also as against D, though he was served with the summons and there was no sufficient cause for his non-appearance: *Ajodhya Pershad v. O. 9, r. 13. (b) A sues B and his minor sons C and D members of a joint Hindu family to recover Rs. 1,000, alleged to have been advanced to B as manager of the family. None of the defendants appears at the hearing, and a decree ex parte is passed against all the three. All the three defendants, B, C and D apply to have the decree set aside. As to C and D it is proved that there was no summons served upon them. As to B it is proved that the summons was duly served upon him. Here the decree being one and indivisible (u) the Court may set aside the decree not only as against C and D, but also as against B though it is found that the summons was duly served upon him and there was no sufficient cause for his non-appearance. Further this is a case where the relief to which the minors C and D are entitled could not effectively be granted unless the decree was set aside as against B also. For if the decree were allowed to stand as against B, B's share in the joint family property could be attached and sold though the sons might succeed in showing at the re-trial of the suit that the debt never was incurred or that it had been discharged, or that from its nature the joint family property was not liable. The sale of the father's share in the joint family property would be a manifest injury to the sons, and this could only be avoided by setting aside the decree against the father also, and re-opening the whole suit: Bhura Mal v. Har Kishan Das (1902) 24 All. 383, at pp. 400 and 401.

(c) X sues A and B alleging that A and B are in joint possession of certain immoveable property, and asking for a declaration that he is in joint possession with them. A is served with the summons, but B is not. Neither defendant appears at the hearing, and a decree ex parte is passed against both defendants. B applies to have the decree set aside, and it is set aside as against him, but not as against A. At the hearing B establishes that X has no title whatever to the property. There would in such a case be two absolutely inconsistent decrees, namely, the ex parte decree held by X against A declaring X to be jointly in possession with A and B, and the decree against X passed at the rehearing that X was not in joint possession with A and B. This is therefore a case in which the decree must be set aside not only as against B, but as against A also: see Bhura Mal v. Har Kishan Das (1902) 24 All. 383, at p. 388.

(d) X sues A and B on a promissory note executed by A. B is A's nephew, and he is joined as a defendant on the ground that the note was for a debt binding on the family. Neither defendant appears at the hearing, and a decree ex parte is passed against both defendants. The decree against A proceeds on the ground that the note was passed by him, and against B on the ground that the debt was incurred for a family purpose. B applies for an order to set aside the decree, alleging that the summons was not served upon him and that the debt in respect of which the note was passed by A was not incurred for a family purpose. It is not disputed that the amount was actually advanced. Such being the case, the decree may be set aside as against B, but it must not be set aside as against A. Justice does not require it, for the contention of B that the debt was one not binding on him is a defence peculiar to him, and not one common to him and A: Gopala Chetti v. Subbar (1903) 26 Mad. 604.

(e) A sues B, C and D personally and as managers of a devasam to recover Rs. 27, being revenue paid by him for the defendants. None of the defendants appears at the hearing, and a decree ex parte is passed against them personally and against the devasam property. If B alone applies under this rule and shows sufficient cause for his non-appearance at the hearing, the decree may be set aside so far as it ordered payment by B personally and from the devasam property, but it cannot be set aside as against C and D: Valia Koni v. Marutha Veera (1908) 31 Mad. 454.

(u) See Mahomed Hamidulla v. Tohurennissa Bibi (1898) 26 Cal. 155, 160, where it was said of a similar decree that it was one and indivisible.

Class II.—Where against some of the defendants the decree is passed ex parte, but O. 9, r. 13. against others who have appeared and defended the suit it is passed after a hearing, and the application to set aside the decree is made by one or more of the defendants against whom the decree was passed ex parte.—In this case the question arises, whether, if the decree is of such a nature that it cannot be set aside as against the applicant only, but must be set aside also as against the defendants against whom the decree was passed after a hearing, the Court has the power to set aside the decree as against such defendants also. We submit that it has. The words “the decree” in the proviso mean the decree passed in the suit, not only against the defendants who did not appear, but also against the defendants who did appear. The words “other defendants” in the proviso mean defendants other than the applicant against whom the decree is passed, whether as against them it was passed ex parte or after a hearing (v).¹

Illustrations.

(a) X sues A and B, alleging that A and B are in joint possession of certain immoveable property, and asking for a declaration that he is in joint possession with them. A appears and defends the suit. B does not appear. The Court finds that A and B are in joint possession, and that X is entitled to joint possession with them, and a decree is passed against A and B declaring that X is entitled to joint possession with them. Here the decree, so far as regards A, is passed after a hearing, and as regards B, it is ex parte. But there is only one decree, and the words “the decree” in the proviso could well be referred to that decree. Therefore, if B applies for an order to set aside the decree, and the decree is set aside as against him, it must also be set aside as against A; otherwise, in the event of B succeeding in the suit, this absurd position would arise that A and B being in joint possession of the property, X would be in possession of a decree declaring him to be jointly in possession along with A and B, whilst B would be in possession of a decree in his favour declaring that X is not entitled to joint possession with him and A: see Bhura Mal v. Har Kishan Das (1902) 24 All. 383 at p. 400.

(b) A and B, both Mahomedans, pass a promissory note to X. B dies leaving three heirs, H1, H2 and H3. X sues A (surviving maker of the note) and H1, H2 and H3 as heirs of B. A and H1 appear at the hearing and defend the suit. H2 and H3 do not appear. A decree is passed against all the defendants, the liability of H1, H2 and H3 under the decree being limited to the extent of the property of B inherited by them as B's heirs. Here the decree, so far as regards A and H1, is passed after a hearing, and, as regards H2 and H3, it is ex parte. H2 and H3 apply to have the decree set aside alleging that the summons was not served upon them. The Court is satisfied that the summons was not served. Upon these facts the High Court of Calcutta held under the old section that the decree should be set aside not only as against H2 and H3 but also as against A and H1, the ground of the decision being that the decree was one and indivisible: Mahomed Hamidulla v. Tohurennissa Bibi (1898) 25 Cal. 155, 160; Monomohini v. Nara Narayan Roy (1899) 4 C. W. N. 456, 458. See the next illustration.

(c) A sues B and C, Native Christians, upon a promissory note jointly passed by them. B appears at the hearing and defends the suit. C does not appear. A decree is passed against both defendants for the amount of the note. Here the decree so far as regards B, is passed after a hearing, and, as regards C, it is ex parte. C applies for an order to set aside the decree, alleging that the summons was not served upon him. The Court finds that the summons was not served upon C. Upon these facts the High Court of Bombay held under the old section that if the decree were set aside as against C, it would

O. 9 r. 13. not reopen the case as against B, B having appeared and defended the suit: Manaku v. Sitaram (1894) 18 Bom. 142. It is difficult, indeed, to distinguish this case from the Calcutta case cited in the preceding illustration, for if the decree in the Calcutta case was one and indivisible, it must be regarded as such in the Bombay case. If the Bombay decision means that the setting aside of a decree ex parte against a defendant does not ipso facto revive the suit as against a defendant who has appeared and defended the suit, the decision is still good law; for an express order is necessary for that purpose. But if it means that where a decree is passed ex parte against A and after a hearing against B, the Court can set aside the decree only against A, and cannot set it aside in any case against B, the decision is no longer law [see the proviso to the rule]. The Bombay decision, however, may be supported on the ground that the decree could not be said in such a case to be one and indivisible.

(d) A sues B and C for a declaration of title to certain lands, and D and E for possession of the lands. B and C appear and defend the suit. D and E do not appear. The Court passes a decree against all the four defendants, as against B and C, declaring that the lands belong to A, and as against D and E, directing them to deliver possession of the lands to A. Here the decree against D and E is ex parte, for they did not appear at the hearing. D alone applies for an order to set aside the decree, alleging that the summons was not served upon him. The Court is satisfied that the summons was not served. Should the decree be set aside as a whole or should it be set aside in part, and if so, to what extent? The decree should not be set aside as a whole, for the decree is not one and indivisible. The relief granted to A as against B and C is the declaration of A's title to the lands. The relief granted to A as against D and E is that they should deliver up possession of the lands to A. In fact, the decree, though nominally one, really consists of two decrees each against one set of defendants, the relief granted against each set being separately specified. Hence the Court should not make an order setting aside the decree as against B and C, for the relief granted against B and C is distinct from that granted against D, who alone applied for an order to set aside the decree. But the decree should be set aside, not only as against D, but also as against E, for the decree against D and E is one and indivisible, namely, delivery up of possession; Monomohini v. Nara (1899) 4 C. W. N. 456.

The fact that an ex parte decree has been satisfied does not preclude the defendant from applying to the Court for an order to set it aside under this rule.—A obtains an ex parte decree against B, and attaches B's goods in execution of the decree. B pays the amount of the decree under protest, and applies for an order to set aside the decree on the ground that the summons was not served upon him. The Court may make an order setting aside the decree, notwithstanding that the decree has been satisfied (w).

Appeal.—Where an application under this rule is rejected, an appeal lies against the order rejecting the application [O. 43, r. 1, cl. (d)]. But where the application is granted, no appeal lies against the order granting the application (x).

Limitation.—A sues B and C for a decree against them jointly in respect of a joint mortgage debt. A preliminary decree for sale is passed against B and C in 1900 and it is made absolute in 1901. As against B, however, the decree was ex parte, and it is set aside as against him on his application. A decree is then passed on the merits against B in 1902. B appeals from the decree, but the appeal is dismissed in 1904 and as against him the decree is made absolute in 1905. A then applies in 1905 for execution both against B and C by a sale of the mortgaged property. C contends that as the decree as against him was made absolute in 1901, the application for execution is barred by limitation, it having been made more than three years from that date. The application is not barred by limitation, for the period of three years must be calculated from 1905 when the decree against B was made absolute. The decree of 1905 for the first time justified A in applying for the joint execution of the decree against B and C (y).

Execution proceedings.—There is a conflict of opinion as to whether the present rule applies to ex parte orders in execution (z). See notes to r. 9 above, “Execution proceedings,” on p. 454 above.

14. [S. 109.] No decree shall be set aside on any such application as aforesaid unless notice thereof has been served on the opposite party.

No decree to be set aside without notice to opposite party.

ORDER X.

Examination of Parties by the Court.

1. [S. 117.] At the first hearing of the suit the Court shall ascertain from each party or his pleader whether he admits or denies such allegations of facts as are made in the plaint or written statement (if any) of the opposite party, and as are not expressly or by necessary implication admitted or denied by the party against whom they are made. The Court shall record such admissions and denials.

O. 10,
rr. 1, 2.

Ascertainment whether allegations in pleadings are admitted or denied.

2. [S. 118.] At the first hearing of the suit, or at any subsequent hearing, any party appearing in person or present in Court, or any person able to answer any material questions relating to the suit by whom such party or his pleader is accompanied, may be examined orally by the Court; and the Court may, if it thinks fit, put in the course of such examination questions suggested by either party.

Oral examination of party, or companion of party.

Object of examination under this rule.—The object of examination under this rule is not to take evidence or ascertain what is to be the evidence in the case but to determine the matters in dispute between the parties (a).

3. [S. 119.] The substance of the examination shall be reduced to writing by the Judge, and shall form part of the record.

Substance of examination to be written.

Chartered High Courts.—This rule does not apply to Chartered High Courts in the exercise of their ordinary or extraordinary original civil jurisdiction [O. 49, r. 3, cl. (2)].

4. [S. 120.] (1) Where the pleader of any party who appears by a pleader or any such person accompanying a pleader as is referred to in rule 2, refuses or is unable to answer any material question relating to the suit which the Court is of opinion that the party whom he represents ought to answer, and is likely to be able to answer if interrogated in person, the Court may postpone the hearing of the suit to a future day and direct that such party shall appear in person on such day.

Consequence of refusal or inability of pleader to answer.

(2) If such party fails without lawful excuse to appear in person on the day so appointed, the Court may pronounce judgment against him, or make such order in relation to the suit as it thinks fit.

Direct that such party shall appear in person.—Under this rule, an order directing a party to appear in person can only be made if the pleader who represents him has refused or is unable to answer material questions (b).

Appeal.—An appeal lies from an order pronouncing judgment against a party under sub-r., (2) [O. 43, r., cl. (o)]. Where in a suit by A against B, C and D, the Court struck off B's defence owing to his failure to appear in person, but ultimately decided the case on the merits and passed a decree against all three defendants, their defences being similar it was held that B was not entitled to appeal from the order striking off his defence, but that he was at liberty to appeal from the final decree and to call in question upon that appeal the order striking off his defence [s. 105] (c).

ORDER XI.

Discovery and Inspection.

O. 11, r. 1.

1. [R. S. C., O. 31, r. 1. Cf. S. 121.] In any suit the plaintiff or defendant by leave of the Court may deliver interrogatories in writing for the examination of the opposite parties or any one or more of such parties, and such interrogatories when delivered shall have a note at the foot thereof stating which of such interrogatories each of such persons is required to answer: Provided that no party shall deliver more than one set of interrogatories to the same party without an order for that purpose: Provided also that interrogatories which do not relate to any matters in question in the suit shall be deemed irrelevant, notwithstanding that they might be admissible on the oral cross-examination of a witness.

Discovery by way of answers to interrogatories.—Every party to a suit is entitled to know the nature of his opponent's case (d), so that he may know beforehand what case he has to meet at the hearing (e). But he is not entitled to know the facts which constitute exclusively the evidence of his opponent's case, the reason being that it would enable an unscrupulous party to tamper with his opponent's witnesses, and to manufacture evidence in contradiction, and so shape his case as to defeat justice (f). The nature of a plaintiff's case is disclosed in his plaint. The nature of a defendant's case is disclosed in his written statement. But a plaint or a written statement may not sufficiently disclose the nature of a party's case. In such a case, either party may administer interrogatories in writing to the other through the Court. Interrogatories may also be administered by a party to his opponent to obtain admissions from him to facilitate the proof of his own case. The party to whom interrogatories are administered must answer them in writing and on oath (r. 8). This is called discovery by way of answer to interrogatories; the party by his answers discovers or discloses the nature of his case.

Every suit contemplates two sets of facts, namely, (1) facts which constitute a party's case, and (2) facts by which a party's case is to be proved (see O. 6, r. 2). The first set of facts discloses the nature of a party's case. The second set forms the evidence of his case. Thus if A sues B for damages for breach of a contract, A must prove (1) the contract, and (2) breach of the contract. These two facts constitute A's case, and it is to these facts that one should turn to determine the nature of A's case. Hence B may administer interrogatories to A for information as to the particulars of (1) the contract and (2) the breach thereof. He may also interrogate A to obtain admissions from him to facilitate the proof of his own case. But he is not entitled to administer interrogatories seeking information as to the evidence by which A will prove these two facts. Thus in the above case it is not permissible to B to ask who was present at the time when the alleged contract was made, in other words, it is not permissible to ask the names of A's witnesses (g). But if the name and address of a person is itself a relevant fact, an interrogatory as to that name and address is not rendered inadmissible merely by the fact that the answer will disclose a witness's name (h). In a suit for the recovery of the amount of a hundi alleged to have been drawn by the defendant in consideration of Rs. 5,000 advanced to him by the plaintiff, and to have been dishonoured by non-payment, the defendant is entitled to discovery of the form in which the loan is alleged to have been made, and of the time and place the hundi was drawn and accepted and See notes to O. 6, r. 4, "Object of particulars," on p. 401 above, and "Interrogatories relating to names of persons," on p. 467 below.

What interrogatories may be allowed.—In England, interrogatories are allowed for the following purposes :—

1. To ascertain the "nature" of your opponent's case or the material facts constituting his case (j).

We have dealt with this proposition in the preceding paragraph.

2. To support your own case, either

- (a) directly, by obtaining admissions, or
- (b) indirectly, by impeaching or destroying your adversary's case (k).

Illustration of Case 2.—A sues B to recover Rs. 5,000 for making model machinery for exhibition. The defence is that the machinery was defective and unworkable. A may interrogate B whether the machinery did not obtain a prize at the exhibition. If it did, it is clear that the answer would tend to destroy B's case, and support A's case (l). Moreover, the answer will serve as an admission from B, and the getting of admissions by interrogatories is always allowed, for it supports the party's case (m).

There is one exception to the rule in Case 2 (b). A sues to eject B from a piece of land, alleging that the land belongs to him and that B is wrongfully in possession thereof. This is an action of ejectment. A is plaintiff in ejectment, and B is defendant in ejectment. In an action of ejectment, the plaintiff must prove his own title affirmatively. It is not enough for him to impeach or destroy the defendant's title. If he does not establish his own title to the land, he will not be entitled to a decree, though he may succeed in impeaching or even destroying the defendant's title. The reason is that the defendant being in possession, he cannot be dispossessed of the land except by proof of title on the part of the claimant. Hence it is clear that it is perfectly useless to allow the plaintiff in ejectment to interrogate the defendant for the purpose merely of destroying or impeaching the defendant's title (n). And this is the Exception above referred to. But the plaintiff in ejectment is entitled to interrogate the defendant as to any matter relating to the defendant's title that may support his case directly (o). The same principles apply in the case of discovery by production of documents.

The High Court of Calcutta has expressed the opinion that interrogatories in India should not be allowed for the first of the above purposes, that is, to ascertain the nature of your opponent's case but that they may be allowed for the second, that is, to support your own case (p). The opinion is based on the ground that where a party has not sufficiently disclosed his case, it is the Court that has to determine the exact nature of his case by procedure under O. 8, r. 7, and O. 14, rr. 1-2, and that it is not therefore permissible to the opposite party to get that information by discovery. But the provisions of the said rules are, it is conceived, intended not to supersede, but to supplement the provisions for discovery to ascertain the case of a party to a suit. It is submitted with respect that there is no reason whatever why any distinction should be drawn between the English and O. 11, r. 1. the Indian practice. Assuming that there was a distinction between the two systems under the Code of 1882, there is no such distinction now. The present Order XI is in terms similar to Order XXXI of the Rules of the Supreme Court (q).

What interrogatories may not be allowed.—These may be divided into three classes :—

1. A party is not entitled to administer interrogatories for obtaining discovery of facts which constitute exclusively the evidence of his adversary's case or title (r).
2. A party is not entitled to interrogate as to any confidential communications between his opponent and his legal advisers.
3. A party is not entitled to exhibit interrogatories which would involve disclosures injurious to public interests.

For fuller information on the above rules, see notes to r. 12 below, under the head "Grounds of objection to production of documents," p. 474 below.

Interrogatories relating to names of persons.—Interrogatories relating to the names of persons not already parties to the action are only allowable where the object is either to make the proceedings complete and effective for all purposes or to enable the plaintiff more effectively to substantiate the case which he makes against the existing defendant (s). Such interrogatories are not allowable in any other case. Thus in a suit by the vendor against the purchaser for specific performance of a contract for sale, the plaintiff is not entitled to interrogate the defendant for the purpose of discovering whether he was acting as agent for an undisclosed principal. The only object of such an interrogatory is to give the plaintiff the opportunity, if he is so minded, of releasing the defendant from all liability under the contract, and of securing for the plaintiff some other person liable under the contract in substitution for, and not jointly with, the defendant (t).

As to interrogatories as to names of witnesses, see notes "Discovery by way of answers to interrogatories," p. 465 above, and notes to o. 6, r. 4, "Object of particulars," on p. 401 above.

Time for delivery of interrogatories.—A plaintiff may, under this rule, deliver interrogatories to a defendant even before the filing of the written statement. But there is this difference, if the English practice is to be followed here, that in what are called common law actions interrogatories, if delivered before filing the written statement, will as a rule be struck out under r. 7 as unnecessary and vexatious unless sufficient reasons are given by the plaintiff why the interrogatories are necessary at that stage of the suit (u); while in suits of the nature of chancery actions (v), the will, as a rule, be allowed though no written statement has been filed (w).

A defendant, as a rule, is not allowed to deliver interrogatories to the plaintiff before he has filed his written statement (x).

Leave of the Court.—The application for leave to administer interrogatories is, as a rule, made ex parte. In considering whether leave should be granted, the Court has to determine whether it is a fit and proper case for administering interrogatories so that no leave will be granted if the interrogatories are scandalous or are an abuse of the process of the Court. But it is not the duty of the Court, when granting leave, to consider what particular questions the party interrogated should be compelled to answer. The proper time for considering that question is after the party interrogated has made his affidavit in answer [r. 8] (y). See r. 2 below.

"Opposite party."—These words do not include solely the relation of plaintiff and defendant; thus one defendant may administer interrogatories to another defendant, provided there is some right to be adjusted in the action between them (z).

Where opposite party is a minor or a lunatic.—Where a party to a suit is a minor or a lunatic, interrogatories may be administered to his next friend or guardian ad litem, as the case may be; see r. 23 below.

Points of distinction between interrogatories and cross-examination:—

(1) Not every question which could be asked a witness in the box may be put as an interrogatory. Thus questions which are put only to test the credibility of a person will not be allowed, although of course they may be asked in cross-examination (a).

(2) Interrogatories may be administered only to a party to a suit, and not to a witness (b).

Impleading party for discovery.—A person cannot be made a party to a suit solely for the purpose of discovery (c).

Distinction between pleadings and interrogatories.—Interrogatories are not like pleadings confined to the material facts on which the parties rely in support of their claim or defence; for interrogatories may be administered not only to ascertain the nature of your opponent's case but to obtain admissions from him of everything which is material on the pleadings, so as to facilitate the proof of your own case, and thus save yourself the expense of proving facts admitted by your opponent in answer to the interrogatories (d).

Probate proceedings.—The present order applies by virtue of s. 53 of the Probate and Administration Act, 1881, to proceedings in probate (e).

2. [New. R. S. C., O. 31, r. 2.] On an application for leave to deliver interrogatories, the particular interrogatories proposed to be delivered shall be submitted to the Court.

Particular interrogatories

In deciding upon such application, the Court shall take into account any offer, which may be made by the party sought to be interrogated to deliver particulars, or to make admissions, or to produce documents relating to the matters in question, or any of them, and leave shall be given as to such only of the interrogatories submitted as the Court shall consider necessary either for disposing fairly of the suit or for saving costs.

Power of Court under this rule.—It is to be noted that the Judge has not any power under this rule to settle interrogatories, but to state only what interrogatories should be administered (f). Further, the allowance by a Judge of interrogatories to be administered to a party does not amount to a decision that the party is bound to answer them but leaves him at liberty to take any objection to answering which he might otherwise have taken (g). See rr. 6-7 below.

3. [R. S. C., O. 31, r. 3. Cf. S. 123.] In adjusting the costs of the suit inquiry shall at the instance of any party be made into the propriety of exhibiting such interrogatories, and if it is the opinion of the taxing officer or of the Court either with or without an application for inquiry that such interrogatories have been exhibited unreasonably, vexatiously, or at improper length, the costs occasioned by the said interrogatories and the answer thereto shall be paid in any event by the party in fault.

5. [R. S. C., O. 31, r. 5. Cf. S. 124.] Where any party to a suit is a corporation or a body of persons, whether incorporated or not, empowered by law to sue or be sued, whether in its own name or in the name of any officer or other person, any opposite party may apply for an order allowing him to deliver interrogatories to any member or officer of such corporation or body, and an order may be made accordingly.

Corporations.

Delivery of interrogatories to an officer of a corporation.—A corporate body cannot answer for itself, and it is necessary that some officer should answer for it. His answer is the answer of the Company, and can be read against the Company. Such being the case, he is only bound to answer as to his knowledge acquired in the course of his employment by the Company, and as to the result of inquiries made by him of the other officers and agents of the Company with regard to their knowledge acquired in the same way. He is not bound to answer as to his own knowledge, or to make inquiries of the other officers or agents of the Company as to their knowledge acquired accidentally or in some other capacity (h).

O. 11, r. 6. 6. [R. S. C., O. 31, r. 6. Cf. S. 125.] Any objection to answering any interrogatory on the ground that it is scandalous or irrelevant or not exhibited bona fide for the purpose of the suit, or that the matters inquired into are not sufficiently material at that stage, or on any other ground, may be taken in the affidavit in answer.

Objections to interrogatories by answer.

Scandalous interrogatories.—"Certainly nothing can be scandalous which is relevant" (i). Interrogatories which tend to incriminate a party are not scandalous if they are relevant (j).

Irrelevant interrogatories.—The discovery by interrogatories, as distinguished from cross-examination, must be directly relevant to the matters in issue (k). Thus in an action for damages against the defendant for seducing the plaintiff's daughter, the defendant cannot be asked how rich he is, as it is perfectly irrelevant in such cases whether the defendant is rich or poor, the true measure of damages being the amount of compensation to be paid to the plaintiff for the injury he has sustained by the seduction of his daughter. But interrogatories as to whether the defendant had had sexual intercourse with the daughter, and whether he had stated that he believed that she had not had such intercourse with any other man, are allowable (l). Similarly interrogatories will not be allowed if the defence at which they aim would be no defence in law to the suit (m).

Where a party seeks discovery of documents, and the opposite party alleges that the documents are not relevant, the procedure to be followed is that laid down in r. 18, sub-r. (2) below. A party should not be compelled to give discovery of documents by means of interrogatories, the relevancy of which is denied (n).

"Not exhibited bona fide for the purpose of the suit."—Though an interrogatory may be relevant, it may be objected to on the ground that it is put with a view to serve an ulterior object beyond that of helping the suit.

"Not sufficiently material at that stage."—Thus an interrogatory may be perfectly relevant to a suit, further it may be put bona fide for the purposes of the suit, but it may be premature, in which case it will not be allowed (o). This may be illustrated by the following cases:—

- (1) A sues B for breach of an alleged trust and for profits made by B by such breach. B denies the alleged trust. A is not entitled to interrogate B so as to require from him an account of profits of the alleged trust fund unless the trust is proved (p); but it is otherwise if the breach of trust is admitted (q).
- (2) In Fennessy v. Clark (r), the plaintiffs' interrogatories to prove the amount of damages were held premature, as it was not yet decided whether the plaintiff was entitled to any damages at all. Cotton, L. J., said

rr. 6, 7.

"Or any other ground."—Besides the three specific grounds mentioned the rule, a party interrogated may object to answer an interrogatory on the ground that it is prolix, oppressive, unnecessary or scandalous (r. 7), or on the grounds specified in the notes to r. 1 under the head "What interrogatories may not be allowed," p 467 above.

"Fishing" interrogatories not allowed.—The questions asked must not be "fishing," that is to say, they must refer to some definite and existing state of circumstances, and must not be put merely in the hope of discovering something which may help the party interrogating to make out some case (s).

See Odgers on Pleading, 6th Ed., p. 275. For instances of "fishing interrogatories," see Ali Kader v. Gobind Das (t).

Wagering contracts.—In cases where the defence of wagering is set up the Court will refuse to allow the party setting up this defence to interrogate his opponent generally as to his business transactions apart from the particular transactions in the suit, the reason being that it is manifestly unfair to compel a man to disclose his general dealings on the chance that thereby his opponent may discover something that will support his case (u).

Defamation.—Where a statement of claim in an action for slander alleges publication to one named person, and publication also to various other persons unnamed, it is not generally permissible to ask the defendant whether he uttered the words complained of to any person or persons other than the person named, and the names of the other persons if any. Such an interrogatory is a fishing interrogatory, the object being to find out some cause of action against the defendant other than the specific cause of action alleged in the plaint (v).

7. [New. R. S. C., O. 31, r. 7.] Any interrogatories may be set aside on the ground that they have been exhibited unreasonably or vexatiously, or struck out on the ground that they are prolix, oppressive, unnecessary or scandalous; and any application for this purpose may be made within seven days after service of the interrogatories.

Setting aside and striking out interrogatories.

Setting aside and striking out interrogatories.—A, as trustee in the bankruptcy of C, sues B for a declaration that a piece of land purchased by B and C in 1883 was purchased by B and C in partnership. B denies the partnership. A exhibits interrogatories to B asking for particulars of purchases of land by B and C previous and subsequent to 1883 to prove that they had been co-partners in various other purchases similar to that of 1883. The interrogatories are irrelevant and oppressive,

This rule does not apply where the interrogatories are merely irrelevant. An objection that an interrogatory is irrelevant must be taken in the affidavit in answer (r. 6), and is no ground for setting aside the interrogatory under this rule (s).

"There is no foundation for the opinion that a person who has a ground for refusing to answer [an interrogatory] is precluded from availing himself of that ground because he has not applied to have the interrogatory struck out (y).

8. [R. S. C., O. 31, r. 8, S. 126.] Interrogatories shall be answered by affidavit to be filed within ten days, or within such other time as the Court may allow.

Affidavit in answer, filing.

Answers as to matters done by agent or servant of party interrogated.—A party to a suit is not excused from answering interrogatories relevant to the question in issue on the ground that they are as to matters which are not within such party's knowledge, but are only within the knowledge of his agents or servants, if derived in the ordinary course of their employment; and he is bound to obtain the information from such agents or servants, unless he shows that it would be unreasonable to require him to do so, as that, either such agents or servants have left his employment, or it would occasion unreasonable expense or an unreasonable amount of delay or the like (z). A party's banker or solicitor is his agent within the meaning of the above rule (a). But a party is not bound to disclose matters that have come to the knowledge of his agents or servants otherwise than in the ordinary course of their employment (b).

9. [New. R. S. C., O. 31, r. 9.] An affidavit in answer to interrogatories shall be in Form No. 3 in Appendix C, with such variations as circumstances may require.

No exception to be taken.

him to answer, or to answer further, as the case may be. And O. 11, an order may be made requiring him to answer or answer rr. 11, 12, further, either by affidavit or by viva voce examination, as the Court may direct.

Application for further answer to interrogatories.—An application for a further answer to interrogatories ought to specify the interrogatories or parts of interrogatories to which a further answer is required (c).

“Answers insufficiently.”—“With regard to an answer to interrogatories, what the Court has to consider is this simply whether the answer is insufficient, not to go into the question of the truthfulness of the answer, but to see whether it is sufficient or not, and if it is insufficient, then only can it require a further answer” (d). “When an answer is couched in a form which makes it embarrassing, that is to say, which prevents the person who asks for it from using it without having thrust upon him irrelevant matters as part of it, the answer is insufficient, and the proper course to pursue is to ask that a further answer shall be made (e).

Privilege.—Where in an answer to interrogatories the party interrogated declines to give further information on the ground of privilege and the privilege is properly claimed in law, the Court will not require a further answer to be put in, unless it is clearly satisfied, either from the nature of the subject-matter for which privilege is claimed, or from statements in the answer itself, or in documents so referred as to become part of the answer, that the claim for privilege cannot possibly be substantiated. The mere existence of reasonable suspicion which is sufficient to justify the Court in requiring a further affidavit of documents is not enough when a claim for privilege in an answer to interrogatories is sought to be falsified (f). See notes to r. 12 under the head “Conclusiveness of affidavit of documents,” on p. 476 below.

Consequence of failure to answer interrogatories.—See r. 21 below.

12. [R. S. C., O. 31, r. 12, S. 129.] Any party may, without filing any affidavit, apply to the Court for an order directing any other party to any suit to make discovery on oath of the documents which are or have been in his possession or power, relating to any matter in question therein. On the hearing of such application the Court may either refuse or adjourn the same, if satisfied that such discovery is not necessary, or not necessary at that stage of the suit, or make such order, either generally or limited to certain classes of documents, as may, in its discretion, be thought fit: Provided that discovery shall not be ordered when and so far as the Court shall be of opinion that it is not necessary either for disposing fairly of the suit or for saving costs.

O. 11, r. 12. Discovery and production of documents.—Having dealt with discovery by way of answer to interrogatories, we now proceed to consider another species of discovery called discovery of documents. The parties to a suit may have in their possession or power documents relating to the matters in question in the suit. These documents may be divided into two classes :—

- (i) those which the adversary is entitled to inspect, and
- (ii) those which he is not entitled to inspect.

Documents which belong to class (ii) are described and classified below, under the head “Grounds of objection to production of documents.” As to class (i) of documents we may say that the adversary is entitled to inspection of all documents which do not come within class (ii). Speaking generally, we may say that the adversary is entitled to inspection of all documents which do not of themselves constitute exclusively the party’s evidence of his case or title. But how is inspection to be obtained? If A wants to inspect documents in the possession of B which he is entitled to inspect, it is clear that he cannot inspect them unless they are produced by B. A must therefore call upon B to produce the documents. But how can A do this, unless he knows what documents are in the possession or power of B? To enable him to obtain this information, A is entitled to discovery from B of the documents in his possession or power. For this purpose, A may apply to the Court for an order requiring B to make an affidavit, called affidavit of documents, stating what documents are in his possession or power relating to the matters in dispute in the suit. On the order being made B is bound to make his affidavit of documents. If he fails to do so, he will be subjected to the penalties specified in r. 21 below.—After the affidavit of documents is made by B disclosing the documents, A may require B to produce for his inspection such of the documents as he is in law entitled to inspect.

Contents of affidavit of documents.—A party who is ordered to make his affidavit of documents, should set forth in the affidavit all documents which are or have been in his possession or power relating to all matters in question in the suit. As to documents which are not, but have been, in his possession or power he must state what has become of them and in whose possession they are, in order that the opposite party may be enabled to get production from the persons who have possession of them. For the same reason, if there are any documents in which he has a joint property with other persons not before the Court, he must state the names of those persons. Rule 13 provides that every affidavit of documents should also specify which of the documents therein set forth the declarant objects to produce for the inspection of the opposite party together with the grounds of such objection [see App. C, Form No. 5]. These grounds are three in number and are given below. The Court will go into these grounds when it is called upon to make an order for production of the documents in a party’s possession for the inspection of the opposite party (r. 14).

Grounds of objection to production of documents.—There are three grounds on which production of documents can be resisted as of right, (1) as disclosing the party’s evidence, (2) as being within the doctrine of legal professional privilege and (3) as being injurious to public interests. We proceed to consider these grounds in detail.

1. A party is not bound to produce for the inspection of his opponent documents which “of themselves evidence exclusively” the party’s own case or title (g).—Documents constituting evidence of the party's case or title are not protected, unless they are solely O. 11, r. 12. or exclusively evidence of it. Where a document is or may be evidence for the adversary as well as the party, the party cannot withhold inspection of it from the adversary (h), although his own evidence may be thus disclosed (i). It is not enough for a man to say such and such documents are the title deeds of his property: it is no ground for refusing their production, if they are necessary to support the adversary's case (j). But a document is protected from production and inspection if it exclusively evidences a party's own case, and does not support the adversary's case (k). To entitle the party to this protection, the privilege must be properly claimed, that is, he must state in his affidavit that the documents constitute evidence of his own case or title, that they contain nothing supporting or tending to support the adversary's case or title, and that they contain nothing impeaching his own case or title (l). As to discovery in actions of ejectment, see notes to r. 1, "What interrogatories may be allowed," on p. 466 above.

(g) Budden v. Wilkinson [1893] 2 Q. B. 432;

2. A party is not bound to produce any confidential communications between him and his legal adviser (m).—The reason of the rule is to enable persons to obtain legal advice safely and effectually (n). The following are amongst the confidential communications between a client and his legal adviser that are protected from production and inspection: (1) statement of facts drawn up by the client for submission to his solicitor and documents prepared by him for the purpose of providing the solicitor with evidence and information to conduct his case (o); (2) advice given by the solicitor with reference thereto (p); (3) entries in the solicitor's diary of communications between himself and his client (q); (4) memoranda or minutes made by the client of the communications between himself and the solicitor (r); (5) communications between solicitor and counsel with reference to the client's case (s); (6) draft pleadings (t); (7) case laid before counsel for his opinion and other briefs for counsel (u); (8) solicitor's bill of costs, it being virtually the solicitor's history of the transaction in which he was concerned (v). But the communication, to be privileged must be of a confidential nature (w). And, further, it must have been made to the legal adviser with a view to obtain professional advice (x). It is not necessary that the communication should be made either during an actual or even an expected litigation. A communication with a legal adviser is protected, though it relates to a transaction which is not the subject of litigation provided it be a communication made to him for the purpose of obtaining professional advice (y). But confidential communications between a principal and an agent who is not a legal agent (e.g., a commercial agent) are not privileged, whether they are made after litigation has become imminent and after legal

O. 11, r. 12. advice has been taken, or even after litigation has commenced (z). See Evidence Act, 1872, ss. 126, 129.

3. A party is not bound to produce any public official document if its production would be injurious to public interests (a).—This head of privilege applies as a rule when a party to a suit is a public officer. See Evidence Act, 1872, ss. 123-124.

In all the three heads of privilege mentioned above, the privilege must be claimed in the affidavit of documents, and the grounds of privilege must be sufficiently disclosed. If the affidavit of documents does not sufficiently raise the claim of privilege, the party may be allowed to put in a further affidavit in support of that claim (b).

Is a party bound to give discovery of documents which will tend to criminate him or expose him to a penalty or forfeiture? No, according to the English law (c). Yes, it would seem, according to the Indian law. See Evidence Act, s. 132, where the term "witness" obviously includes a party to a suit.

Conclusiveness of affidavit of documents: Further affidavit.—If a party states in his affidavit of documents that he has no documents relating to the matters in question in the suit other than those set forth in the affidavit, his oath is conclusive, and the other party cannot cross-examine upon it, nor adduce evidence to contradict it, nor administer interrogatories asking whether he has not in his possession or power documents other than those set forth in his affidavit (d). The oath of the party being conclusive, the Court will not order him to make a further affidavit of documents, though the opponent may state on oath that the party has got other documents in his possession (e), the reason being that in all questions of discovery the oath of the party giving the discovery is conclusive as against the oath of the party claiming the discovery (f). The only case in which the Court may require a party to make a further affidavit is where there is a reasonable probability or presumption or even ground for suspicion, derived from certain sources, that he has other relevant documents in his possession (g). The sources into which the Court may look for this purpose are (1) the affidavit of documents itself, (2) the documents therein referred to, and (3) the pleadings (h). Unless the affidavit is shewn from any of these sources to be insufficient, the general rule is that no further affidavit can be ordered. But this rule is qualified where the basis on which the affidavit has been made turns out to be wrong. Thus if the party making the affidavit has misconceived his case so that the Court is practically certain that if he had acted on a proper view of the law he would have disclosed further documents, then the Court will refuse to recognise the affidavit as conclusive and order a further affidavit (i).

The affidavit of documents is also conclusive as to the facts constituting the ground of objection to production. Thus if a party sets forth five documents in his affidavit, and objects to produce two of them on the assertion that they relate exclusively to his own title, and that they contain nothing tending to support the adversary's title, the Court will not go behind the affidavit (j), and will not order production, unless the Court is reasonably satisfied or reasonably certain from the sources specified in the preceding paragraph that the nature of the documents as described by the party has been misconceived by the party, or that the documents are of such a character that the party cannot properly make such an assertion (k). Mere suspicion that the documents are not of the character described by the party, though it is sufficient to justify the Court in ordering the party to make a further affidavit of documents (see preceding paragraph), does not entitle the Court to order their production (l).

In a suit for the price of materials supplied to the defendant in which the defence was that the materials were defective, the defendant objected to produce his engineer's report on the ground that it formed evidence of his own case exclusively, but the Court ordered production on the ground that the defendant had set forth the nature of the report in his written statement, and the statement showed that the report was not of the character described by the defendant (m).

Inspection by Court of documents for which privilege is claimed.—Where on an application for an order for inspection privilege is claimed for any document, the Court may inspect the document for the purpose of deciding as to the validity of the claim of privilege. See r. 19, sub-r. (2).

Sufficient description of documents.—It being one of the objects of the affidavit of documents to enable the Court to make an order for production of the documents mentioned therein, the affidavit ought to contain a sufficient description of the documents. A description will be held sufficient, if it is of such a character that if an order for production is made, the Court can determine whether the very documents that were ordered to be produced have actually been produced (n). Where there are numerous documents, the practice is to tie them up in bundles, to schedule the bundles and number the documents, or otherwise ear-mark them in such a way that the other party may ask for those which he wants to see (o).

When a party claims to withhold certain documents from production, although some description may be necessary, he need not give such a description as would enable the adversary to know their contents (p). Thus where privilege is claimed for letters, it is not necessary to state the dates or the names of the writers, nor such other particulars as might enable the opponent to discover indirectly the contents (q).

"Not necessary at that stage of the suit."—See notes to r. 6 under the head—"Not sufficiently material at that stage," on p. 470 above.

Relating to any matter in question in the suit.—Every document which will throw any light on the case is a document relating to a matter in dispute in the suit (r), though it may not be admissible in evidence (s). A document may not be admissible in evidence, and yet it may contain information which may either directly or indirectly enable the party seeking discovery either (1) to advance his own case or (2) damage that of his adversary, or which may fairly lead him to a train of inquiry which may have either of these two consequences (t). Every such document must be included in the affidavit of documents, and the opposite party is entitled to inspection of such

- O.11, r. 12. document. Thus a plaintiff may be required to produce for inspection of the defendant correspondence containing mere matter of opinion by a non-legal agent as to the prospect of the plaintiff's success in the case, though the correspondence may not be admissible in evidence (u).

Non-disclosure of documents.—"It is open to a litigant to refrain from producing any document that he considers irrelevant; if the other litigant is dissatisfied, it is for him to apply for an affidavit of documents, and he can obtain inspection and production of all that appears to him in such affidavit to be relevant and proper. If he fails so to do, neither he nor the Court at his suggestion is entitled to draw any inference as to the contents of any such documents. . . . It is for the litigant who desires to rely on the contents of documents to put them in evidence in the usual and proper way; if he fails to do so, no inference in his favour can be drawn as to the contents thereof" (v). But where an order for discovery is made upon a party, and it is alleged by him as to some of the documents that they may have been destroyed or may have perished, it is incumbent on him to give evidence of diligent search and of failure to find them; if no such evidence is given, the presumption arises that the contents of the documents not accounted for are, as regards the issue in dispute, unfavourable to that party (w).

Several plaintiffs or several defendants.—Where there are several plaintiffs or several defendants, all must join in making the affidavit of documents unless some specific reasons to the contrary are shown. The fact that some of the parties reside in England is no reason why they should be excused from making such affidavit (x).

Affidavit of documents from a minor or lunatic.—The next friend or guardian ad litem as the case may be of a minor or lunatic may now be required to make an affidavit of documents (r. 23).

Affidavit of documents from a co-defendant.—An affidavit of documents may be required by a defendant from a co-defendant, if there is an issue joined between them, but not otherwise (y). See notes to r. 1 "Opposite party", on p. 468 above.

Affidavit of documents from Advocate-General.—No order can be made against the Advocate-General, whether he be plaintiff or defendant, requiring him to give discovery on oath. Hence no affidavit of documents can be required from the Advocate-General. But an affidavit of documents may be required from the relators (z). See s. 92.

Affidavit of documents from Official Liquidator.—The Official Liquidator, being an officer of the Court, should not in the absence of special circumstances be required to make an affidavit as to documents in his possession, though he is bound to produce to the adverse litigant the documents which the latter requires to see (a).

Sealing up parts of documents.—Where one part of a document relates to matters in dispute in the suit and another part does not, the latter may be sealed up and so concealed from inspection. Similarly where protection from discovery can be claimed for one part of a document and not for another part, the part which can be Affidavit of documents.

See notes to r. 12 of this Order, "Grounds of objection to production of documents," on p. 474 above.

14. [R. S. C., O. 31, r. 14, S. 130] It shall be lawful for the Court, at any time during the pendency of any suit, to order the production by any party thereto, upon oath, of such of the documents in his possession or power, relating to any matter in question in such suit, as the Court shall think right; and the Court may deal with such documents, when produced, in such manner as shall appear just.

Production of documents.

Production of documents.—Under this rule the Court has no discretion to refuse an order for production unless the documents are privileged (d). As to the three heads of privilege, see notes to r. 12 "Grounds of objection to production of documents," on p. 474 above. See also notes to the same rule under the head "Conclusiveness of affidavit of documents," on p. 476 above and "Sealing up parts of document," on p. 478 above.

Indian Evidence Act, ss. 163-164.—Under s. 163 if A calls for a document which he has given B notice to produce, and the document is produced in Court and inspected by A, B can compel A to put the document in evidence. Under s. 164 a party refusing to produce a document cannot use it in evidence without the consent of the other side or the order of the Court.

Waiver of privilege.—Where a document is privileged, the fact that a portion of it has been read out by the plaintiff's solicitor to the defendant's solicitor does not amount to a waiver of privilege on the part of the plaintiff as regards the part not read (e).

Partner.—One partner of a firm represents the other partners for the purpose of production of documents (f).

Revision.—The High Court will not in revision interfere where a lower Court, in the exercise of its discretion, refuses inspection of documents produced before it under this rule (g).

Right to take copies.—The inspecting party is entitled to take copies of documents produced for inspection (h). In a proper case, as where a document is alleged to be forged, the Court may allow a party to a suit to take photographs of documents in the possession of the other party (i).

15. [R. S. C., O. 31, r. 15, S. 131.] Every party to a suit shall be entitled at any time to give notice to any other party, in whose pleadings or affidavits reference is made to any document, to produce such document for the inspection of the party giving such notice, or of his pleader, and to permit him or them to take copies thereof; and any party not complying with such notice shall not afterwards be at liberty to put any such document in evidence on his behalf in such suit unless he shall satisfy the Court that such document relates only to his own title, he being a defendant to the suit, or that he had some other cause or excuse which the Court shall deem sufficient for not complying with such notice, in which case the Court may allow the same to be put in evidence on such terms as to costs and otherwise as the Court shall think fit.

Inspection of documents referred to in pleadings or affidavits.

Inspection of documents referred to in pleadings and affidavits.—Rules 15 to 18 are confined to documents mentioned in the pleadings or affidavits. They are intended to give the opposite party the same advantage as if the documents referred to had been fully set out in the pleadings (j).

The machinery for the production of documents is of two kinds. We have first rule 12 of this Order which enables a party without filing any affidavit to apply for an order directing any other party to the suit to make discovery on oath of the documents in his possession or power relating to any matter in question in the suit. Under that rule, a defendant is not, as a rule, entitled to discovery before he has filed his written statement (k). Rule 15 provides for immediate inspection of any documents which a party has referred to in his pleadings or affidavits. Under this rule, a defendant is entitled to inspection of documents referred to in the pleadings, although he has not filed his written statement (l). But he is not entitled, as a rule, to inspection of documents that are not referred to in the pleadings unless he has filed his written statement (m).

A party who is required under this rule to produce documents referred to in his pleadings for the inspection of the opposite party may claim privilege for the document. It is not to be supposed that where a document is referred to in the pleadings, all privilege with regard to it is gone. The rule only says that "if a party will not produce a document to which he has referred in his pleadings, he shall not afterwards be at liberty to put such document in evidence. That is the penalty. He may prefer to lose part of his claim rather than produce the document. [This] rule does not take away the privilege of the documents, but only prevents them from being put in evidence unless produced " (n).

rr. 15-17.

Documents referred to in pleadings or affidavits.—Where a plaintiff by his pleadings refers to letters written by himself, he is not bound to produce copies of those letters for the inspection of the defendant, there being no reference to copies in the pleadings (o).

As regards exhibits to an affidavit, it has been held that "any one who has a right to see an affidavit has also a right to see an exhibit referred to in the affidavit so as to be made part of it, just as if it were annexed to the affidavit" (p).

A party is entitled under this rule to inspection of letters referred to in an affidavit of the opposite party, though the affidavit has not been filed, provided it is sworn and a copy thereof is furnished to him (q).

Inspection by party or his pleader.—No one is entitled under this rule to inspection except a party or his pleader. The term "party" includes the authorised agent of the party (r). But if such agent was formerly in the employ of the opposite party and in charge of his books, the Court ought not to permit inspection to be taken by him (s).

17. [R. S. C., O. 31, r. 17, s. 132.] The party to whom such notice is given shall, within ten days from the receipt of such notice, deliver to the party giving the same a notice stating a time within three days from the delivery thereof at which the documents, or such of them as he does not object to produce, may be inspected at the office of his pleader, or in the case of bankers' books or other books of account or books in constant use for the purposes of any trade or business, at their usual place of custody, and stating which (if any) of the documents he objects to produce, and on what ground. Such notice shall be in Form No. 8 in Appendix C, with such variations as circumstances may require.

18. [R. S. C., O. 31, r. 18, Ss. 133, 134.] (1) Where the party served with notice under rule 15 omits to give such notice of a time for inspection or objects to give inspection, or offers inspection elsewhere than at the office of his pleader, the Court may, on the application of the party desiring it, make an order for inspection in such place and in such manner as it may think fit: Provided that the order shall not be made when and so far as the Court shall be of opinion that it is not necessary either for disposing fairly of the suit or for saving costs.

(2) Any application to inspect documents, except such as are referred to in the pleadings, particulars or affidavits of the party against whom the application is made or disclosed in his affidavit of documents, shall be founded upon an affidavit showing of what documents inspection is sought, that the party applying is entitled to inspect them, and that they are in the possession or power of the other party. The Court shall not make such order for inspection of such documents when and so far as the Court shall be of opinion that it is not necessary either for disposing fairly of the suit or for saving costs.

"Served with notice."—No order for inspection can be made under this rule unless notice has been served under r. 15 (v).

Sub-rule (2).—This sub-rule provides for the inspection amongst others of documents not disclosed in the affidavit of documents, and the Court may under this sub-rule direct a party to give inspection of such documents. The principle that an affidavit of documents is conclusive as to the documents set forth therein [see p. 476 above] is no answer to an application under this sub-rule for inspection of documents not disclosed therein (w).

Appeal.—No appeal lies under the Code from an order for inspection. Nor does an appeal lie under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent, for an order directing inspection to be given is not a judgment within the meaning of that clause (x).

Verified copies.

(2) Where on an application for an order for inspection privilege is claimed for any document, it shall be lawful for the Court to inspect the document for the purpose of deciding as to the validity of the claim of privilege.

(3) The Court may, on the application of any party to a suit at any time, and whether an affidavit of documents shall or shall not have already been ordered or made, make an order requiring any other party to state by affidavit whether any one or more specific documents, to be specified in the application, is or are, or has or have at any time been, in his possession or power; and, if not then in his possession, when he parted with the same and what has become thereof. Such application shall be made on an affidavit stating that in the belief of the deponent the party against whom the application is made has, or has at some time had, in his possession or power the document or documents specified in the application, and that they relate to the matters in question in the suit, or to some of them.

Specific documents.—To justify an application under sub-r. (3), the party making the application must in his affidavit name and specify, so that they can be identified, the particular documents of which he desires discovery. It is not sufficient to make a general affidavit based on a priori reasoning that certain classes of documents must be in his opponent's possession or power (y).

20. [R. S. C., O. 31, r. 20, S. 135.] Where the party from whom discovery of any kind or inspection is sought objects to the same, or any part thereof, the Court may, if satisfied that the right to Premature discovery.

- r. 20-22.

Determination of issue to decide upon right to inspection.—The object of the rule is to enable the Court to decide an issue in a suit, as distinguished from the suit itself, for the purposes of discovery (z). See notes to r. 6. "Not sufficiently material at that stage," p. 470 above.

21. [R. S. C., O. 31, r. 21, S. 136.] Where any party fails to comply with any order to answer interrogatories, or for discovery or inspection of documents, he shall, if a plaintiff, be liable to have his suit dismissed for want of prosecution, and if a defendant, to have his defence, if any, struck out, and to be placed in the same position as if he had not defended, and the party interrogating or seeking discovery or inspection may apply to the Court for an order to that effect, and an order may be made accordingly.
- Non-compliance with order for discovery.

Dismissal of suit.—This rule cannot be applied unless there has been an order for discovery or inspection (a). And even where such an order has been made, it is only when the default is wilful, and as a last resort, that the Court should dismiss the suit or strike out the defence (b). If the parties concerned are purda-nashin ladies, this should be taken into account before making the order (c).

Additional consequence of failure to answer or give inspection.—Besides the consequences laid down in this rule, a party before a High Court who has failed to answer or give inspection is liable to be committed for contempt by that Court. This power has been conferred on Chartered High Courts by their Letters Patent (d). An order of committal for contempt is appealable according to the Bombay decisions (e), but not according to the Allahabad decisions (f).

Appeal.—An appeal lies from an order under this rule [O. 43, r. 1, cl. (f)].

22. [New. R. S. C., O. 31, r. 24.] Any party may, at the trial of a suit, use in evidence any one or more of the answers or any part of an answer of the opposite party to interrogatories without putting in the others or the whole of such

rr. 1, 2.

Notice of admission of case.

Different kinds of admissions.—The object of obtaining admissions is to do away with the necessity of proving facts that are admitted [see Evidence Act, 1872, s. 58]. Admissions are of three kinds, namely,—

I. Admissions in pleading—

- (1) actual, that is, those contained in the pleadings (O. 7, r. 5), or in answer to interrogatories (O. 11, r. 22).
- (2) constructive, that is, those which are merely the consequence of the form of pleading adopted (O. 8, rr. 3, 4, 5).

II. Admissions by agreement.

III. Admissions by notice.

Admissions by notice are dealt with in this Order.

The importance of admission consists in the fact that either party may, at any stage of the suit, move for judgment on the admissions made by the other side (r. 6).

2. [R. S. C., O. 32, r. 2, S. 128.] Either party may call upon the other party to admit any document saving all just exceptions ; and in case of refusal or neglect to admit, after such Notice to admit documents.

O: 12, rr. 2-6. notice, the costs of proving any such document shall be paid by the party so neglecting or refusing, whatever the result of the suit may be, unless the Court otherwise directs; and no costs of proving any document shall be allowed unless such notice is given, except where the omission to give the notice is, in the opinion of the Court, a saving of expense.

Admissions between co-defendants.—Admissions between co-defendants, to which the plaintiff is not a party, cannot be entered as evidence against the plaintiff (g).

3. [New. R. S. C., O. 32, r. 3.] A notice to admit documents shall be in Form No. 9 in Appendix C, with such variations as circumstances from of Notice. may require.

4. [New. R. S. C., O. 32, r. 4.] Any party may, by notice in writing, at any time not later than nine days before the day fixed for the hearing, call on any other party to admit, for the purposes of the suit only, any specific fact or facts mentioned in such notice. And in case of refusal or neglect to admit the same within six days after service of such notice, or within such further time as may be allowed by the Court, the costs of proving such fact or facts shall be paid by the party so neglecting or refusing, whatever the result of the suit may be, unless the Court otherwise directs: Provided that any admission made in pursuance of such notice is to be deemed to be made only for the purposes of the particular suit, and not as an admission to be used against the party on any other occasion or in favour of any person other than the party giving the notice: Provided also that the Court may at any time allow any party to amend or withdraw any admission so made on such terms as may be just.

5. [New. R. S. C., O. 32, r. 5.] A notice to admit facts shall be in Form No. 10 in Appendix C, and admissions of facts shall be in Form No. 11 in Appendix C, with such variations as circumstances Form of admissions. may require.

6. [New. R. S. C., O. 32, r. 6.] Any party may at any stage of a suit, where admissions of fact have been made, either on the pleadings, or otherwise, apply to the Court for such Judgment on admissions.

judgment or order as upon such admissions he may be entitled O. 12, r. 6. to, without waiting for determination of any other question between the parties: and the Court may upon such application make such order, or give such judgment, as the Court may think just.

Scope of the rule.—This rule is new. It is a reproduction of O. 32, r. 6, of the English Rules. It enables either party at any stage of the suit to move for judgment on the admissions which have been made by the other side. Either party may, by availing himself of this rule, get rid of so much of the suit as to which there is no controversy (h). The rule, however, is permissive; it does not preclude a party, who does not avail himself of it and proceeds to trial in the ordinary way, from relying at the trial on the admissions made by the opposite party (i).

"The Court may make such order or give such judgment as the Court may think just."—A judgment on admissions is not a matter of right, but is in the discretion of the Court. If a case involves questions which cannot be conveniently disposed of on a motion under this rule, the Court may, in the exercise of its discretion, refuse the motion (j).

There is no hard and fast rule that where the defendant admits part of the plaintiff's claim and denies the rest of the claim, the Court should, if it gives judgment under this rule for the plaintiff as to the portion of the claim admitted by the defendant, refuse to allow the plaintiff to proceed with the suit as to the remainder of his claim. If there is a clear and unambiguous admission by the defendant as to part of the plaintiff's claim, the Court has jurisdiction to enter judgment as to that part of the plaintiff's claim, and it is in its discretion, having regard to the nature of the case and the allegations contained in the pleadings and the admissions made in Court, whether it should allow the plaintiff to proceed to prove the remainder of his claim (k). A sues B for Rs. 6,800. B admits that only Rs. 4,500 are due, and alleges as to the rest of A's claim that it was in respect of goods as to which there was a separate arrangement between the parties. The issue as to the balance of A's claim being an issue independent of the other part of the claim, the Court may pass judgment for A for Rs. 4,500, and give leave to A to prove his claim to the balance. It is clear that even if the issue as to the balance of A's claim were decided in B's favour, it would not, having regard to B's admission, reduce A's claim below Rs. 4,500 (l).

In the United Telephone Co. v. Donohoe (m), the plaintiffs sued the defendant for infringement of a patent, claiming injunction and damages. The defendant admitted ten instances of infringement, but denied he had committed any others. The plaintiffs thereupon moved for judgment upon the admissions in the pleadings. In the Court of first instance the Vice-Chancellor granted an injunction against infringement by the defendant of the plaintiff's patent, but he refused an enquiry as to damages. The Court of Appeal held that the plaintiffs were entitled to an enquiry as to damages, but that it must be limited to the instances of infringement admitted; and that the judgment having been obtained upon a motion for judgment upon the pleadings, the plaintiffs

O. 12, r. 6. were bound to take the negative as well as the affirmative allegations therein. Referring to this case, Sanderson, C.J., said in the Calcutta case cited above (n) that the question whether the Judge, who in the first instance heard the application, would have had jurisdiction to give judgment on the admissions and to allow the plaintiffs to proceed to prove the rest of their claim as to the other alleged infringements, if such an application had been made, was not before the Court.

Admissions on pleadings.—Under this rule either party may move for judgment upon admissions of fact made on the pleadings or otherwise. Admissions in pleadings are either actual or constructive. Actual admissions consist of facts expressly admitted either in pleadings or in answer to interrogatories [O. 11, r. 22]. The patent case cited in the preceding paragraph is an instance of actual admissions. Constructive admissions, on the other hand, are admissions which are inferred or implied from pleadings as a consequence of the form of pleading adopted [O. 8, rr. 3, 4, 5]. Constructive admissions usually arise where a defendant has not specifically dealt with some allegation of fact in the plaint of which he does not admit the truth [O. 8, r. 3], for as we have seen, every allegation of fact in the plaint, if not denied specifically or by necessary implication, or stated to be not admitted in the written statement, will be taken to be admitted except as against persons under disability [O. 8, r. 5]. Constructive admissions also arise where a defendant denies an allegation of fact in the plaint evasively and does not answer the point of substance [O. 8, r. 4].

Illustrations.

1. A, alleging that he and B having agreed to carry on certain business in partnership, draft articles of partnership were prepared and approved by B, and that they both thereupon proceeded with the partnership undertaking, sues B for a declaration that he and B were partners and claims that the partnership may be dissolved. B in his written statement admits that he agreed to enter into partnership as alleged, but adds that "the terms of the arrangement between himself and the plaintiff were not definitely agreed upon as alleged." This is an evasive denial of the fact of partnership (O. 8, r. 4), and it will therefore be construed as an admission by B of the partnership. A is therefore entitled under this rule to a decree for dissolution of partnership, without adducing any evidence to prove the partnership. But though the written statement will be construed as an admission of the fact of partnership, it will not be construed as an admission of the terms of the partnership. B may therefore claim an inquiry by the decree as to the terms of the arrangement of partnership, and if such inquiry is claimed, the Court will direct it by its decree (o).

2. A defendant, by his written statement, simply "puts the plaintiff to proof of the several allegations in the plaint." The denial not being specific (O. 8, r. 3), the defendant will be deemed to have admitted the facts alleged in the plaint (O. 8, r. 5), so as to entitle the plaintiff to a decree under this rule without adducing any evidence in support of his case (p).

In applying the present rule in India, it is to be noted that, where a plaintiff applies for a decree upon constructive admissions in a written statement, the Court may in its discretion refuse to pass the decree, if it thinks, in the special circumstances of the case, that the defendant must not be held to have admitted facts not specifically denied in his written statement (q). See the proviso to r. 5 of O. 8, and notes thereto, p. 439.

An order on admissions on the pleadings will not be made, unless the admissions are O. 12, r. 6. clear and unequivocal (r). Further, a plaintiff moving for judgment on admissions in the defendant's written statement must have a clear case, and the mere admission by the defendant of a right asserted by the plaintiff, but which has in fact no existence in law, is not sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to a judgment establishing his right (s).

Judgment upon admissions made otherwise than on pleadings.—A judgment may be given under this rule not only upon admissions made on the pleadings, but upon admissions otherwise made. The words "or otherwise" in this rule are not confined to admissions made under r. 1 or r.4 of this Order, but are of general application, and justify the giving of an immediate judgment when an admission is made by letter of facts which show that the defendant has no defence to the action (t). A judgment may be given under this rule even upon a verbal admission where the same is clearly proved (u).

Orders which may be made under this rule.—This rule "was framed for the express purpose, that if there was no dispute between the parties, and if there was on the pleadings such an admission as to make it plain that the plaintiff was entitled to a particular order, he should be able to obtain that order at once upon motion. It must, however, be such an admission of facts as would show that the plaintiff is clearly entitled to the order asked for, whether it be in the nature of a decree, or a judgment, or anything else. The rule was not meant to apply when there is any serious question of law to be argued. But if there is an admission on the pleadings which clearly entitled the plaintiff to an order, then the intention was that he should not have to wait, but might at once obtain any order which could have been made on an original hearing of the action" (v). An order amounting to what is called a preliminary decree in this Code may appropriately be made under this rule upon a simple motion. Where such an order was applied for under the corresponding English rule by a plaintiff in a suit for partition, and the defendant contended that that would be giving a decree to the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff should wait until the action was set down for trial, the Court held that the plaintiff was entitled to an order directing the usual inquiries upon the admissions of the defendant, and that he was not bound to wait (w) [O. 20, r. 18]. Such orders have also been made in administration actions (x) [O. 20, r. 13], in actions for dissolution of partnership (y) [O. 20, r. 15], in actions for partnership accounts (z) [O. 20, r. 15], in actions for accounts between principal and agent (a) [O. 20, r. 16], and in actions for the execution of the trusts of a settlement (b).

Practice.—Motions in England under the corresponding English rule are brought on upon an ordinary motion day after notice to the other side. As to form of application, see Daniell's Ch. Forms, 270 The practice in England is, when an order is made amounting to what is called a preliminary decree in this Code, to adjourn the further hearing of the case without requiring any further prior hearing, the words generally used in the order being, "and without requiring any further prior hearing than this motion of the said cause, the further hearing of the said cause is adjourned" (c). O. 12, rr. 6-9. “At any stage.”—A plaintiff may move for judgment upon admissions in the written statement at any stage of the suit, and notwithstanding that he has joined issue on the defence (d).

Co-plaintiffs.—An application under this rule for an order against a defendant on admissions of fact must be made by all the plaintiffs, and not merely by some of them. If the application is made by some of the plaintiffs only, it must be refused (e).

Withdrawal of admission.—Where it is shown that an admission was made by mistake, the party may be allowed to amend his pleading under O. 6, r. 17, for the purpose of withdrawing it upon such terms as to the Court may appear just (f).

7. [New. R. S. C., O. 32, r. 7.] An affidavit of the pleader or his clerk, of the due signature of any admissions made in pursuance of any notice to admit documents or facts, shall be sufficient evidence of such admissions, if evidence thereof is required.

Affidavit of signature.

8. [New. R. S. C., O. 32, r. 8.] Notice to produce documents shall be in Form No. 12 in Appendix C, with such variations as circumstances may require. An affidavit of the pleader, or his clerk, of the service of any notice to produce, and of the time when it was served, with a copy of the notice to produce, shall in all cases be sufficient evidence of the service of the notice, and of the time when it was served.

Notice to produce documents.

Notice to produce documents.—It is always desirable, when a document is in the possession or power of the opposite party, to give him notice to produce the same, for unless such notice is given, secondary evidence of the document cannot be given : see Indian Evidence Act, 1872, s. 65, cl. (a), and s. 66.

9. [New. R. S. C., O. 32, r. 9.] If a notice to admit or produce specifies documents which are not necessary, the costs occasioned thereby shall be borne by the party giving such notice.

ORDER XIII.

Production, Impounding and Return of Documents.

O.13, r. 1. 1. [Ss. 138, 140] (1) The parties or their pleaders shall produce, at the first hearing of the suit, all the documentary evidence of every description in their possession or power, on which they intend to rely, and which has not already been filed in Court, and all documents which the Court has ordered to be produced. O. 13,

rr. 1-3.

(2) The Court shall receive the documents so produced; provided that they are accompanied by an accurate list thereof prepared in such form as the High Court directs.

“Shall produce at the first hearing.”—This rule does not exclude the discretion of the Court to receive documentary evidence at a subsequent stage of the proceedings (g). See r. 2 below.

Form of list of documents produced by parties.—See App. H, Form no. 5.

2. [S. 139.] No documentary evidence in the possession or power of any party which should have been but has not been produced in accordance with the requirements of rule 1 shall be received at any subsequent stage of the proceedings unless good cause is shown to the satisfaction of the Court for the non-production thereof; and the Court receiving any such evidence shall record the reasons for so doing.

Effect of non-production of documents.

“Unless good cause is shown.”—This rule has been enacted to prevent fraud by the late production of suspicious documents. But no suspicion can attach to certified copies of public documents, such as records of Government or records of judicial proceedings. Such copies therefore may be received in evidence though they have not been produced at the first hearing (h). The rule, however, is not confined to public documents only. The Court may, in its discretion, admit other documents also at a subsequent stage of the proceedings (i). See notes to r. 1 above.

Appeal.—The fact that further documentary evidence is admitted after the first hearing is not a good ground of appeal (j). Nor can an appellate Court reject evidence admitted by the Court of first instance simply on that ground (k).

3. [S. 140.] The Court may at any stage of the suit reject any document which it considers irrelevant or otherwise inadmissible, recording the grounds of such rejection.

Rejection of irrelevant or inadmissible documents.

Rejection of inadmissible documents.—Questions as to the admissibility of evidence should be decided as they arise, and should not be reserved until judgment in the case is given (l).

rr. 3-5. decision is open to appeal, it is better to admit than to exclude the document (m).

4. [S. 141.] (1) Subject to the provisions of the next following sub-rule, there shall be endorsed on every document which has been admitted in evidence in the suit the following particulars, namely :—

Endorsements on documents admitted in evidence.

- (a) the number and title of the suit,
- (b) the name of the person producing the document,
- (c) the date on which it was produced, and
- (d) a statement of its having been so admitted ; and the endorsement shall be signed or initialled by the Judge.

(2) Where a document so admitted is an entry in a book, account or record, and a copy thereof has been substituted for the original under the next following rule, the particulars aforesaid shall be endorsed on the copy and the endorsement thereon shall be signed or initialled by the Judge.

“ Or initialled. ”—These words which occur after the word “ signed ” in sub-rr. (1) and (2), are new.

“ Shall be endorsed. ”—The rule as to endorsement of documents admitted in evidence must be strictly followed. In Sadik Husain Khan v. Hashim Ali Khan (n), where some of the documents were not so endorsed, the Judicial Committee said : “ Their Lordships, with a view of insisting on the observance of the wholesome provisions of this rule, will, in order to prevent injustice, be obliged in future on the hearing of Indian appeals to refuse to read or permit to be used any document not indorsed in the manner required.”

5. [S. 141A.] (1) Save in so far as is otherwise provided by the Bankers’ Books Evidence Act, 1891, where a document admitted in evidence in the suit is an entry in a letter-book or a shop-book or other account in current use, the party on whose behalf the book or account is produced may furnish a copy of the entry.

or an entry in a book or account belonging to a person other than a party on whose behalf the book or account is produced, the Court may require a copy of the entry to be furnished—

- (a) where the record, book or account is produced on behalf of a party, then by that party, or
- (b) where the record, book or account is produced in obedience to an order of the Court acting of its own motion, then by either or any party.

(3) Where a copy of an entry is furnished under the foregoing provisions of this rule, the Court shall, after causing the copy to be examined, compared and certified in manner mentioned in rule 17 of Order VII, mark the entry and cause the book, account or record in which it occurs to be returned to the person producing it.

Bankers' Books Evidence Act.—See notes to O. 7, r. 17, p. 436 above.

Stamp.—A copy or extract from an entry in an account book filed under the provisions of this rule and rule 7, does not require any stamp (c).

6. [S. 142.] Where a document relied on as evidence by either party is considered by the Court to be inadmissible in evidence, there shall be endorsed thereon the particulars mentioned in clauses (a), (b) and (c) of rule 4, sub-rule (1), together with a statement of its having been rejected, and the endorsement shall be signed or initialled by the Judge.

Endorsements on documents rejected as inadmissible in evidence.

“ Or initialled.”—These words are new.

7. [S. 142A.] (1) Every document which has been admitted in evidence, or a copy thereof where a copy has been substituted for the original under rule 5, shall form part of the record of the suit.

Recording of admitted and return of rejected documents.

(2) Documents not admitted in evidence shall not form part of the record and shall be returned to the persons respectively producing them.

O. 13,
rr. 8-10.

8. [S. 143.] Notwithstanding anything contained in rule 5 or rule 7 of this Order or in rule 17 of Order VII, the Court may, if it sees sufficient cause, direct any document or book produced before it in any suit to be impounded and kept in the custody of an officer of the Court, for such period and subject to such conditions as the Court thinks fit.

Court may order any document to be impounded.

9. [S. 144.] (1) Any person, whether a party to the suit or not, desirous of receiving back any document produced by him in the suit and placed on the record shall, unless the document is impounded under rule 8, be entitled to receive back the same.

Return of admitted documents.

(a) where the suit is one in which an appeal is not allowed, when the suit has been disposed of, and

(b) where the suit is one in which an appeal is allowed, when the Court is satisfied that the time for preferring an appeal has elapsed and that no appeal has been preferred or, if an appeal has been preferred, when the appeal has been disposed of :

Provided that a document may be returned at any time earlier than that prescribed by this rule if the person applying therefor delivers to the proper officer a certified copy to be substituted for the original and undertakes to produce the original if required to do so :

Provided also that no document shall be returned which, by force of the decree, has become wholly void or useless.

(2) On the return of a document admitted in evidence, a receipt shall be given by the person receiving it.

The words "and undertakes to produce the original if required to do so" are new.

10. [S. 137.] (1) The Court may of its own motion, and may in its discretion upon the application of any of the parties to a suit, send for, either from its own records or from any other Court, the record of any other suit or proceeding, and inspect the same.

Court may send for papers from its own records or from other Courts.

(2) Every application made under this rule shall (unless the Court otherwise directs) be supported by an affidavit showing how the record is material to the suit in which the application is made, and that the applicant cannot without unreasonable delay or expense obtain a duly authenticated copy of the record or of such portion thereof as the applicant requires, or that the production of the original is necessary for the purposes of justice. O. 13,
rr. 10, 11.

(3) Nothing contained in this rule shall be deemed to enable the Court to use in evidence any document which under the law of evidence would be inadmissible in the suit.

11. [S. 145.] The provisions herein contained as to documents shall, so far as may be, apply to all other material objects producible as evidence.

Provisions as to documents applied material objects.

ORDER XIV.

Settlement of Issues and Determination of Suit on Issues of Law or on Issues agreed upon.

1. [S. 146.] (1) Issues arise when a material proposition of fact or law is affirmed by the one party and denied by the other. O. 14, r. 1.

Framing of issues.

(2) Material propositions are those propositions of law or fact which a plaintiff must allege in order to show a right to sue or a defendant must allege in order to constitute his defence.

(3) Each material proposition affirmed by one party and denied by the other shall form the subject of a distinct issue.

(4) Issues are of two kinds: (a) issues of fact, (b) issues of law.

(5) At the first hearing of the suit the Court shall, after reading the plaint and the written statements, if any, and after such examination of the parties as may appear necessary, ascertain upon what material propositions of fact or of law the parties are at variance, and shall thereupon proceed

O. 14, r. 1. to frame and record the issues on which the right decision of the case appears to depend.

(6) Nothing in this rule requires the Court to frame and record issues where the defendant at the first hearing of the suit makes no defence.

Of the framing of issues.—The plaint and written statement in a suit are called pleadings (O 8, r. 1). Section 58 of the Evidence Act enacts that no fact need be proved at the hearing which a party has admitted by his pleadings, unless the Court requires proof thereof. Admissions on pleadings may be either actual or constructive (O. 8, rr. 3, 4, 5). Issues are to be framed in respect only of those facts which have been denied or not admitted. Issues, however, are not to be framed on all points in dispute between the parties, but on those points only on which the right decision of the case depends. The practice of raising issues which do not state the main questions in the suit, but only various subsidiary matters of fact upon which there is not agreement between the parties, is embarrassing, and must be avoided (p). When an issue is framed as to a proposition of fact, it is said to be an issue of fact; when an issue is framed as to a proposition of law, it is said to be an issue of law. Thus if A sues B for damages for breach of a contract, and B pleads by his written statement (1) that the contract is void as being against public policy, (2) that no damages have been sustained by A by reason of the breach, (3) that the Court has no jurisdiction to try the suit, and (4) that the claim is time-barred, the following issues will be framed :—

- (1) whether the agreement is a valid and binding contract ?
- (2) whether A has sustained any damages by reason of the breach of the contract ?
- (3) whether the Court has jurisdiction to entertain the suit ? and
- (4) whether the claim is barred by limitation ?

Of the above issues, the first is an issue of mixed law and fact, the second is an issue of fact, and the third and fourth are issues of law. No issue should be framed as regards the breach of the agreement, for the breach is not denied by B.

In a recent case Scott, C.J., said : " In my opinion issues should be confined to questions of law arising on the pleadings and such questions of fact as it would be necessary for the Judge to frame for decision by the jury in a jury trial at nisi prius in England " (q).

Object of framing issues.—The object of framing issues is to direct the attention of the parties to the principal questions on which they are at variance, as also to bring such questions clearly before the Court, so that the Court may know which questions it has to determine to decide the case. Besides this, there is another advantage that attaches to the system of framing issues, namely, the exclusion of irrelevant evidence. As stated by their Lordship of the Privy Council, " Whatever system of pleading may exist, the sole object of it is that each side may be fully alive to the questions that are about to be argued, in order that they may have an opportunity of bringing forward such evidence as may be appropriate to the issues " (r). All evidence must be relevant to the issues. No evidence should be admitted that is foreign to the issues. Hence great care should be taken in framing issues. They must not be too general and they must be framed in such a way that the attention of the parties may be sufficiently directed to the main questions of fact necessary to be decided, so that it may not be open to them to say that they were prevented from adducing evidence by the form of issues (s).

Where a material fact in the plaint is "not denied either specifically or by necessary implication" in the written statement.—A material fact alleged in a plaint may either be (1) admitted, or (2) not admitted, or (3) denied in the written statement, or (4) it may neither be admitted nor denied. If it is admitted no issue is to be framed on it. If it is not admitted or if it is denied, the Court must frame an issue upon it. If it is neither admitted nor denied, it shall, by virtue of the provisions of O. 8, r. 5, be taken to be admitted (t). But the rigour of O. 8, r. 5, is considerably relaxed by the proviso to that rule, and the Court may in special cases require the plaintiff to prove it in the ordinary way (u), in which case an issue must be framed.

"The duty of raising issues rests under the Code of Civil Procedure on the Court, and it would be unsafe to presume from the failure of the Court to raise the necessary issues an intention of the defendant to admit the facts which the plaintiff was bound to prove" (v).

Where a material allegation in the plaint is "denied" in the written statement, but no issue is framed in respect thereof.—Where a material fact stated in the plaint is denied in the written statement, the Court must frame an issue on the fact denied. What is the consequence if no issue is framed on the fact? The answer depends on the following considerations. If, though no issue is framed on the fact, the parties adduce evidence on the fact and discuss it before the Court, and the Court decides the point, as if there was an issue framed on it, the decision will not be set aside in appeal on the ground merely that no issue was framed on the fact. The reason is that mere omission to frame an issue is not fatal to the trial of a suit (w). But if the point denied in the written statement is not tried at all, or where it is tried, it is tried imperfectly so as to cause failure of justice, the case will in appeal be remanded for a re-trial after framing the necessary issue (x). In other words, omission to frame an issue is an irregularity which may or may not affect the disposal of a suit on the merits. If it does, the appellate Court should remand the case for a new trial to the lower Court after framing the necessary issue. If it does not, the appellate Court should not remand the case (s. 99). In Mitna v. Syud Fuzl (y) their Lordships of the Privy Council said:—

"In this case the omission to raise the issues was brought before the notice of the appellate Court; the appellate Court expressed its regret, and their Lordships are glad to observe that it did express its regret, that the Principal Sudder Ameen had omitted to settle the issues. The [appellate] Court, however, nevertheless conceived that it was not under any positive obligation to remand the case: but seeing that the parties had gone to trial knowing what the real question between them was, that the evidence had been taken, and that the conclusion had been in the opinion of the appellate Court correctly drawn from that evidence, they thought it within their competence to affirm that decision without sending the case back for a re-trial. Their Lordships sitting here are not prepared to say that the Court had not power to do so under the 354th section [now O. 41, r. 25] of the Civil Procedure Code. Their Lordships think that, under all the circumstances of the case, substantial justice having been done, there has not been that fatal mis-trial of the cause which vitiates all the proceedings and renders a new trial necessary."

Wrong issue.—If the first Court frames and tries wrong issues, the appellate Court should lay down the proper issues, and remand the case for a new trial (2). It is, however, different where the first Court frames a wrong issue for decision, but it appears from the judgment that there is a finding on the point which would have been raised if the correct issue had been framed. In such a case the appellate Court may not remand the case (a).

Issue where case disclosed in evidence is different from that disclosed in plaint.—If a case not alleged by the plaintiff in his plaint is disclosed in the evidence, the Court ought not to allow the plaintiff to set up that case without raising a specific issue on it, and giving the defendant an opportunity of meeting it (b).

2. [S. 146, 6th para.] Where issues both of law and of fact arise in the same suit, and the Court is of opinion that the case or any part thereof may be disposed of on the issues of law only, it shall try those issues first, and for that purpose may, if it thinks fit, postpone the settlement of the issues of fact until after the issues of law have been determined.

The words "or any part thereof" are new.

3. [S. 147.] The Court may frame the issues from all or any of the following materials :—

Issues of law and of fact.
Materials from which issues may be framed.

- (a) allegations made on oath by the parties, or by any persons present on their behalf, or made by the pleaders of such parties ;
- (b) allegations made in the pleadings or in answers to interrogatories delivered in the suit ;
- (c) the contents of documents produced by either party.

Issues must not be inconsistent with pleadings.—It is a fundamental rule of law that the decision in a suit "should be founded upon a case either to be found in the pleadings, or involved in or consistent with the case thereby made." And since the decision in a suit proceeds upon the findings of issues in that suit, it follows that the issues must in all cases be consistent with the pleadings. Where issues are framed from the pleadings, there is no danger of their being inconsistent with the pleadings (c). It is in framing issues from the other materials indicated in the rule that care should be taken that the issues are not inconsistent with the pleadings (d). Thus if A sues B to set aside a document on the ground that it was not executed by him and that it is a forgery, the Court should not raise an issue as to whether the document was executed under coercion or undue influence. The latter issue pre-supposes that the document was executed, while the plaintiffs case as set up in the plaint is that it was not executed by him at all (e). But the plea that the document in suit was obtained by the defendant by fraud is not inconsistent with the plea that it was obtained by undue influence. Therefore where fraud is pleaded in the plaint, and the plaintiff's counsel alleges at the hearing that the plaintiff was subjected to undue influence, the Court may allow issues both as to fraud and undue influence (f).

Appeal.—No appeal lies from an order refusing to frame an issue asked for by a party to a suit (g).

It was held by the High Court of Madras in one case that an appeal lies under ci. 15 of the Letters Patent from an order made at the settlement of issues fixing a distant date for the hearing of the suit (h). But this decision has been disapproved in later cases (i).

4. [s. 148.] Where the Court is of opinion that the issues cannot be correctly framed without the examination of some person not before the Court or without the inspection of some document not produced in the suit, it may adjourn the framing of the issues to a future day, and may (subject to any law for the time being in force) compel the attendance of any person or the production of any document by the person in whose possession or power it is by summons or other process.

Court may examine witnesses or documents before framing issues.

5. [s. 149.] (1) The Court may at any time before passing a decree amend the issues or frame additional issues on such terms as it thinks fit, and all such amendments or additional issues as may be necessary for determining the matters in controversy between the parties shall be so made or framed.

Power to amend and strike out issues.

(2) The Court may also, at any time before passing a decree, strike out any issues that appear to it to be wrongly framed or introduced.

Sub-rule (1).—The first part of sub-rule (1) leaves it to the discretion of the Court to amend the issues or frame additional issues as appears from the word "may," while the latter part makes it imperative on the Judge to amend the issues and frame additional issues as appears from the word "shall" (j).

(f) Muhammad Ibrahim v. Umatullah Jan (1917) Punj. Rec., no. 90, p. 860. In this case not only no amendment of the pleadings was directed, but one consolidated issue was allowed to be raised comprising pleas both of fraud and undue influence—a highly objectionable procedure indeed.

(j) Shamu Patter v. Abdul Kadir (1912) 35 Mad. 607, 39 I. A. 218.

O. 14,
rr. 5. 6. May amend the issues or frame additional issues.—A Judge may, under the first part of sub-rule (1), amend an issue or frame an additional issue, even if the issue proposed to be added or amended relates to a matter not disclosed by the pleadings. This, however, can only be done under special circumstances, when no injustice would be done to either party (k). It follows from this that a Judge should not frame any additional issue so as to make for either party a case which he had no intention of making for himself (l). Nor should he frame an additional issue so as to convert a suit or defence of one character into a suit or defence of a different and inconsistent character. Thus if A sues B for damages for wrongful occupation of his land, treating B as a trespasser, he should not be allowed to raise an additional issue claiming rent of the land from B, treating him as his tenant (m). But if a suit is brought on a mortgage, and it transpires at the hearing that the witnesses to the mortgage deed were not present at its execution, but had put their names on the document on the acknowledgment by the executant of his signature, it is perfectly competent to the Judge to frame an additional issue as to whether the deed of mortgage was valid under s. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act, though the invalidity of the deed is not set up as a defence in the written statement. Every Court trying civil causes has inherent jurisdiction to take cognizance of questions which cut at the root of the subject-matter of controversy between the parties (n).

At any time before passing the decree.—An additional issue may be raised even after the close of the arguments on the case (o).

6. [S. 150.] Where the parties to a suit are agreed as to the question of fact or of law to be decided between them, they may state the same in the form of an issue, and enter into an agreement in writing that upon the finding of the Court in the affirmative or the negative of such issue,—

Questions of fact or law may by agreement be stated in form of issues.

- (a) a sum of money specified in the agreement or to be ascertained by the Court, or in such manner as the Court may direct, shall be paid by one of the parties to the other of them, or that one of them be declared entitled to some right or subject to some liability specified in the agreement;
- (b) some property specified in the agreement and in dispute in the suit shall be delivered by one of the parties to the other of them, or as that other may direct; or
- (c) one or more of the parties shall do or abstain from doing some particular act specified in the agreement and relating to the matter in dispute.

Court, if satisfied that agreement was executed in good faith, may pronounce judgment.

7. [S. 151.] Where the Court is satisfied, after making such inquiry as it deems proper,—

- (a) that the agreement was duly executed by the parties,
- (b) that they have a substantial interest in the decision of such question as aforesaid, and
- (c) that the same is fit to be tried and decided, it shall proceed to record and try the issue and state its finding or decision thereon in the same manner as if the issue had been framed by the Court; and shall, upon the finding or decision on such issue pronounce judgment according to the terms of the agreement; and, upon the judgment so pronounced, a decree shall follow.

rr. 1-3.

1. [S. 152.] Where at the first hearing of a suit it appears that the parties are not at issue on any question of law or of fact, the Court may at once pronounce judgment.

2. [S. 153.] Where there are more defendants than one, and any one of the defendants is not at issue with the plaintiff on any question of law or of fact, the Court may at once pronounce judgment for or against such defendant and the suit shall proceed only against the other defendants.

Admission of claim by one of several defendants.—A sues B and C upon a promissory note jointly passed by them. B appears and admits the claim, and a decree is passed against him. The decree against B is no bar to the further prosecution of the suit against C (p). See notes to O. 1, r. 8, "Joint liability on a contract," p. 345 above.

Provided that, where the summons has been issued for the settlement of issues only, the parties or their pleaders are present and none of them objects.

(2) Where the finding is not sufficient for the decision, the Court shall postpone the further hearing of the suit, and shall fix a day for the production of such further evidence, or for such further argument as the case requires.

4. [S. 155.] Where the summons has been issued for the final disposal of the suit and either party fails without sufficient cause to produce the evidence on which he relies, the Court may at once pronounce judgment, or may, if it thinks fit, after framing and recording issues, adjourn the suit for the production of such evidence as may be necessary for its decision upon such issues.

Failure to produce evidence.

ORDER XVI.

Summoning and Attendance of Witnesses.

O. 16, r. 1. 1. [S. 159.] At any time after the suit is instituted the parties may obtain, on application to the Court or to such officer as it appoints in this behalf, summonses to persons whose attendance is required either to give evidence or to produce documents.

Summons to attend to give evidence or produce documents.

Difference between the old section and the present rule.—This rule corresponds with s. 159, C. P. C., 1882, except as to the time for application for witness-summons, for which see next paragraph.

O. 16,
rr. 1, 2.

Time for application for witness-summons.—Under s. 159 of the Code of 1882, the application for summonses to witnesses was to be made after the summons was delivered or sent for service on the defendant and before the day fixed in the summons for the appearance of the defendant. Under the present rule, the application may be made at any time after the institution of the suit.

Whether witness-summons can be refused—A party is entitled as of right to summonses to witnesses (g). So long as the application is made after the institution of the suit, the Court is bound to issue the summons. It does not matter that the party had himself originally undertaken to bring his witnesses and has failed to do so (r). Nor does it matter that the application is made at such a late stage of the proceedings that the witnesses cannot be present in Court before the final disposal on the suit (s). The Court may in either of these cases refuse to adjourn the hearing for the attendance of the witnesses, but it has no power to refuse to issue summonses (t). The only case in which the Court has power to refuse to issue summonses is where the application is not made bona fide, as where a decree-holder attaches property belonging to a muth, and, on the head of the muth objecting to the attachment, applies to summon him as his own witness with the sole object of putting pressure upon him, by requiring his personal attendance in Court, to relinquish his claim. In such a case the Court may, in the exercise of its inherent power to prevent the abuse of its own process [s. 151], refuse to issue the summons (u).

Remedy of party when witness-summons refused.—Where a party applies for summonses to witnesses, but the application is refused, he cannot appeal from the order of refusal. He must wait until the suit is disposed of, and if the decree in the suit goes against him, he may appeal from the decree, and set forth the refusal of the lower Court to issue summonses as a ground of objection in the memorandum of appeal (s. 105). If the appellate Court finds that the refusal has injuriously affected the decision of the case, it may set aside the decree, and direct the lower Court to issue the summonses; but if it finds that the refusal has not injuriously affected the decision, it should not interfere with the decree (v) [see s. 99].

Form of summons to witnesses.—See Schedule I, App. B, No. 13.

2. [S. 160.] (1) The party applying for a summons shall, before the summons is granted and within a period to be fixed, pay into Court such a sum of money as appears to the Court to be sufficient to defray the travelling and other expenses of the person summoned in passing to and from the Court in which he is required to attend, and for one day's attendance.

Expenses of witness to be paid into Court on applying for summons.

(2) In determining the amount payable under this rule the Court may, in the case of any person summoned to give evidence as an expert, allow reasonable remuneration for the time occupied both in

(3) Where the Court is subordinate to a High Court, regard shall be had, in fixing the scale of such expenses, to any rules made in that behalf.

Scale of expenses.

Sub-rule (2) is new.

Chartered High Courts.—This rule does not apply to Chartered High Courts in the exercise of their ordinary or extraordinary original civil jurisdiction [O. 49, r. 3, cl. (3)].

Travelling and other expenses.—A witness is entitled under this rule only to travelling expenses and other expenses of a similar nature, but he is not entitled to compensation for loss of time (w). The right to claim travelling expenses is not lost merely because the witness did not apply for them before giving his evidence. The reason is that a witness is entitled to demand his travelling expenses at any time even after he has given his evidence (x). And if a witness is summoned by the plaintiff, he is entitled to claim his travelling expenses from the plaintiff, though he may not be examined by the plaintiff, and is examined by the defendant as his witness (y).

Remedy of witness if travelling expenses not paid.—The only remedy is by an application to the Court that heard the case; no separate suit will lie to recover such expenses (z).

3. [S. 161.] The sum so paid into Court shall be tendered to the person summoned, at the time of serving the summons, if it can be served personally.

Tender of expenses to witness.

4. [S. 162.] (1) Where it appears to the Court or to such officer as it appoints in this behalf that the sum paid into Court is not sufficient to cover such expenses or reasonable remuneration, the Court may direct such further sum to be paid to the person summoned as appears to be necessary on that account, and, in case of default in payment, may order such sum to be levied by attachment and sale of the moveable property of the party obtaining the summons; or the Court may discharge the person summoned without requiring him to give evidence; or may both order such levy and discharge such person as aforesaid.

(2) Where it is necessary to detain the person summoned for a longer period than one day, the Court may, from time to time, order the party at whose instance he was summoned to pay into Court such sum as is sufficient to defray the expenses of his detention for such further period, and, in default of such deposit being made, may order such sum to be levied by attachment and sale of the moveable property of such party; or the Court may discharge the person summoned without requiring him to give evidence; or may both order such levy and discharge such person as aforesaid.

Expenses of witnesses detained more than one day.

5. [S. 163.] Every summons for the attendance of a person to give evidence or to produce a document shall specify the time and place at which he is required to attend, and also whether his attendance is required for the purpose of giving evidence or to produce a document, or for both purposes; and any particular document which the person summoned is called on to produce, shall be described in the summons with reasonable accuracy.

Time, place and purpose of attendance to be specified in summons.

Where hearing is postponed.—When a witness attends Court in pursuance of a summons on the day specified in the summons, but the case is not reached on that day, it is not necessary to issue a fresh summons. He need only be warned that his attendance will be required on the day to which the hearing may be postponed (a).

6. [S. 164.] Any person may be summoned to produce a document, without being summoned to give evidence; and any person summoned merely to produce a document shall be deemed to have complied with the summons if he causes such document to be produced instead of attending personally to produce the same.

Summons to produce document.

7. [S. 165.] Any person present in Court may be required by the Court to give evidence or to produce any document then and there in his possession or power.

O 16, service shall apply in the case of all summonses served under
rr. 8-10. this rule.

Time for serving summons.

10. [S. 168.] (1) Where a person to whom a summons has been issued either to attend to give evidence or to produce a document fails to attend or to produce the document in compliance with such summons, the Court shall, if the certificate of the serving officer has not been verified by affidavit, and may, if it has been so verified, examine the serving-officer on oath, or cause him to be so examined by another Court, touching the service or non-service of the summons.

Procedure where witness fails to comply with summons.

(2) Where the Court sees reason to believe that such evidence or production is material, and that such person has, without lawful excuse, failed to attend or to produce the document in compliance with such summons or has intentionally avoided service, it may issue a proclamation requiring him to attend to give evidence or to produce the document at a time and place to be named therein; and a copy of such proclamation shall be affixed on the outer door or other conspicuous part of the house in which he ordinarily resides.

(3) In lieu of or at the time of issuing such proclamation, or at any time afterwards, the Court may, in its discretion, issue a warrant, either with or without bail, for the arrest of such person, and may make an order for the attachment of his property to such amount as it thinks fit, not exceeding the amount of the costs of attachment and of any fine which may be imposed under rule 12:

Provided that no Court of Small Causes shall make an order for the attachment of immovable property.

Appeal.—An appeal lies from an order under this rule for the attachment of property [O. 43, r. 1, cl. (g)].

If witness appears attachment may be withdrawn.
